Other plays, like Created Equal, Injunction Granted, and Power, are all definitely propaganda plays. Not only that, but many of these Federal theater project plays are just as communistic as any play put on by the National Theater in the Soviet Union.

I want to say a word about another one of the W. P. A. arts projects, particularly the one in New York City, and that is the writers' project. A witness who came before the Dies committee stated that of the 15 supervisors on the writers' project in New York City, 13 were members of the Communist Party, and that of all the employees on that project, 80 percent of them were members of the Workers' Alliance and that you could not get on the project today unless you became a members of the Workers' Alliance; and it did not make any difference whether you were a veteran or how worthy you were or in what sort of straitened circumstances you were, you just could not get on the writers' project in New York City today unless you joined the Workers' Alliance.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. This witness also said that of the 500 workers, so-called, on that project they had published in 31/2 years, 5 books. Five hundred workers published 5 books and 2 of the 5 were gotten out since the Dies committee started its meetings, and of the 500 workers 1 man was responsible for 3 of the books and the 499 other workers were responsible for 2. The reason for this was the inefficiency of the project, the constant bickering, the constant communistic meetings, the constant protest meetings, and it was not until the Dies committee, which has been investigating un-American activities, started that the administrators of the project were able to make anything at all out of the chaos that had

I may say one more thing about these projects, and this has reference to a statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Wigglesworth], whose suggestion I believe it was to have an investigation of the W. P. A. If such an investigation is held, I hope the investigators will develop some testimony that was brought out in the Dies committee meetings by one of the witnesses, Mr. Revzin, who was asked this question:

Are you prepared to testify at a later date, before any other committee which may be appointed, a committee other than this particular one, as to the inefficiency, extravagance, and corruption in connection with the Federal theater project in New York City?

Mr. Revzin, who was an employee of the Federal theater project, answered, "Yes, sir."

Contrast this evidence of extravagance, corruption, and, as I have earlier pointed out, the existence of communism and other forms of radicalism on many of the Works Progress Administration projects with the unfortunate situation existing in New Jersey and perhaps most of the other States in the Union, whereby poor unfortunate people over 65 years of age are denied any assistance from the Works Progress Administration. In the month of November of 1938 the Works Progress Administration in New Jersey issued an order that all people over 65 years of age and all other people who might be eligible under the Federal law for social security benefits, including, of course, widows who have minor children, should be denied further assistance from the W. P. A. In New Jersey it means that instead of a family receiving in the neighborhood of $60 a month, the W. P. A. wage, to live on, it must from now on be satisfied with something in the neighborhood of $25 a month. Imagine—a whole family in many cases being forced to subsist on a bare pittance of $25 a month.

This, to me, is brutal, cruel, and disgraceful, especially so when we take into consideration these poor people had their W. P. A. benefits taken away from them almost without notice.

I hope that instead of appropriating millions of dollars to care for many of the un-American activities on the Federal theater project and the Federal writers' project, and instead of appropriating millions of dollars with which to carry on the political activities of the W. P. A., we will divert these millions to the care of our worthy older people and to our worthy unemployed widows with minor children, who have been so abruptly thrown out in the cold.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I doubt, after all, whether a discussion limited to the question of whether or not we shall or shall not vote money for relief is the important issue here today. Relief money in some adequate amount must be appropriated. To my mind it is clear that we should on this occasion, however, reexamine the affairs of government to the end that we determine, if we can, why, after 6 years of governmental administration under the New Deal, we still find it necessary to come here in the Congress of the United States and appropriate ever-increasing millions to take care of millions yet unemployed.

We are all for the relief that is necessary to be granted to the people who are out of employment. This almost goes without saying, but there are some of us who are very much interested in determining just what the future will be and just what we may expect. Personally, I have never quarreled with the W. P. A. as such. I have always said that if my Government and my society could not offer me anything better than a Government job under W. P. A. I would take it, but I would do so looking to the dawning of a brighter day when I could again go back into real industry and legitimate employment and make the wages and salary that only that kind of industry or business can pay.

Now, to go back a little, we had an election in 1932. The people of this country held the Government then in power responsible for the economic condition of the country and there were certain things said in that campaign. I realize lots of people do not like to have them referred to, but do you recall that in the course of that campaign it was said that excessive governmental spending is a brake on any return to normal business activity, and again it was said, "I consider reduction in Federal spending as the greatest contribution that government can make to business." It was recognized then that the problem before the country was to find jobs for the people who wanted to work, and on that platform and on such promises a new government came into power. They had not been in power 30 days until those promises were kicked out of the White House window and the Government was embarked, not on a policy of Government economy to provide jobs, as had been promised, but on a policy of spending to promote recovery. In my opinion, the statements made in the 1932 campaign were statements of fact. The tragedy is that they were not followed in

I have always held and still hold that excessive Government spending is a brake on any return to normal business

In determining the amount of money that should at this time be made available for relief, I do not have the confidence in the estimates sent down here that I would have if the people directly in charge of the Government and its program would cut loose from this foolish idea that we can spend ourselves prosperous. They should in all sincerity say to us, "We want this money to take care of relief, and we are no longer trying to prime the pump." We tried pump priming for 6 years, and it has not done the job. Witness the accomplishments. I say if you measure the New Deal on the basis of accomplishment, it has been an utter and dismal failure. It has not given jobs to the people out of employment. It has not given good prices to the farmers. And it is not a satisfactory answer to continually hark back to 1932.

We came along to 1936. We had an election that year. The new dealers stuck out their chests and said, "We are better off, and we planned it that way," and the people of the country apparently believed them and voted that way. Then following that election, the people in charge of our Government thought that they had some sort of a mandate from the people of America to make the country over. So we started early in January in 1937 to make the country over.

The people in charge of the New Deal failed to recognize that the emergency was over, that the country was beginning to get well naturally and normally, that jobs were being provided for people by the efforts of the people themselves. I say the vital error was made when the people in charge of our Government failed to recognize that the emergency was over. Disregarding the real interests of the country, they went ahead joyfully on this scheme to make the country over, to pack the Court, to destroy the balance of constitutional government. We argued and fought around here all through the 1937 first session. Then we were called back in special session. The country had hit the toboggan. We dropped faster into this Roosevelt depression than we have into any other depression. And were we called back here to do anything to stem the tide of an on-rushing depression? Oh, no; we were called back here to pass a reorganization bill that nobody seemed to want, to establish seven little T. V. A.'s over the country, and to do a lot more things calculated to increase and heighten the depression. You can find in that the reason for the fact that we are here today, not to go on to a sound and permanent recovery but to find, after years of attempted pump priming, that the new dealers have nothing better to offer the people of our land, the unemployed, than subsistence jobs on made-work projects. On November 8 of last year the people rightfully held the Government responsible for economic depression.

In my opinion we are in an intolerable situation. We cannot go on in this country with half of our working people on the Government pay rolls and projects at starvation wages, and then have the other half of the people on the rolls of industry and agriculture drawing the wages that only that kind of industry and agriculture can pay. We have to go one way, or we have to go the other way.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I think the gentleman from Indiana probably has overlooked one accomplishment of the present administration and that is that as a result of the policies of the administration the poor of this country have been fixed or frozen in their unfortunate position.

Mr. GIFFORD. And, Mr. Chairman, on this matter of spending ourselves into prosperity, has the gentleman ever heard about the advice of drinking yourself sober?

Mr. HALLECK. I have been told that that is poor advice. [Laughter.] No, Mr. Chairman, the answer does not lie in the direction of more Federal spending to promote recovery. Real and permanent recovery will come from the finding of real jobs, and as one way of getting started in that direction, why not use some economy in the spending of relief money.

There has been a lot of talk about relief in politics. Do you know the people who squawked the loudest about politics in relief? I heard plenty of real Democrats in the Congress, on whom the wrath of the New Deal was turned in the primaries, and I heard those people cry out louder and longer about politics in relief than any Republican. I heard Members of this House who were seeking to be nominated to the Senate of the United States come back to the House, to the cloak rooms and to the floor, and say that in their States white collar W. P. A. supervisors had been put on the pay rolls for no other purpose than to electioneer against them and to bring about the nomination of the persons favored by the New Deal.

The only permanent and lasting solution of this problem of relief is to find more work opportunities for the people who want to work.

I have no sympathy or patience with those people who say that we cannot put the people of America back to work. If you will look in the poorer homes of your own districts you will see there a consumer demand, crying to be filled, sufficient to keep every factory going night and day for years before it can be filled. Then why say with Mr. Hopkins, "We are perpetually to have an army of millions of unemployed people with no job other than W. P. A."? I hold for our unemployed better promise in the future of this land. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Healey].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the membership of this body is desirous of approaching this matter of providing for the unemployed of this country, in a non-partisan, nonpolitical, and nonsectional spirit. My Republican colleagues from Massachusetts did not campaign last fall on a platform pledging indiscriminate slashing of

W. P. A. appropriations. On the contrary, many of my colleagues on this side of the aisle campaigned on very liberal platforms during the last election. In many instances they held out promises to their constituents that if elected they would lend their support to appropriations sufficient to provide for the needy unemployed.

It seems to me that this whole question resolves itself into the issue of whether we are going to make adequate provision for the unemployed on the scientific basis of known factual information submitted by Colonel Harrington, Administrator of the W. P. A., and contained in the hearings, or whether you are going to submit to the arbitrary slash recommended by the committee without regard for the actual needs demonstrated by the report of the hearings.

I heard the very able argument of the chairman of the subcommittee this morning, a man for whom I have the greatest admiration. I heard him make the very optimistic statement, which is borne out also by Colonel Harrington, that it is estimated that some 1,500,000 persons will be absorbed by private employment within the next few months. We all hope that is so and hope that the number will really exceed the estimate.

But I call to the attention of the able chairman of this committee the statement contained in Colonel Harrington's testimony on page 35 of the hearings, that he made allowance for this prospect in arriving at his estimate of $875,-000.000 as necessary requirements until July 1. I call attention also to the statement of Colonel Harrington in reply to a member of the committee which is contained in the hearings on page 101 that there are 750,000 persons already certified as eligible for W. P. A. employment, who have been unable to get on the rolls of the Works Progress Administration. Therefore, these 750,000 persons who have full W. P. A. eligibility must be considered in addition to the more than 3,000,000 persons already on W. P. A. rolls in calculating the full needs of W. P. A.

The problem we must face is one that cannot wait. As I understand it, within a few weeks all of the funds that were made available for this agency during the last session of Congress will be exhausted. One week's unemployment to a family of persons depending upon W. P. A. employment in my district means suffering; means privation; means that they go without food and fuel, and possible eviction for failure to pay rent. It is their immediate and pressing concern. They cannot wait for prolonged congressional investigations. I do not believe that there are persons in this body who will be persuaded by political reasons to forget the needs of the unemployed. I believe most of us are of the opinion that adequate provision should be made to prevent serious suffering and privation in this country.

Now, I refer to the statement beginning on page 149 of the hearings made by Mayor LaGuardia, who appeared before the committee, not only representing the great metropolis of New York City but also as the delegated representative of the United States Conference of Mayors, composed of mayors of cities of over 50,000 population. The factual reports from major cities of the United States with reference to W. P. A. needs are incorporated in his statement. He states that the mayors are absolutely unanimous in the opinion that even the $875,000,000 requested by W. P. A. authorities is insufficient to take care of the needs of the unemployed of this country. They estimate that $915,000,000 will be required. Who are more conversant with this situation than the mayors of our country, the men who, day in and day out in their several communities, are confronted with the relief problem? Now, if we are going to assume the obligation of providing employment for the unemployed employables of this country, and not throw the burden upon the States and their subdivisions, it seems to me that we should vote for the sum of $875,000,000 recommended by the W. P. A. authorities as being the least amount sufficient to provide for the requirements of this agency for the balance of the fiscal year.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I am sorry, I have not time to yield. From this same source we have the statement that if the appropriation is cut to $725,000,000, as recommended by the committee, one-third of the present rolls, or 1,151,000, will lose their jobs on the W. P. A. It is estimated that if only $725,000,000 is appropriated the cuts in W. P. A. rolls in some of the States will run as follows: In Pennsylvania, 97,000; in Ohio, 97,600; in Texas, 42,000; in New Jersey, 38,500.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. In Missouri, 40,800; in Michigan, 54,400; Illinois, 90,000; California, 44,000; Massachusetts, 47,800; Wisconsin, 29,500; while in the city of New York alone 66,700 will have to be taken from the rolls; and in the city of Chicago 43,500.

Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, admitted in his remarks that some 500,000 persons admittedly eligible for this relief will have to be taken from the rolls of the W. P. A. if we adopt the resolution presented by the committee appropriating $725,000,000. Which 500,000 are you going to drop? Where are you going to start cutting? How can this be accomplished without immediate hardship? The figures submitted by Colonel Harrington have not been disputed. His testimony remains uncontroverted up to the present time. These unemployed people are depending upon Congress to provide some means of sustenance for themselves and their families.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that we shall be actuated in dealing with this matter only by the sincere desire to provide for the needy unemployed without partisan or political bias. [Applause.1

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, if you really have disposition to cut appropriations for relief at this time. I suggest that this is not the time to do it, not in the winter months. I come from the center of the Dust Bowl, where 80 percent of all the farmers in my county are on relief. Some of these families are now receiving $10 to $15 a month per family, and it is impossible to properly heat a building in that section of the country during the winter months for less than $8 per month.

If you are going to cut relief below the plan suggested by the President, you surely do not want to do it at this time, because if you do you will have another 1,000 farmers on the highway as you have in Missouri today, driven out because the owners of the land do not want to divide the payments received from the Government-chase them out and hire men by the day so they can keep all the checks. In my State mortgage foreclosures are proceeding more rapidly now than ever. What are you going to do with this great body of people who through no fault of their own find themselves out on the highways in the winter months? Are you going to sit here and say you will cut the appropriations?

We have to pay for our independence in this body. I have had to pay for my independence. I have not served on committees in this House, and I do not presume I shall, because I have some independence; but there is no organization in this House which can take that independence away. Do your worst with your committees, so far as I am concerned, but I am not going to give up the theories I believe are right; and whenever the President of the United States is right I am willing to subscribe to it. He is right in the amount that he asks for in this appropriation bill.

If you want to regulate relief so there will be no politics in it—there is not very much politics in relief in my State because both Senators and both Congressmen belong to the Republican Party and relief has been in the hands of the Democrats. They have handled it all right in our State, but if you believe that there should be no politics in the organization at all, why do you not distribute these funds to the States, send the money to the States and let them handle it? [Applause.] Congress can do this. I have advocated this plan of relief distribution ever since I have been in Congress.

For God's sake, do not get so fast about doing this job that you forget to lay down the regulations yourselves and not leave that to some bureau. It is not the fault of the bureau; it is the fault of us who sit here and could do the job ourselves if we would. Can we not write a set of rules under which relief shall be distributed? It is our plain duty to give these directions; but having failed to do it, we should not be heard to complain of the rules laid down by a bureau.

As long as private business cannot employ these people, who can object to the Government's employment program?

The gentleman from Virginia, for whom I have a great deal of admiration, said that we shall have to borrow every dollar of the money we appropriate for this purpose. I have never heard such a doctrine in all my life, but I am convinced that he is speaking the sentiments of this House. I do not believe this House has nerve enough to write into this bill, or any other bill, the direction that we shall issue money, Treasury notes that do not draw interest, to pay for the relief administration—I do not believe you have—but some day that will be done right here in this body. What a crime to permit anyone to reap a harvest of interest off of relief money!

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin. Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have over 188,000,000,000 of German marks, printing press marks. I will give them to you if you want to pass them around, since you are advocating that kind of money in America.

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; and that is just exactly like our money will be when this Government goes down as the German Government did. When that happens neither currency or bonds will have any value.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And we are pretty close to it now. These 188,000,000,000 German marks would not buy a schnit of German beer in Germany during the inflation.

Mr. BURDICK. You, of course, know that when any government fails, its money always becomes worthless.

The gentleman from Virginia also said that P. W. A. will take up the slack. Replying to that, I would point out that P. W. A. operations require the matching of Federal funds with State funds. In my section of the country we have not had a paying crop for 9 years. Consequently, the P. W. A. does not apply to our situation. I say to you that if you do not want thousands of farmers and workers along the high-ways of this Nation headed for the Capitol at Washington, you had better get busy and appropriate money to give them the bare necessities of life.

Remember that the strongest law recognized by the whole human race is the law of self-preservation. If we deny our citizens the right to live, when the situation is due to nothing they have done, can we expect them to peacefully fold their arms and expire? No, Mr. Chairman; they will not—their country; they are in want, their children are in want, and they will sustain themselves by violent action if necessary. This House fails to understand how critical the situation is with millions of our citizens. You do not want communism, neither do I; but if you persist in your intention to cut people off of the food that sustains life, you will make more Communists in America than all the organizers of communist in this country. Remember that communism is a symptom of a diseased government. Communism has never grown or developed in any country where the government guarantees to its people the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Let people live, let them work, let them take care of their families under the American standard of living, and you can dismiss the danger of communism.

We all recognize that every man and every woman in this country has a right to live. Does anybody dispute that? If through no fault of their own they are unable to take care of themselves, what is the duty of this Government? I would like to have somebody answer this question.

Just merely because the President of the United States suggests this money is no reason in the world why I should vote against it. This time the President is right. Maybe something will come up here in the House, and we will think the President is not right. I will be just as free to vote against him then as I am free to vote with him on this proposition. To inject any political consequences into a question of this kind, when we have millions out of jobs, millions hungry and cold, and we sitting here where we are warm and refusing to appropriate that money, is more than I believe this Congress will ever do. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.
Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, any observer who has listened to the debate today has concluded that there has been more politics played here today with relief, and particularly with the unemployed who are dependent on W. P. A., than at anytime or anywhere else in the country. The reactionary forces in this House have devoted a great portion of the debate, not to the needs of the unemployed, not to the welfare of our country, but to petty politics, to political sniping, to an attempt to discredit the unemployed and their organization and have raised a huge smoke screen to hide the real issue; that is, the gross inadequacy of the $725,000,000 suggested by the Appropriations Committee in the resolution under consideration.

It seems to me the proposition which we have before us is a proposition which deals with the welfare of our country; it deals with the welfare of the unemployed of our country; and whether you be Republicans or Democrats, no matter to what party you may belong, there is one fundamental principle which we cannot fail to recognize and that is that the civilization of the American people is dependent on the welfare of the unemployed millions of Americans. Tear down and destroy the welfare of the unemployed in America and you are aiming a most serious blow to the fundamental American institutions which we all revere.

Let us get down and analyze the effect of the reduced appropriations recommended. It is admitted on page 4 of the committee's report that 300,000 W. P. A. workers will be laid off if the President's request of $875,000,000 were granted. The committee aggravates this situation by recommending only $725,000,000. Let us see. How many workers on W. P. A. are going to be dismissed by cutting the appropriation to $725,000,000? The committee report estimates about a million will be fired as a result of their reduced appropriation. I am not ready to agree with this report except for the purpose of argument and debate. I prefer to accept the report of the United States Conference of Mayors, which I believe is much more scientific and less speculative than the report submitted by the committee. The report submitted by the United States Conference of Mayors is based on the fact there are, as of January 1, 1939, 3,080,300 workers on W. P. A. If the reduced amount of $725,000,000 reported by the committee is not substantially raised, the number of W. P. A. workers will be reduced to 1,930,000 by June 30. This means an actual lay-off of 1,151,-300 needy W. P. A. workers who are now employed on the useful W. P. A. projects throughout the United States.

You reactionaries today make unjustified and unwarranted attacks on the Workers' Alliance; you raise the smoke screen of relief in politics; you raise the issue of maladministration, but why do you not tell what you propose to do with 1,151,300 workers whom you deprive of even the means of a bare existence? That is the real issue before you in this Committee. That is the proposition, and I challenge you to answer it. Are you ready in private industry to absorb the 1,151,300 W. P. A. workers who are going to be removed from the W. P. A. rolls as a result of this cut? How about the additional 500,000 certified for W. P. A. and not put on?

Mr. Chairman, we have a great deal of hope and optimism, but when you say that private industry is going to absorb them, I think it is a great deal of wishful thinking. We all agree there is an upturn in business, but the best way to destroy this improvement is by cutting W. P. A. appropriations. Any retrenchment of W. P. A. spending at this time or any cutting of public spending which gives the public purchasing power is bound to bring about a reverse in this upturn in business.

We need not speculate. Let us rely on experience. Let us see what has happened in the recent past when we cut W. P. A. at a time when business was improving.

The following is what we spent monthly on W. P. A. for the year 1936:

January	$168,000,000
February	164, 000, 000
March	192,000,000
April	183, 000, 000
May	174, 000, 000
June	169, 000, 000
July	163, 000, 000
August	157, 000, 000
September
October	181,000,000
November	168, 000, 000
December	185, 000, 000

At the beginning of 1937, with signs of improvement all over the country and business conditions in general, with a rise in sales and production, we cut W. P. A., and we spent as follows:

January	$148,000,000
February	134, 000, 000
March	166, 000, 000
April	144, 000, 000
May	138, 000, 000
June	148, 000, 000
July	116, 000, 000
August	102, 000, 000
September	100, 000, 000
October	100, 000, 000
November	100, 000, 000
December	112, 000, 000

In 1938, realizing our mistake and in the midst of the recession, we commenced to increase our W. P. A. monthly expenditures as follows:

Total 1, 509, 000, 000

January	$107,000,000
February	109, 000, 000
March	152, 000, 000
April	147, 000, 000
May	158, 000, 000
June	175, 000, 000

You will note, therefore, that the first big cut came at the beginning of 1937. The second cut came in July of the same year.

The average monthly expenditure, adjusted for seasonal variations in 1936, was $172,000,000. The average monthly expenditure, adjusted for seasonal variations, the first half of 1937 was $146,000,000. The average monthly expenditure, adjusted for seasonal variations, the second half of 1937 was $105,000,000. So, at the very beginning of 1937, which marked the beginning of the recession, collection of taxes for old-age benefits began, and this withdrew another $500,000,000 for the year out of consumption. Business withstood the shock of this combined drain on consumption for several months, largely by piling up inventories, also because of foreign rearmament demands, and because reduction in consumer buying power does not make itself felt immediately on orders received by producers.

Let us see what happened during the corresponding period on production. The Federal Reserve index of production for 1937 shows as follows:

January	114
February	116
March	118
April	118
May June
July	114
August	117
September
October	102
November	88
December	84

Department-store figures followed the same general course as production:

January	1936	81
January	1937	93
April 193'	7	93
		94

The Department of Commerce Survey of Current Business of March 1938 showed also a sharp decline in index of incomes of 100 in 1929 down to 55 in 1933, up to 89 in 1937, and from there on went into a nosedive until W. P. A. expenditures were increased.

We find the following happened to industrial production in 1938:

January
February
March April
May June
July August
September

This rise in production followed along with the rise in W. P. A. spending. Consequently experience has taught us that by cutting down W. P. A. appropriations we necessarily cut down W. P. A. spending, and in so doing we are cutting down the purchasing power of the American people. The moment we cut down the purchasing power of the American people, particularly at a time when there is any sign of business recovery, that business upturn goes immediately into a downward spin.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that this experience should teach us that any cut in W. P. A. will not help business; it will not continue recovery; it will not help private industry; but, to the contrary, private industry will be hurt, recovery set back, and business will be dealt a staggering blow. Hence, instead of absorbing the discharged W. P. A. workers, more American wage earners and salaried workers will be thrown out of private industry. The removal of W. P. A. workers from W. P. A. must be a natural process. W. P. A. workers want jobs in private industry. As conditions improve, these workers will go into private industry as private industry offers jobs. This is the only process which will reduce the number on W. P. A.; improve business and cut down unemployment. Precipitous cuts mean only less jobs in private industry. Any cut in W. P. A. appropriations at this time is going to bring about another terrific recession in this country. I know the reactionaries in this country want a recession, because a recession is the best guaranty of electing reactionaries to public office and electing a reactionary to the White House. A recession at this time or within the next few months is the best guaranty of bringing about reactionary administrations throughout the country; and I say to the Members of this House who believe themselves to be liberal, who believe themselves to be progressive, that the best guaranty against the election of reactionaries to office is to keep up this business upturn, and the best guaranty toward keeping up that business improvement, as taught us through experience, is to keep up W. P. A. appropriations in order to take care of the needs of the unemployed and at the same time protect the purchasing power of the American people which is so necessary and so vital to maintain a sustained improvement in business conditions in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert as part of my remarks the statement released by the United States Conference of Mayors.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. South). The gentleman will have to get that permission in the House.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Very well; I shall do that.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS, WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1939.

TOTAL OF 1,151,300 W. P. A. WORKERS TO LOSE JOBS BY JUNE 30 UNDER HOUSE APPROPRIATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE AMOUNT OF SEVEN HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIVE MILLIONS

One million one hundred and fifty-one thousand three hundred needy W. P. A. workers must be discharged from their jobs by June 30 if the action of the House Appropriations Subcommittee in recommending a W. P. A. deficiency appropriation of only 725 millions is sustained by the Congress.

W. P. A. employment on January 1, 1939, totaled 3,081,300 workers. Under the reduced amount of 725 millions reported by the subcommittee, employment will have to go down to 1,930,000 by

This involves the discharge of 1,151,300 W. P. A. workers. The figures for each State, tabulated by the United States Conference of Mayors for the first time since action by the House Appropriations Subcommittee, are attached herewith. They range from a reduction of 1,000 W. P. A. workers in Nevada to a reduction of 97,700 in Penn-

Subcommittee, are attached herewith. They range from a reduction of 1,000 W.P. A. workers in Nevada to a reduction of 97,700 in Pennsylvania and 97,600 in Ohio. Texas must discharge 42,000 W.P. A. workers, New Jersey 38,500 workers, Missouri 40,800 workers, Michigan 54,400 workers, Illinois 90,000 workers, California 44,300 workers, Massachusetts 47,800 workers. Wisconsin 29,500 workers, Oklahoma 26,000 workers, and Virginia 11,800 workers.

A second tabulation from 24 major cities shows that reductions of over 33 percent of present W.P. A. employment quotas will be necessary by June 30. These figures show a range in the necessity for discharge of 1,800 W.P. A. workers in Baltimore by June 30 up to 43,500 in Chicago, 21,400 in Detroit, 66,700 in New York City, 13,200 in Los Angeles, 27,200 in Cleveland, 11,200 in Boston, 9,700 in Milwaukee, 12,600 in St. Louis, and 8,900 in Philadelphia.

The figures tabulated are based upon a gradual reduction beginning February in accordance with the limited amount recommended, namely, $725,000,000. If, however, the W.P.A. maintains its present quota of 3,000,000 workers during the months of February and March it will then be necessary to get down to a quota of 1,375,000 workers by June 30. This would mean that, between April 1 and June 30, 1,625,000 needy W.P.A. workers would have to be discharged.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. This statement shows exactly what is going to happen in the various States as far as the W. P. A. workers are concerned. The statement shows reductions to a great extreme in the number of people employed on W. P. A. in the various States and cities. Now, let me ask, Who favors this condition and who is ready to assume the responsibility?

Let me ask, Is there any Member of this House who went before the people of his district and said, "If I am elected I am going to cut the appropriation for W. P. A."? Well, there are mighty few. There certainly are not as many as those who are going to vote to cut the appropriation for W. P. A. Everybody is a pal of the unemployed and the W. P. A. worker in October before election. I wish that the W. P. A. worker would only see what his October pals are doing to him here in January. I say there would have been mighty few Members elected here if they had gone before the people in their districts and said they were going to cut W. P. A. if they were elected to the Congress of the United States. The mandate of the people was against any cutting of W. P. A. and you know it. Just because there may be one or two isolated instances of that character does not mean that the mandate of the American people was not to continue W. P. A., because the American people are interested in recovery and want to continue it by making it possible for anyone who cannot obtain a job in private industry to be able to get a W. P. A. job at a decent wage.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The attacks made here on W. P. A workers is wrong and un-American. The unemployed of this country do not want W. P. A. jobs and they do not want relief. The unemployed of this country want to work. They want to go back into private industry. However, as long as private industry fails to give the unemployed of this country an opportunity to work, then I say it is the solemn duty of the Government of the United States to give work to the unemployed Americans and to give them work at a decent wage, enough to support them in an American fashion during their period of unemployment. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California IMr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this point to insert in the RECORD two telegrams which I received from the mayor of San Francisco with reference to the pending bill. The first telegram reads as follows:

Heartily urge your strong support of the W. P. A. deficiency appropriation bill recommended by the President for balance of fiscal year. On behalf of San Francisco I endorse without qualification Mayor LaGuardia's presentation of urgent need for appropriation. Wired details of San Francisco's relief situation appropriation. Wired details of San Francisco's rener situation to Conference of Mayors last week and most emphatically urge your support of conference efforts to have the bill approved.

ANGELO J. ROSSI,

Mayor of San Francisco.

Upon receipt of this telegram I asked for more definite information with reference to relief conditions in San Francisco and received the following telegram:

In re wire received this p. m. Public Welfare Department Agency increase for December 1938 compared with December 1937: Indigent relief 7 percent, old-age aid 23 percent, blind aid 21 percent, half-orphan aid 14 percent, average 18 percent. Funds expended for public assistance exclusive of hospitalization and institutional care as for December 1, 1938—kinds of aid: Needy aged, needy blind, needy children, children in State school, county indigents. Sponsors' contribution to W. P. A. projects for month of November, $662,791.13. Number of persons involved, 55,464. State relief administration caring for 15,016, W. P. A., 20,284. You can see, therefore, that although we have a total 20,284. You can see, therefore, that although we have a total of 35,390 persons involved on S. R. A. and W. P. A., they are employable. Remainder of the 55,464 persons are unemployable unemployed. The situation in San Francisco has arrived at the point where we can no longer increase our output. It is imperative that the President's program be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with the recommendations of the President and the mayors of the principal cities of this country and will vote for the larger amount.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WELCH. For a brief question.

Mr. SIROVICH. If the recommendation of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations is adopted, there will be $150,000,000 less available for relief. The statement has been made on the floor of the House that such a cut would be instrumental in dropping from the relief rolls 1,100,000 unemployed, besides affecting adversely 750,000 who are qualified to go on relief.

The allegation has been made today by many Members of the House that politics has crept into relief. Does the distinguished gentleman, who has been a strong supporter of the working classes and one of the foremost champions of the underprivileged of our country, feel that those who are in penury, hunger, and want should be penalized for the indiscretion of others?

Mr. WELCH. In answer to my distinguished friend from New York, I would like to say that human needs and human misery should transcend party partisanship.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, to those of us of the minority who have on several occasions in years past brought out and dusted off the Democratic platform of 1932, and some of the earlier speeches of the President of the United States, which we believe to contain many sound fundamentals of government, it has been most gratifying to note today that there has been an apparent change in the disposition of some of the majority, that after 6 years of spending the public money without regard to the source from which it was coming the majority is beginning to realize that after all there is another class of people in this country who must be considered. For every 1 of the people who are dependent upon the public for support, there are 40 or 50 people who are supporting themselves, people who have had jobs and who have, through a voluntary self-denial, saved a little money and have been able to get along. Therefore, it is especially gratifying to see that the majority is beginning to realize that those 40 or 50 people must be considered along with that other 1.

It has been said by the former Administrator of the Works Progress Administration that unemployment will always be with us. He is alleged to have said also that this Government will continue to spend and spend and spend and to tax and tax and tax. Whether these words were ever spoken by Mr. Hopkins is of small moment. Certain it is that it is an expression of the philosophy and practices of the New Deal.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COLE of New York. Please, no.

It is likewise encouraging to realize that the majority is beginning to understand that no government can continue to spend and spend and spend any more than it can continue to tax and tax and tax. There are definite limits beyond which we cannot go in either case. However that may be, it is apparent that the problem of relief is one which is going to face this country longer than from now until June, even further into the future than the next few years.

If that is so, or if it is true that unemployment is permanent, and that our relief system is to be permanent, then it is time for us to review the whole system of administration of relief in order that any abuses may be corrected, and we should view that problem realistically. Save in one instance, this afternoon I have heard but one person make the claim that there has been no political misuse of relief funds. I dare say each one of us will confess it has been abused, and probably most of us would be ready to see that these abuses are corrected.

The minority is ready to go along and take care of the unemployed people who are in need. We do, however, disapprove of the system under which it has been administered. In the past we have taken the position that the administration of relief can be done more economically if done locally. A few days past the President said there would be as much politics in relief if administered locally as there would be if administered as at present.

I can agree with him in part. I agree that there will be politics in relief, although I do disagree that it will be on the wholesale scale that it is at present if it were in the hands of the localities. Human nature knows no political parties, and neither of them is a paragon of virtue. So long as two elements are lacking in the administration of relief, whether by the Nation or the State, there will be political abuse. One way to correct it is by making use of public funds for political purposes a criminal offense. This will tend to stop it, but another far more persuasive and effective instrument would be to require the localities themselves to foot a part of the bill. If any locality realizes that the money that is being spent, or a part of it at least, is coming from their own pocketbooks, they are going to be very sure that the person who gets the money actually needs it. They will see to it that there is no waste and no extravagance.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Likewise, they are going to be sure that any person is not held off of the relief rolls irrespective of his political affiliations if he is in actual need of help. The amount of the local contribution is unimportant so long as it is enough to make them realize that it is their money that is being spent.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

vield?

Mr. COLE of New York. No; I am sorry.

A proposal will be made by the minority, which, to my mind, will test the good faith of the majority. It is proposed by the minority as evidence of their good faith. We do not quibble over the amount of money involved. If the money is actually needed and will actually go into the pockets of those who are in need, we are for it. Our whole dispute is with the system through which it has been distributed. The responsibility for continuance of the W. P. A. under its present color and complexion rests solely with the majority.

If you are willing to accept our readiness to cooperate with you to clear up the whole situation and devise a system of administration that will be fair and just and honest to the taxpayer and those in need, then may we not accept the amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] that the whole problem may be studied and the evils remedied? If you refuse it and are unwilling to have the whole subject of relief scrutinized by this committee of Congress it must be taken by the country and your own consciences as an expression of your approval of the corruption, misuse, abuse, exploitation of the distressed and suffering of the country as has been characteristic of the W. P. A. in the years gone by.

The answer, of course, rests with you as to whether or not you want to continue the present system and thereby put your approval upon the continuance of such procedure and extravagance. For my own part I have consistently voted against every relief bill for that very reason. I am unwilling, by my affirmative vote, to give any semblance of sanction of the unwholesome mess of the present W. P. A. I am unwilling to have a single dollar spent for the very laudable purpose of relief knowing full well it is being diverted for purposes never intended, and unless some correction is made, I can see no other course for me than to act as I have in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, when I asked the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Cole] to yield, I wanted to call his attention to one of his statements. He is an honorable gentleman, and coming from him in particular I thought the inference of guilt with respect to the statement alleged to have been made by Mr. Hopkins was entirely unwarranted. We all know the story of that statement, and I do not think it becomes honorable gentlemen or honorable persons of either sex to try to send out to the public, by inference, that a man is guilty when his accuser is unseen and when the man himself has denied and denied and denied. I would take the same position if a similar accusation were made against anyone.

I value my character and reputation, and I respect the desire of all other persons to value and retain their character and reputation. The Dies committee, for example, has done a great job up to a certain extent, but the Dies committee made the unintentional mistake of permitting some witnesses to attack and to attempt to impair the character and reputation of some fine persons. I hope, as I am confident, that a future investigation will be careful in this respect. [Applause.] To hear Members on this floor try to send out by inference and innuendo the fact that Mr. Hopkins is guilty of an accusation made by some unseen person and admitted to have been made in a moment of relaxation, which the gentleman has denied repeatedly, seems to me to be unwarranted.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. COLE of New York. Of course, had I known the nature of the gentleman's interrogation I would have gladly yielded. The gentleman will recall I said "this alleged statement" which Mr. Hopkins made, and I completed the statement by saying "whether he made it or not is inconsequential."

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman had made the direct statement, it would have been more insignificant than trying to subtly convey by inference and inuendo that Mr. Hopkins was guilty of having made the statement. If the gentleman frankly apologized for any effort or intent on his part to convey by inuendo any such thought, the gentleman's position would be more sound than trying to strengthen the erroneous impression that he attempted to convey.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the membership of the House that without regard to the truth of the assertion as to what Mr. Hopkins said, there has been much in the conduct of Mr. Hopkins to indicate that his idea and the idea of many more operating with him has been to spend and spend and spend and tax and tax and tax and elect and elect and elect. What he said may not be as important as what he has done. Sometimes actions speak louder than words.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am proud that my first appearance on this spot should be in behalf of two of the groups of this country which have, I hope, been made unintentionally to suffer through maladministration of the W. P. A. set-up. I refer to those millions who, through no fault of their own, are needy, unemployed, and want to work; and the other group, the plain, garden variety of taxpayer.

It so happens that I come from the county of Erie, New York State, with a population of over 800,000, of which over 580,000 are residents of the city of Buffalo. This population compares with the last reported population of the following States:

About as great as Maine and greater than any one of the following-mentioned States, and greater than some combinations of two or three of these States: Utah, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Delaware, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, New Mexico, Arizona.

My only purpose in bringing out these figures is to show some of the problems confronted in Erie County from a population concentration point of view.

I feel that all of us recognize the present necessity of appropriating funds for a period for W. P. A. use. Whether this necessity has arisen because of misuse of public funds is a burning question that should be determined, and soon, to the end that remedial action be taken to eliminate the possibility of a recurrence. We must realize that this money shall, at least in the future, be wisely expended for the purpose appropriated and not for political purposes by any person, political party, or group of persons. Whether we want to face the fact or not, the taxpayers, present and future, must pay interest on this money and must likewise pay off the principal, so we cannot talk in millions and billions without those important thoughts in mind.

If we are sincere in these convictions, and I am sure we are, while voting to carry on this necessary work let us at the same time set up the necessary machinery for this Congress to at once study the grave problems of W. P. A. from top to bottom.

I know it is honeycombed with politics. I know funds from W. P. A. have gone to help swell the political campaign funds of the majority party. I know that much of these funds that you appropriated last year were improperly used.

I know that the secretary of the Democratic Party in Erie County is, or was until November 1938, a cog in dispensing jobs, promotions, and patronage in that county for W. P. A. I know that this same Democratic secretary, working in the Democratic headquarters in Buffalo, called superintendents of projects in and gave them schedules for contributions to be taken from workers on W. P. A. for the party's political campaign. I know that workers on W. P. A. were told to "kick into this fund, or else." I know that at least one timekeeper on W. P. A. through that same Democratic organization, was given lists of taverns with receipt blanks, blank checks, and a list of suggested contributions to that Democratic organization 1938 campaign fund. He was told to go out and get the subscriptions. I know that women hired at the paltry stipend of sewing projects were told to "kick into" the Democratic coffer-and did. I know that employees on all of the W. P. A. projects in our county were told to buy tickets for Democratic shows, picnics, and other money-raising schemes. I know that boss and administrative positions are held by faithful party workers, irrespective of their qualifications, let alone needs, while needy persons really qualified are literally crying for a chance to work. Yes; I know of many other things equally bad in this political W. P. A. mess, and mark you, I do not come from Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Maryland, or other States where, according to newspaper reports, these public funds have been misused largely in vain attempts to gain political advantage.

You say, "Do you know whereof you speak?" And I answer in this manner by referring you to the official report of the United States Grand Jury for the Western District of New York, which report was handed up to Judge Knight on December 19, 1938. This investigation was made as a result of some information which came to me. So that you will get a little more of the picture: The district attorney handling the presentation to the grand jury sat in the Democratic headquarters as the adviser, while some of these contributions were being obtained and were coming in. Do not misunderstand me—I do not know that he personally knew about them at the time; however, during that time there were press reports indicating what was going on. Let us see what the grand jury said. I now quote from its report:

We have learned during the course of the investigation that on or about the 20th day of October 1938, Robert Gillen, secretary of the Democratic county committee, contacted James W. Morris, superintendent of construction, and all of the group superintendents of the W. P. A. in this area.

Continuing, the report says:

He requested these employees of the W. P. A. to come to Democratic headquarters.

I will say they did; let us look at the schedule of "suggested contributions" taken from the grand jury report, given to these men for the purpose of obtaining Democratic campaign funds. I quote:

Men	earning—
	$90 to $100	$5.00
	$117	10.00
	$125	12.50
	$150	20.00
	$175	30.00
	$200	50.00
	$250	75 00

Later the jury said:

They persisted in soliciting money from men who sorely needed that money to provide the necessities of life for themselves and their families.

Further, they say:

The conduct, the acts of the superintendent of construction and the group superintendents, might be termed by some criminal. We have chosen to be charitable. We merely term it their stupidity, their disloyalty, the acts of just another group of public servants who failed in the performance of their duty. We do not indict, but we do severely condemn.

I have given you a quotation of a small part of the grandjury report. Incidentally, the grand jury commended the Administrator and Director of the W. P. A., as well as the district attorney. When the report was read, Judge Knight said, in part:

Now, it is obvious that the operation of W. P. A. and organizations of that kind cannot long serve their purpose if they are made the footstool of politics.

The purpose of W. P. A. is to furnish relief on an impartial and nonpartisan basis, not on the basis of political affiliation, because relief is not determined by affiliation but by circumstances.

In my opinion, a law is necessary to specifically prohibit political contributions from individuals on W. P. A. We have statutes which prohibit the solicitation of contributions through threats, intimidation, or coercion. Whether that statute was violated the court is inclined to take your view—that there was not sufficient cause for indictments.

So, with that conclusion, and in view of your recommendation, I feel that the public will be satisfied. This resolution will have a more far-reaching effect than the indictment and prosecution of a few individuals. I understand there have not been any indictments.

As a result of this report, 8 or 10 of the superintendents were discharged by the W. P. A. director. Needless to say, the same secretary who was at the bottom of the questionable quest for campaign funds still holds forth as the secretary of the Erie County Democratic organization.

Ladies and gentlemen, the story of capitalizing on the human misery and suffering of our needy people has created disgust that has permeated the atmosphere around our great country to the extent that we should act once and for all to put a definite stop to it, so that it cannot again be said that in this great democracy either the Democratic, or, yes, the Republican, or any other party, is taking these atrocious advantages of our needy, deserving people.

How can you know about such things in the W. P. A. organization without at once setting up the machinery in this body to go to the bottom of things? When can we to better advantage start the machinery running than now? If we do not do it now, having before us the official "inkling" of what is going on, is it not an outright indictment against this body? If we do not now so act, are not the needy justified in questioning our motives? Similarly, are not the taxpayers forced to look askance at our action? I stand for the fund appropriation, coupled with the setting up of a committee to thoroughly investigate. Yes, at the same time, let us protect the worker further. Let us make it a violation of the penal law to in any way solicit political contributions from W. P. A. workers. As an added incentive to the worker to repulse politics in the W. P. A., let us also make it similarly criminal for him to make such additions to a party's "hope chest."

By doing these things the people of this Nation will know that Congress is definitely putting us back on the road of true democracy. I am for appropriating the funds necessary, but I do urge that we couple with it this investigation. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I think that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormackl inadvertently or unintentionally made a remark a moment ago that in a way did reflect upon the character and integrity of some of his own colleagues. Knowing him as I do, the good man that he is, the distinguished man and eminently fair man that he is, I feel that his remarks were not intentional. He made reference to a committee upon which I have served during the past few months, and inferentially or directly accused the committee of the very thing of which he accused my colleague from New York [Mr. Cole]. I say to him that no member of that committee has engaged in character assassination or in an attempt in any way to impugn the character or integrity of any American citizen. The committee in no way condoned some of the loose statements made by witnesses who appeared before it in an attempt to make it a sounding board for their own views, and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts can no more accuse the members of that committee of engaging in the work of impugning the character and integrity of citizens of this country than he can accuse the Senate Judiciary Committee of attempting to assassinate the character of certain distinguished American citizens because of some loose statements, discreditable statements, that are being made before that committee with reference to Mr. Frankfurter, one of the ablest lawyers in this country, and other distinguished people in public office. I call upon my distinguished friend to clarify or correct his statement with reference to the Dies committee. Certainly as one member of that committee, I resent any accusation that I in any way was a party to an attempt to impugn the character of any American citizen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, the remarks which I shall make in the main may be more pertinent to the relief bill which this committee will bring in later with reference to the next fiscal year. I think there are certain constructive suggestions which should be offered in advance for the committee's consideration.

The question has been asked, How can we reduce the enormous amount of money which we have been appropriating for the very worthy purpose of relief? I wish to make some suggestions of ways in which I think these amounts can be decreased without doing injustice to any proper beneficiary of relief funds.

In the first place, I think that the amount of money that is used in the administration of these relief funds is decidedly top heavy and can be very greatly decreased. I assume that there is not a Member of this House who has not heard the statement made in his own district over and over again that some people are drawing relief funds who are not entitled to such funds, and that others entitled to them are not receiving them. I am wondering if those who dwell in various political subdivisions in the States, and who are familiar with the people in their various localities, could not more adequately and more economically deal with these various beneficiaries of relief, and thereby reduce very greatly the expenditures for administration.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to make these four suggestions and, if I have any time then, I shall be glad to yield. I wish to make a further suggestion with reference to agricultural laborers. In a relief bill last year I offered an amendment which passed this House practically unanimously, but which was so modified in another body that it lost its force, to the effect that when these laborers were offered private employment they would either have to accept it or get off relief rolls, provided that private employment paid a compensation equivalent to that they were drawing on relief. No longer ago than this week I received a letter from a farmer in my district telling me of agricultural laborers on relief in that section to whom he had offered greater compensation to do agricultural work than they were receiving on relief, but they preferred to remain on relief. The amendment I offered provided that they be reentered on the relief rolls after the termination of such private employment if still eligible.

Down in the section where I live that is peculiarly true of many domestic servants. So I say, if you will place in the relief bill for next year a provision that when such laborers are offered private employment and do not accept it, they shall have to get off of the relief rolls, provided it pays them equivalent compensation to that which they are receiving on relief, you will go a great way toward remedying the situation.

Now, if you want to reduce, and reduce very materially, the funds which are being applied to relief in this country, in what a staggering sum you can do that if you will provide that this money taken from American taxpayers shall be paid only to American citizens. [Applause.] I, for one, deplore the tendency in this country to tax our loyal people, to give relief through money or employment, to aliens; people who have lived here long enough to have become citizens of this country, if they had so desired, and have not done so. If we can believe the speeches we have heard upon the floor of this House today, then many of those to whom we are paying these funds are not in sympathy either with the ideas or ideals upon which our American Government is founded. I think in some respects we are international easymarks, and in my judgment you cannot find under God's shining sun a single nation which is giving anything like the equivalent consideration to American citizens abroad that we are bestowing upon aliens, who have lived here, some of them, through generations without evidencing any desire to become citizens of this country. [Applause.]

I would like to call attention to another thing. This would not reduce the amount to be devoted to relief purposes, but I think it is a pertinent suggestion, and I have made it heretofore on the floor of this House.

The W. P. A. in its projects is peculiarly a civilian operation. There are many civil engineers, and competent ones, in this country out of employment. It has always seemed to me that those in charge of civilian engineering projects in this Government agency should be civil engineers as contradistinguished from military engineers.

I have no quarrel to find with Army engineers. They have done wonderful work. At the time I brought this to the attention of the House a year or two ago, there were 20 or 30 Army engineers holding key positions in the W. P. A., a civilian undertaking for the relief of civilians. We have heard today a message from the President of the United States with reference to the necessity for an appropriation for adequate defense in this country, in matériel and in personnel. Surely under such circumstances there must be places in the Army for those Army engineers to carry on the work for which they originally received their commissions. I say this in no spirit of animosity, but I say it in a spirit of the proper performance of duty; a duty to which men are properly assigned.

Military engineering is very different from civil engineering. These undertakings carried on through the W. P. A. are primarily civilian undertakings. Consequently, I think the militaristic aspect should be withdrawn from them, and they should be directed in key positions by men who are familiar with civil engineering in its various phases.

I am making no attack upon the distinguished gentleman who has been named as Administrator of the W. P. A. I am sure he is very competent and has performed his services with distinction. But there have been and there may be now throughout this organization many Army engineers who, in my judgment, might very appropriately be put back to their work in the War Department, in military engineering, and leave these civilian engineering operations to competent civil engineers.

I believe that these first three suggestions I have made, of reducing the cost of administration, of providing that these agricultural and domestic workers may not have the privilege of remaining on relief when offered equivalent positions in private employment, and by reducing the expenditures of the money taken from the pockets of American taxpayers by applying the funds to American citizens, and by placing the civilian operations in the hands of capable and efficient civil engineers and officers will, if adopted, materially reduce the appropriation required. Without doing any injustice to anyone properly a beneficiary of our bounty under relief we may be able to reduce greatly the expenses and to promote the efficiency of this agency of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may desire to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Lanham] if he would be willing to answer a question in my time.

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I trust the gentleman does not wish to remove the Army engineers from the work on flood relief. They have been invaluable to us in New England. If they were removed from that work, we would suffer very much.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say in response to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that I realize there are some phases of this work which have a military significance, and perhaps for that reason it is very proper to have an Army officer in control of that work. One is now Administrator of the W. P. A., but I think the lady will find upon investigation that these many Army engineers who have been serving with the W. P. A. have been by no means restricted to work of the character that has to do with the things that are useful to us from a military standpoint, either in time of peace or in war.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very glad to have the gentleman say that he feels the Army engineers should be kept in charge of certain W. P. A. work.

The gentleman has spoken of the fact that a good many have refused to leave W. P. A. work to go into private employment. One explanation of that is because if anyone once leaves W. P. A. for other employment and that employment ceases, it is almost impossible for him to be taken back on the W. P. A.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may need to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I know we are all agreed that work relief must continue until we can transfer these people into private industry.

I have received many discouraging letters from the State of Indiana complaining about politics in W. P. A. It is shameful that such a situation should exist.

At a recent meeting of some of the new Congressmen from Indiana with the State administrator, John K. Jennings, it was agreed by all that politics should be divorced from relief. I believe that Mr. Jennings will do everything in his power to eliminate such practices.

Be assured that I will cooperate in every manner possible to assist him, because it is my belief that the W. P. A. appropriation is meant for all of the people of all political parties. My vote for the new appropriation bill will be cast in that light.

I believe that all of those W. P. A. workers who were removed since the last election, November 8, 1938, should be returned to the rolls, unless they have received gainful employment in private industry.

I believe that bosses and timekeepers should be taken from the relief rolls.

I believe that bosses, timekeepers, and employees should receive the same wages.

I believe that wages should be uniform throughout the United States.

It was unfortunate, indeed, to have a shortage of funds, which made it necessary to remove our old people over 65 years, who were on W. P. A., and force them to accept direct relief, or to mortgage their little homes, earned by hard work and thrift, to accept old-age assistance.

This country has the natural wealth, the resources, the raw materials, the manpower, the factories and industrial machinery to give every American family all it needs in the way of food, clothing, education, luxuries, and pleasures.

There is food enough to feed every hungry person; there is enough wool, cotton, and silk to clothe every man, woman, and child in the country; there are materials in mines and forests, mills, factories, and warehouses to house every family in America in a modern home; there are raw products and modern machines sufficient to equip these homes with both necessities and luxuries; there are idle railroad engines and freight cars waiting to transport these needs of men to every nook and corner of the country. Are we going to use these things or are we going ahead with the present confused state of affairs?

The United States for years has been conserving forests, lands, wild game, and oil. We guard the flying geese and ducks and we protect the mineral wealth under our ground. I believe it is time we started to conserve human beings, to make life comfortable for our old folks and at the same time make life secure for our younger people by making them certain of jobs, plenty of food, and the comforts of life.

When the wage earner has toiled for 40 years or more he and she should be retired with a pension that will enable them to live in comfort the rest of their days. Our old people should not be relegated to the junk heap the same way as we do a worn-out machine!

We owe a duty to these old folks, and I believe we can perform this duty. Make jobs for the younger people and make America prosperous again.

Today we are borrowing billions to meet unemployment and to give the mass of our people a meager living, and we are only borrowing the United States into bankruptcy.

We have tried this plan and it has failed. I for one am ready to try something else.

In 1917 and 1918 we loaned billions of dollars to foreign nations, and while we never got this money back, it did create a velocity of spending in this country which gave us an era of great prosperity. If we put money in the hands of our old people to give them comfort, why will it not work out the same way when they spend it?

Look at this picture—millions are idle in a land of plenty. Cheap prison-made goods and foreign-made goods are flooding the United States markets. Men with big farms and money are holding down W. P. A. jobs. Crop control with millions undernourished and imported agricultural products. Shame on us for permitting such a situation to exist.

Give us the Townsend plan and we will not need the W. P. A., crop control, and many other Government agencies. The kind of America I want to live in will give all of our people the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. If anyone here has a better plan, bring it out before it is too late. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have, of course, together with most of the Members, been greatly disappointed that no permanent plan is yet specified for relief after 6 long years. We have the comforting assurance only, in the report before us, that it is patent that in this short time we cannot formulate a new plan and that a special committee or commission had better be set up, that a plan can be presented to us for a long-range program before the 1940 relief money is appropriated.

While the report is quite satisfactory in its brevity, and plainly written, there is one error I want to correct now, lest I forget it. You will recall that last year some of us made the statement, after information received, that 61 cents only out of the relief dollar found its way into the pocket of the reliefer; that the rest went for materials, supervision, more supervision, and racketeering. In this report it says $52.50 per project worker; $6.50 nonlabor cost, and $2 administrative cost. I will remind you in this connection that the local municipalities are, of course, expected to furnish the money for the materials before they get W. P. A. assistance. Therefore it will still hold that 61 cents of the dollar is about the sum to reach the reliefer. One of my friends on my right rushed to the telephone at the time this computation was quoted, and called up Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins said that 69 cents out of the dollar reached the pocket of the person on relief. If he said 69, I think we had better be conservative and call it 61.

Last year there was great delight on the majority side of the House because the relief bill, having been loaded down with large sums for pump priming, the minority might not vote for it; and it was freely predicted that if we did not vote for it we would probably be defeated. Well, every single Republican in this House at that time, as you knowevery single one of them-was reelected; and all but seven or eight Republicans voted against that relief bill last year. So I say to you new Republicans that this W. P. A. business is not as persuasive with the voter, now, as you might think. I have noted the following comment, "The burial of the Republican Party was a poor job. You see it was a W. P. A. project."

A little while ago our colleague [Mr. Halleck] was talking about "spending ourselves into prosperity." I suggested that it was another brand of an old and impossible doctrine: "Drink yourself sober." I would like to enlarge upon that simply by saying that a man in a drunken condition had asked the waiter to bring him something to sober him up, the waiter replied: "I will immediately bring you the check." [Laughter.] And the check in that case, of course, meant his bill, lest you misunderstand me. And when the bill is presented later on to our people, certainly there will be a sobering up.

Now, let us look at this thing seriously. The morale of our people. I want to talk about it. We get used to social security and lean too heavily upon it-and that is what we are even now doing, as everybody knows who has anything to do with the administration thereof, as was recently illustrated in one of my local papers a little while ago. Many have been on this relief program ever since it was started and obviously have no intention of getting a job. Why, it is more permanent than any private industry, apparently, But the illustration: He was injured on the job. The foreman met his little daughter. "Well, when will your father probably come back to work?" "I do not think for a long time; 'compensation' has set in."

The only real comfort, you know, if comfort it can be called, is, as I have stated before, that when the bill is finally handed down to our children and our grandchildren there will be back of it a knowledge that rather than pay, they having to pay it, it will probably be politely repudiated. I think we must feel that way. And this reminds me-it may be illustrative, I think-a friend who visited Sandy in the hospital after his operation was asked, "Did you offer Sandy any comfort and encouragement?"

"Oh, yes; Sandy was complaining about the bill that he would have to pay the hospital for the operation, and I told him 'Well, Sandy, brighten up; you may not live to pay it.'"

If that is the sort of comfort you have, well and good. I have just noted that former Comptroller General John R. McCarl made a few statements recently which, I think, well put and which should give us real cause for consideration although I do not care to be too argumentative at this late hour in the afternoon.

He says that Congress must have learned from so many futile experiments. He wrote as follows:

We cannot make everybody rich and happy by law. We cannot tax our way to needed reforms and improvements.

We cannot borrow our way to prosperity.

We cannot build an enduring social security on the quicksands of public debt.

We cannot succeed in self-government by building government and us down.

We cannot induce frugality, self-respect, or self-reliance by providing dole instead of opportunity.

cannot rob the country of money, tax our people white, and expect jobs to increase or pay envelopes to expand. We have learned that cannot be done.

We cannot expect our youth to be filled with hope when it can see action in nothing but government—or wildly patriotic when its expectancy is a yoke of debt.

Government spending on public buildings, on publicly owned facilities and utilities which may in some measure add to the national wealth but not to that by which we live and grow—wheelturning national income.

Internal national income is what we want. I had voted for all relief bills until last year. After having tried to amend them as best we could, and those being the only bills which we had before us to vote up or down, I voted for them until one for $4,800,000,000, with all sorts of pump-priming vagaries included therein, was presented.

Personally, I am inclined to compliment the gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the subcommittee. Even a little digression from the path of rectitude as outlined by the White House is highly suggestive of a purge to come. Stubborness is not lacking in the White House. You are expected to vote for the entire amount of eight hundred and fifty millions. It is apparently acknowledged that they do not expect times to get much better. I am therefore inclined at this moment to vote for the bill presented by the gentleman from Virginia, supported by a large majority of his committee. I am sure that if it can later on be shown that times are so bad and that people are starving or in need, we shall be glad to vote a supplementary appropriation before this Congress adjourns. But just now the basis of their request is not sufficient to cause us to vote the entire amount.

I again warn this House. We cannot spend ourselves into prosperity. We are being frightened into voting large sums for national defense. We should inquire into that most carefully. Certainly we should not be criticised, because sincerity and sympathy for the poor is just as deep in our hearts as in the heart of the occupant of the White House. We are merely not so stubborn, which proves that we are even more sincere in trying to arrive at a proper judgment.

I want to remind you further, that many items for relief are included in other appropriation bills and we should watch such items carefully. There are many ways in which our money is being wasted. One billion dollars has been squandered in the buying of silver and a large part of it has been buried in the ground. The people seem totally uninformed on the silver question. Somebody at some time should take the floor and make a complete statement with reference to that subject.

They have changed the name of the old resettlement vagaries. Is it not now the Farm Security Administration? They have some 90 of these resettlement schemes scattered over the country. The futility of them and the favoritism shown in reaching only a few and not taking care of the multitude, should be kept in mind, and better understood by everyone. If these wild schemes are to be called by new names and hidden somewhere under regular appropriations, how are we to learn the exact conditions and actual amounts expended for relief?

You perhaps read last week the statement of a man who resigned, regarding the 60 families in Gila Valley. An initial cost of $500,000, built up absolutely on the Russian system, except that the Government was to get half the profits in cash, if and when there were any profits. He should now be willing to tell us about it since he has been separated from his job.

Those bad eggs have been transferred to another basket. but their upkeep is still there and they are still highly expensive, futile propositions. It is not only this relief proposition under W. P. A. which is in effect before us today. There are hidden many other methods of spending money largely for the same general purpose.

I do not like the jokes on the W. P. A. You may think I do because sometimes I speak in a manner that may leave that impression, but I do so only for illustrative purposes. Frankly, I do not like to see a man work out in the snow and slush trying to put in his 3 days in order to get $13, or see a struggling white-collared worker beside those always used to manual labor.

I have seen enough of this building of stone walls in sparsely settled areas, men from the cities being transported many miles by trucks in all sorts of conditions. These walls generally are built on land which is not worth $1 an acre. This made work is just to preserve their manhood; at least, so it is stated. I would vote tomorrow for a direct payment of $15 or more, according to a reliefer's necessity. I read that a Senator in the other branch will recommend that relief money be distributed to the State on a per capita basis. In some localities you can live cheaply, as compared to other sections where it costs much more even to exist.

Would it not be glorious for the wealthier States to furnish the money to other States which are located in favorable climatic sections, "per capita"? I favor sending Federal relief funds to the municipalities, to be administered by nonbipartisan boards and by persons not up for election year after year; boards which would not be politically minded and which would determine whether funds should be used for W. P. A. made work, so-called, or for direct relief methods, as might be deemed best by them. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, we have heard this afternoon on one occasion something about the latent consuming power that is present in the homes in America, and in the same speech a suggestion that, therefore, the amount appropriated in this resolution for work for the unemployed should be reduced. I cannot understand the logic of such a position.

Of course, there is tremendous latent consuming power in the homes of America. The only trouble is that the people do not have the money with which to express that consuming power and to become an active part of the market. Our job in this Congress is to work out a way in which that can be done, and to do this without a continuously mounting national debt. The only reason we do not attack this job more directly than we are doing is because of the opposition of the very same people who want to cut this appropriation.

However, that is not the immediate problem that confronts The problem that immediately confronts us is one in which the livelihood and opportunity to work of some 500,000 people is immediately at stake.

May I say at this point that if anyone offers an amendment, with as much teeth in it as he wants, to make it a punishable offense for any official to use any of the money we will appropriate in order to bring political pressure on W. P. A. workers I will vote for that amendment? I may say further that I wish the Hatch amendment had passed the Senate last year. May I say in the third place that the people who are going to get hurt if you cut this appropriation are not any of those who have benefited either on the Republican or on the Democratic side by political activities, such as there may have been, but those who have been the victims of such circumstances-people who now need a job of some kind to carry on and support their families.

ABOUT POLITICS IN RELIEF

My experience in California-and I know something about the situation in California—has been this, and it is also the situation in every other State where the State has taken the trouble to set up relief machinery of its own. No one in our State has been able at any time to get a job on W. P. A. unless certified by the State relief administration. The State relief administration was until the 1st day of this month in the hands of the Republican State administration of California.

In every State where there has been such a certifying agency the W. P. A. has used it. Therefore, in studying the situation carefully, I find there was no politics in relief to any great extent in our State, and such as there may have been was probably to a large extent Republican politics rather than Democratic politics. I do not believe that is the issue. Certainly I have never in my life asked a man who needed a job what political party he belonged to.

Let me cite this example: The rolls in California last fall were increased somewhat. Why? Because on the basis of the figures submitted by our Republican State relief administration it was found there was need for an increase. That was the reason. It was a matter of need concerning which Republicans and Democrats agreed.

It also is true that my State has carried over a period of time approximately one-half of the load of the employable unemployed in addition to direct relief for the unemployable people all the time, and we are asking that we not be requested to do more.

WHAT DOES THIS PROPOSED CUT MEAN?

The situation I wish to present to you is this: To appropriate $875,000,000 at this time means cutting 300,000 people from the rolls before the end of the present fiscal year. To appropriate $725,000,000 means that 500,000 additional people must be kicked off the jobs they now have. And that means 500,000 heads of families deprived of jobs and forced onto relief rolls—if any.

THE REAL ISSUE

The real issue that confronts us does not involve the President or Mr. Hopkins or Mr. Williams or anyone else like that, except insofar as these men have defended the unemployed. But I do say this: If anyone could have undertaken this tremendous task, ordered forward and back by the Congress from time to time, employing now 3,000,000, now 1,500,000 people. subjected to all manner of local pressures, and done a better job than has been done, I would like to know who it is. The issue, however, is what you are going to do about the unemployed and the revival of consumer demand in this country in the next 5 months.

The arguments of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] have not yet been answered. None of the authorities he cited showing the need for at least $875,000,000 has been answered. Not a speech has been made on this floor that has successfully refuted the argument submitted by the gentleman from Missouri. I say that because I will not have anywhere near the time I need to complete my speech. I refer you, therefore, back to his.

WHO IS THIS MAN?

The man you have to consider in this situation is a type of man that we all too often forget here in the House. May I picture him to you as though he were standing before you. He is the typical W. P. A. worker as I know him. He has come to my office, over and over, not to ask direct relief, not to ask something for nothing, but because he wants more efficient work, because he wants a harder job, yes, because he wants better pay, and I think he should have it.

This man has gray about his temples. He is about 48 or 50 years of age, and I challenge anyone on either side of the House to stand up and say a man of that age can get a job in private industry today. He simply cannot do it.

This typical worker is a man with a family. He has three children, the oldest of whom is just getting through high school. He either has a mortgage on his home or he pays rent and has a hard time to meet his rent payments. He is not a Communist, a Nazi, or anything else but a perfectly good American, like you and me.

I have heard the innuendos that have been cast at this man this afternoon by some Members. If I should rise here today and pick out one wealthy individual in this country and talk about the things he has done and how bad they were, I would be subject to the very logical charge that I was not representing honestly or fairly the people of means in this country. I counter with the statement that neither is it fair to charge the poor people of the country with all of the things that have been mentioned here today. They are the victims not of one man or of any one political party's policies but the victims of our failure as yet to adjust our national life to the machine age. This typical man wants a job, that is all.

A CONSTRUCTIVE PROPOSAL

I am going to tell you a little bit about a bill I have introduced. It provides for a combination of W. P. A. and P. W. A. in one bureau, the carrying on of all public works employment by that bureau, the oversight over that program by a board of nine people, no more than five of whom shall be of one political party. My bill provides for the unemployed a program of work that needs to be done in this country, and a program whereby the work would be run on the basis of a standard number of hours per week, with prevailing wages paid. Under my bill work could be carried on either by contract, through grants to States and cities, or through Federal direct employment.

I cannot describe all the features of this bill at this time, but I have introduced it because for years I have believed this program should not be on a relief basis, but that people should be certified for work by the United States Employment Service rather than by a relief agency. I still believe that. I submit, however, that the consideration of any such measure—and I do not know that my own bill is the best one that could be drawn-is going to take time. It cannot be done in a moment and should not be done in a moment. Provision must be made for shifting people from one program to another. The issue before us today is whether or not we are going to vent such feeling and prejudices as we may have on the helpless unemployed people of this country by cutting the appropriation, or whether we are going to vote the $875,000,000 which as a minimum is necessary in order to protect the right to life of these people whose very lives lie in our hands now, and, having done that, proceed to the constructive job of working out a unified, flexible, long-range program of public works.

WHY NOT READ THE RECORD?

If you will go back to the Congressional Record of 1937, you will find that in the spring of 1937 the same speeches were made about cutting down Government expenditures, about turning business loose, about how business would reabsorb these people. The very same things were said then that are being said now. The House listened, cut the appropriation, and the recession followed.

I have talked to people who are little-business men in this country. We have not got prosperity back yet, and if you cut off these 500,000 people you are going to deal a severe blow to the revival now taking place. We still need expansion; and, though this is frankly not my first choice of a way to get it, it is far, far better than nothing.

When we had a cut of 5,000 out in my State a little while ago there was a meeting that took place, an orderly, quiet meeting of about 300 heads of families in a vacant lot on one of the boulevards that runs between a couple of the towns in my district, and in that meeting there were speeches made by these men who said, "We believe that we, as American citizens, have a right to work. We ask not that we be given something for nothing, but we ask a chance to make our constructive contribution to the life of the American Nation."

This is the task of Congress. Bring in suggestions, for Heaven's sake, that are constructive suggestions. Bring in suggestions as to how we can improve the program, but do not think that anybody is going to be deceived about your real intention if you start out to improve the program by first kicking 500,000 people out into the street in helplessness.

ACTUAL ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

We have heard a lot today in the way of criticism of the W. P. A. To keep the record straight, I wish to include something on the constructive accomplishments of the people employed on W. P. A.

In the 4-month period from July to November 1938 W.P.A. workers built or improved 30,000 miles of roads and streets, the largest proportion of which was in rural areas.

In that same period W. P. A. workers completed 4,000 new bridges and 52,000 new culverts, laid 1,500 miles of sidewalks and paths and more than 56,000,000 linear feet of roadside drainage ditches. The figures I mention represent only projects brought to completion during the 4-month period, and do not include work done on approximately 10,300 other highway projects which still were in operation at the end of the period.

Because of the large opportunity for the employment of unskilled labor, and because of the widespread demand for better roads, highway projects constitute a major phase of the W. P. A. construction program. More than 47 percent of all persons employed by the W. P. A. are at work on projects of this type.

The attached figures show that 2,531 miles of new highways were built by the W. P. A. from July to November 1938, and that repairs and improvements were made on 28,085 miles of existing roads. Rural roads, mostly of the farm-to-market type, comprised the biggest group within the category, with 1,372 miles of new construction (622 miles of which were paved) and 24,395 miles repaired or improved.

Such roads are vital lines of communications to millions of farmers throughout the country, being in many instances their only access to urban markets. Many of these roads have been in a poor state of repair and impassable during much of the year. The improvement of farm-to-market roads has been an important objective of the W. P. A. since its inception  $3\frac{1}{2}$  years ago, and in that time the program has converted tens of thousands of miles of fair-weather roads to year-round usefulness.

Bridge construction and repair formed another important phase of the highway program, with 4,090 new structures completed and repairs and improvements to 1,728. Of the total, 4,137 were wood, 1,020 masonry, and 661 steel. Their aggregate length was 173,395 feet, or slightly more than 32 miles.

Other accomplishments during the 4-month period include 1,550 miles of new or improved sidewalks and paths, 1,233 miles of new or improved curbs, 297 miles of new or improved gutters, 10,790 miles of new or improved roadside drainage, and 1,315 miles of roadside landscaping. New culverts numbered 52,040, with an aggregate length of 243 miles.

Following is a tabulation showing the projects completed during the period July 1 to November 1, 1938, with a breakdown of the data by States, on the basis of reports received by Colonel Harrington, Works Progress Administrator:

JUST A FEW SHORT SENTENCES

In conclusion, I should like my remarks to include a few short lines from a letter I received yesterday from one of the citizens of my district. The letter speaks for itself and speaks louder than I could speak or any other Member could speak on the floor of the House in urging two things: First, enough money for W. P. A. now to protect these people in their meager jobs; second, a sincere, earnest attack by the Congress at this session on this whole problem and the setting up of a stable program of employment which all will understand, from which this fear and uncertainty will be removed, on which at least somewhat better wages will be paid and by means of which as much constructive work as possible will be done. Here is a part of the letter:

I enclose a clipping from this morning's Post. This is the kind of thing that is terrifying to those on W. P. A., the uncertainty of employment. It is a monster that keeps those on W. P. A. in constant dread. Can't something be done to take away this nightmare? I suppose those in authority fail to realize what effect this has on the lives of those who hope to be able to keep their families alive. If some of those in authority could see the budgets these people have to follow, their hearts might be touched.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. Thomas F. Ford].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with close attention and deep respect to the very clear and logical statement of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations.

My reaction to his plausible and logical arguments for a cut of $150,000,000 in the W. P. A. appropriation is that while it would save the Treasury that amount of money in the next few months, it is, in my opinion, "a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy" that later will cost many times the sum thus temporarily saved.

It seems to me that if Congress adopts this resolution as presented that our action would be like that of a sick man who leaves the hospital a week too soon in order to save expense, suffers a relapse, and then is forced to spend several additional weeks in the hospital to regain the strength that might have come as a result of spending the additional week in the first place.

If this was pure speculation, I would not ask my colleagues to give it much consideration; but, my friends, we have had one experience with attempting to cut down on work relief, an experience for which we are now paying dearly for and will continue to pay.

It is my reasoned opinion that any attempt to cut work relief at this time is premature. Let us not make the same mistake twice. Let us go the last mile, as our distinguished colleague from Missouri suggests. Let us keep priming the pump until the return flow is sufficiently steady and adequate, in the form of increased private employment, to warrant the Government stepping out gradually.

I am just as anxious as the gentleman from Virginia to get the Government out of relief. In saying this I do not mean to infer that I am more humane than he is; more compassionate than he is; that I have a greater love for or more sympathy with poverty and suffering than he has. The fact is, we differ only as to time.

These are my reasons for opposing this cut.

I shall vote for replacing the $150,000,000, thus bringing the appropriation up to $875,000,000. In fact, my study of the situation leads me to the conclusion that a full billion dollars would not be too much at this critical period.

However, Colonel Harrington states that $875,000,000 will suffice. The President recommends that sum; and since that seems to be the maximum we can secure, I shall vote for the original sum asked, namely, $875,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Warren, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 13, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, we pray for Thy blessing upon the truth as it shall be spoken today; may it do good, excite thought, and lead us to do our whole duty. Oh, let us see the pitying Saviour in the city and in the desert place and transform all closed hearts. Let us hear the cry of the weary, feel the pulse of the struggling; haunt us with the thought of the homeless, and thus shall our love be perfected in stony places. Almighty God, let Thy will be done in our Nation. Make it strong, not for selfishness nor aggression but for those who seek liberty and sit in darkness. Help us to see ourselves; it is easier to be good in a garden than in the slum; it is easier to love God on the mountain peak than in the throes of poverty. Blessed Lord, the opportunity is ours; the door is open; lead us on. In the name of our Saviour.

Now we wait, Heavenly Father, and hear us. The clouds are low and forbidding. Again we stand on Jordan's banks and hear the sighing of the turbulent waves. One faithful and true in public and private life has left us. The other hour, when he breathed his last, the heavens opened and his manly soul became immortal. God bless his memory unto us and abide with great comfort and peace with his loved ones. In the blessed name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the majority leader a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, several on this side desire to ascertain, if they can, what the legislative program will be for next week. They want to make their plans accordingly.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the committees, of course, have not been named as yet. The general committees, I think, will not be able to report legislation next week. As to what the Committee on Appropriations will be ready to do, I would rather have the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] answer the inquiry.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we have a number of very urgent deficiency items which have been sent up by the Bureau of the Budget, which the deficiency subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations will take up on Monday next and hold hearings on. I hope that they may be ready for presentation to the House on Thursday next. We should be able to dispose of them in 1 day.

Mr. MAPES. Then it is safe to say that no important legislation will be up before Thursday?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; as far as I can answer the inquiry.

Mr. RAYBURN. There will be no other legislation until the Appropriations Committee reports.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should say that it is barely possible that we could get the deficiency items before the House on Wednesday. I would not like to foreclose myself, though my judgment is that it will not be until Thursday.

Mr. MAPES. Then I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether it is the intention of the Committee on Appropriations to keep the House in session today until a final vote is had upon the relief bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is the intention; yes.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 83, making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 83, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no Member of this House when it comes to trying to hold down Government expenditures. I have been fighting for reduction in expenditures when many who are now opposing the recommendation of the administration were urging that they be increased.

The greater part of the time allotted to discuss this bill has been used to advance a lot of political bunk and this at the expense of human misery.

I want to say to my democratic friends the situation which confronts us today is not of our making. It developed during the administration of Herbert Hoover, and for 4 long years he denied—

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. No; not now. For 4 long years he denied suffering people any relief. I was here at the time. I remember when the present Vice President, Mr. Garner, included in a bill he introduced the recommendations of Mr. Hoover's Board of Army Engineers and the recommendations of Mr. Hoover's building commission, in an effort to give some relief to the unemployed, but Mr. Hoover said, "No; it "is pork barrel." Well, if it was "pork barrel," it was his own appointees who made the recommendations to the Congress.

Then what happened? The American public drove Mr. Hoover from office, and drove most of the Republican Members of Congress from office for their inactivity. They elected a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not now.

If we do not look after these unfortunate people, I say to you, Republicans and Democrats, they will drive you from office, and rightfully so. [Applause.]

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am sorry, but I do not have sufficient time.

There are men in this House today who are opposing the recommendation of the President for $875,000,000 for the remainder of the fiscal year for W. P. A. who pledged their vote in the campaign preceding the election on November 8 for almost every conceivable wide-eyed proposition that was advanced in order to secure the support of groups. I hope that there will come a time one of these days when we will have the opportunity to have a yea-and-nay vote on some of the proposals, including the Townsend bill. When we do, if the pledges are kept, you are going to see some of the leaders of the Republican Party voting for measures which they know have absolutely no chance of becoming a law. I was not so cruel as to lead the aged in my district into believing that it was possible to secure the passage of a bill in Congress such as advocated by Dr. Townsend. Those of us who were honest with our constituents might have been criticized at that time, but in the end, when they find that we were right, we will be commended for an honest expression.

I come from a great city that has been affected by the unemployment situation just as much as any other city in the United States.

It is a great industrial center. Thousands have appealed to me, either by letter or in person, to secure employment with W. P. A. I defy anyone, man or woman, white or black, to say that at any time that I have asked the applicant his or her politics, nor at any time did I send any kind of a letter that could be classed in any way as political to anyone who had appealed to me.

I brought to the attention of the W. P. A. officials the situation that confronted applicants who appealed to me, but I always said in the appeal to the local administrator that if the investigation disclosed that the applicant did come within the policy of W. P. A., then I felt that they should be considered for an assignment.

It is necessity that requires men and women to apply for work with W. P. A. If we are honest, you and I must admit that our constituents certainly would rather have employment in industry than be classed as a beneficiary under W. P. A. I know bank clerks, secretaries, skilled mechanics, two former Republican judges, one who was a circuit judge, railroad clerks—in fact, men that followed almost every line of employment—that are now working on W. P. A. And what work are they doing? Digging sewers, cleaning streets and alleys, breaking rocks, beautifying parks, and other such employment. Do you feel for a moment that such men and women are satisfied with such a life? It is the fact that they have families dependent upon them that requires them to do so.

Now, I am not going to tell you what happened in the past, but I am going to tell you what is happening in my city today. In the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of Wednesday morning, January 11, you find a two-column headline on the first page, which I quote:

One thousand mothers join sob line as relief agency closes.

And then comes an article saying that more than 1,000 mothers who have been dropped during the last month from W. P. A. employment are told to have their names placed on the aid to dependent children rolls and aid is not forthcoming from this source.

The article goes on to say that some of the women who were gathered in front of the Social Security office Tuesday night had been waiting there since before 7 a. m. Some claim that they had been trying to even secure an interview for days and nights without success. The article further says that a stream of about a half block long generally gathers before 6 o'clock in the morning and from that only 10 women are interviewed in a day.

This statement does not originate with me, but I am just telling you what this article says. It describes a situation that I want you to picture. Women building fires in washtubs huddled around in an effort to keep warm, white and black, waiting to tell their story.

These women had W. P. A. jobs but were dismissed.

Last week I took this matter up with Colonel Harrington, the W. P. A. Administrator, who had the regional director come to Washington from Chicago for a conference and then had that regional director go to St. Louis to investigate. Colonel Harrington told me that lack of funds required a reduction in the roll. I had a wire from his assistant today in response to mine, saying 41,000 leave the rolls if we pass this bill as reported. This reduction applies to Missouri.

Not only women have suffered but men with dependent families have been discharged. I ask you to place yourself in their position. What would you do if after tramping the streets all day looking for work and you come home and find your wife and children crying for food? You know what you would do, and I know what I would do. I warn you that in the coldest month of the year this is no time to send word to unfortunate people that we are going to cut and they are no longer going to be able to earn the few dollars that they have been getting from the W. P. A.

I have a telegram from the mayor of St. Louis this morning telling me that 33 percent of those now on W. P. A. rolls in St. Louis will be taken off the rolls and thrown on the local authorities, which he says cannot carry the load. It reads—I quote:

Reduction of W. P. A. allotment to $725,000,000 means 33 percent cut in W. P. A. rolls in St. Louis or practically 11,000 people to be taken from rolls and placed on relief. You know financial condition of city and State at present time. Impossible for us to assume this load. We feel full amount asked by President should be approved.

BERNARD F. DICKMANN, Mayor.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now. I say to you that this is not a fight on the President. The President submits to us what the people in charge of this agency say is needed to carry on the activities. The fight to cut the amount is a fight upon the poor people of this country who cannot get work in private industry.

The President of the United States is not going to suffer except from peace of mind. He does not like to see anyone suffer. Those of us who have a roof over our heads, good clothes to wear, and plenty to eat should place ourselves in the position of those unfortunate people and then decide how we would look upon our Representative in Congress who took away from us a meager existence.

I repeat, I have never at any time asked a person his or her politics who appealed to me for assistance. I have never at any time injected any politics into W. P. A. Some of you say there is. Those who do can draw the strongest section you can write and add it to this bill and make it a felony for anyone who does and I will support it and I will speak for it. [Applause.] If there is any politics in W. P. A., take it out. Put a section in this bill, if you please, that will send people to the penitentiary who play politics with human misery. That is the way to keep W. P. A. free from politics.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not now. We are faced with a very bad parliamentary situation here today. Now, listen. We are not going to be able to get a record expression upon the recommendation of the administration unless we can amend this resolution in Committee of the Whole. This resolution is brought in so framed that it will be an absolute impossibility to get a record vote unless we amend it in Committee of the Whole. It has always been the policy as long as I can remember that when a committee decides to change an amount in a matter of this character to insert in the resolution the original recommendation of the Budget and then strike it out and amend it and report the resolution to the House.

That was not done, however, in this instance. The committee's figure, the reduced amount, is in this resolution. So if we do not amend this resolution in the Committee of the Whole we are not going to be able to get a record vote on the $875,000,000. The ranking Republican member will be recognized to offer the motion to recommit and he is for the reduction.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman cannot cite me a single appropriation bill reported to this House in certainly 8 years where the Appropriations Committee has taken a Budget item and amended it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In the last 8 years there has never been a single bill of this character introduced in this House except a Budget item with an amendment by the committee. This proceeding is unprecedented. It is a departure from the routine followed for years in the presentation of this class of appropriations. And the only effect of the change in procedure is to prevent a record vote in the House. It can have no other effect. There can be no other purpose in adopting it. The appropriation bills to which the gentleman from Virginia refers are an entirely different class of bills and handled in an entirely different manner. If anyone has any doubt about it, they have but to consult the files of the committee and the House.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think in all fairness to the Members of this House the gentleman from Virginia should give us an opportunity to get a record vote on this proposition. Let the people of the country know who is in favor of $875,000,000, who is in favor of any other amount you want to vote on. I am willing to go on record.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am willing to accept my responsibility, but I would like to see the Members of the House be forced to vote upon the administration's recommendation. I repeat that when you do vote you will not be voting against the administration, but will be voting against these poor, unfortunate people who are going to be taken off the rolls of W. P. A., people who have wives and children at home dependent upon them.

Some mighty strong statements were made before this subcommittee, off the record, and I pray that the situation they predicted was going to happen in the large cities never will happen. I am not, however, going to place myself in the position where anybody can say that I was in any part responsible if it does happen.

I do not know what pledges you made in your campaign, but I do know the pledge that I made in mine in every speech that I made. I told the people of my district that it was my purpose to uphold the President of the United States in his efforts to assist the unfortunate citizens who could not secure employment in private industry. I am going to keep that pledge, and I am going to vote for the President's recommendation.

I express the same hope that many of you do, and that is that the day is not far distant when it will be no longer necessary for us to carry on W. P. A. We will be happy when that day arrives, but not nearly as happy as the millions who are on W. P. A. who will have employment in private industry. That day, however, has not arrived, and until it does arrive, it is your duty and my duty to recognize the situation that confronts our country and meet it courageously. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Vorys].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we have heard much these last 2 days about political misuse of the W. P. A. during the past year. I wish to call to your attention a particularly vicious form of political manipulation of W. P. A. which is going on right now and to which the last speaker has just referred.

I have received heart-rending letters from widows with children to support who were dropped from W. P. A. this month. There were 750 such dismissals in my district, Franklin County, Ohio. I am told that this was done in accordance with the Nation-wide order dropping widows with children in States that had mothers' pension laws; but in my district most of these women are ineligible for aid under our pension laws, and for all of them no mothers' pension funds will be available for over a year. These women who write to me are able to work, are in dire need. Others who were less deserving were kept on W. P. A. Why this apparently senseless, brutal discrimination at this time? As one weman wrote—

Are American women to be penalized for having children?

Another distracted but discerning woman gives the clue to this move when she writes—

If this is a move to marshal protests and resultant support for additional appropriations, it appears that it will have to be accomplished at the expense of hungry children and worried, defenseless women.

There is your answer! Protests and resultant support for W. P. A. are being marshaled at the expense of hungry children and worried, defenseless women. What should be our reply?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I am sorry; no, I have not time.

First, we should make a stopgap appropriation to take care of immediate needs, and see that it goes to the needy.

Next we should rewrite the law to make impossible the manipulation of work relief to influence votes in primaries, in elections, or in Congress. We should determine and define work-relief classifications by law and not leave this to the caprice of bureaucrats. Surely this must now be possible. After 6 years of experiments, based on an emergency 6 years long, we should have something besides experimental emergency legislation on work relief.

And, last, let us take time while we are writing such a law to find out the amount we really need.

Last summer the initials "W. P. A." stood for the words "We Purge Anti New Dealers." Now the slogan appears to be, "Spend and spend, elect and elect, then deny and deny." For the sake of these exploited widows and children, let us provide not only immediate money, but protection against a capricious self-perpetuating bureaucracy. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I want, first, to call to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that there is a motion-picture show in this city entitled the "Grand Illusion." It is a war play, one of the best ever produced in any nation. Members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I think, have been invited as guests to see that movie. I hope all other Members will buy tickets to it if they want to see one of the best plays ever put out in these days of war hysteria and war propaganda. This play exposes war as it really is and is a powerful antidote to war hysteria.

I am glad to follow my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] and answer his charges. He says that the Republican administration back in 1928-32, when Mr. Hoover was President, is responsible for the relief situation today. I do not quite understand why he stopped at Mr. Hoover and does not blame George Washington. It would make just as much sense. The fact is, however, I may say to some of the newer Members of the House, that when Herbert Hoover, as President in 1931 and 1932, made certain recommendations to the Congress that would have helped the economic situation, stabilized business, and restored confidence, the Democratic Members sabotaged all of his sound recommendations for partisan reason and advantage. I say to the Democrats that had they accepted the sound recommendations made by Herbert Hoover at that time there would have been confidence in the country today, and we would know which way we are going. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FISH. Not in my limited time.

This question of politics in the relief administration is not a new one. It has been going on ever since the New Deal came into power. Four years ago I put into the Record a letter written by the relief workers in my district at the instigation of the relief officials asking all relief voters to vote the Democratic ticket. I called that letter to the attention of the then Administrator, Harry Hopkins. He refused to take any action.

This is not a partisan matter as far as we Republicans are concerned. It far transcends party lines and affects the very existence of the free institutions under which we live and our American system of government.

We Republicans have a right to bitterly resent the injection of partisan politics into relief. We join also with many anti

New Deal Democrats and those Democratic Members of Congress whom the New Deal attempted to purge through the use of relief funds by intimidating and coercing the voters because they would not be rubber stamps and because they would not vote to destroy the independence of the judiciary or the independence of the Congress by jamming through the court-packing bill or the reorganization bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am particularly mindful of what happened to the chairman of the Rules Committee in the last Congress, John O'Connor, one of the most distinguished Members of this House, who refused to be a rubber stamp. On primary day all the relief workers were let off at 2 o'clock in the afternoon in the city of New York so that they could march into the Sixteenth District of New York City when the primary polls opened at 3 o'clock. These relief workers by the thousands moved into that district under the leadership of the Workers' Alliance, a Communist organization, and by a slim majority defeated John O'Connor, who served in this House with distinction for 16 years.

I say nothing against the Member who was elected in his place, but he was elected by the relief workers under the leadership of the Workers' Alliance, a Communist organization, and it was only through the use of coercion and the political activities of those on relief in the city of New York that the able chairman of the Rules Committee was defeated and an end put to John O'Connor's political life in the House of Representatives, at least for the time being.

Mr. Chairman, the Works Progress Administration has become a national scandal, with relief workers being used for partisan purposes until it has permeated and honeycombed the entire Nation. If our free institutions, a free ballot, and our representative form of government, are to be preserved this fraudulent use of public funds to influence elections and to prime primary and election pumps must be stopped.

The administration of Federal relief became a stench in the nostrils of the public as political debauchery flourished like a green bay tree. All Federal funds for relief purposes should be turned over to the States, to be administered by local communities on a nonpartisan and humane basis, in order that the money may go to the needy and not into the pocket of a partisan bureaucracy in Washington or to a host of partisan New Deal supervisors all over the Nation.

The contemptible political activities in the W. P. A. including pay-roll padding and use of funds for partisan political purposes, are now known to the Nation. The whole rotten mess stinks to high heaven, and, like a dead mackerel in the moonlight, "it stinks and shines and shines and stinks." [Laughter and applause.]

The friends of the Administrator, Harry Hopkins, are trying to clear him from all responsibility for building up this gigantic political machine. Harry Hopkins, as Administrator, was responsible for the acts of his agents. He was an effective political manipulator and up to his neck in permitting relief funds to be used to influence and coerce the voters of this country. He publicly while Administrator urged the defeat of Democratic Senators and Representatives in primary elections. He permitted Aubrey Williams, the Assistant Administrator, to speak to groups of Communists and the Workers' Alliance, and to say to these Communists that, "We must stick together and elect our friends." He was never rebuked and he continued to hold that office under the administrator of Harry Hopkins. President Roosevelt, instead of rebuking or dismissing his Administrator of relief Harry Hopkins gives him the accolade and promotes him to be a member of his Cabinet and thereby endorses the use of relief funds for partisan and political purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce.]

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with my colleague from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] that our present economic condition is the result of the 4 years' administration of President Hoover or anybody else. I believe it is the result of a long series of events and conditions pointed out many years ago by competent economists and students.

I have a thought which I want to present to the Committee, and it has reference to something which is being done in the West to help solve this relief problem. First, I want to compliment the subcommittee that has charge of this relief appropriation. I cannot think of a harder place to serve in this body than being in charge of these appropriation bills. I believe it would be well to vote with the committee, if we can, because that committee has given days and weeks of study to this particular question.

The experience from the West upon which I wish to comment is the unique and admirable record of a church.

The Mormon Church, or Latter-Day Saints, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, has a membership of about 1,000,000. They are setting an example for the care of their unemployed membership that should be highly praised and given wide publicity.

The plan of this church is to find jobs for their own members and keep them off of the relief rolls and the W. P. A. The plan should be emulated everywhere. The president of the church, Heiber J. Grant, has several times stated that no good member of the Mormon Church should stay on the W. P. A. rolls, apparently thinking it breaks their morale, their ambition, and their desire to do anything for themselves. This organization, through its local bodies, or stakes, has held many meetings seeking jobs for those on relief or those likely to apply for relief. I have personally attended some of these meetings and have aided the organization, as I could, to secure jobs for members. So far as I know, this is the only religious organization that is making a really determined effort to meet the problem. The church is succeeding in a marvelous way in fitting its membership into the active affairs of life so that they are not depending upon relief or charity. It has great warehouses, organized industries and projects, and cooperative plans which are effective and stimulating to participants and to observers.

May other organizations imitate the example of the Morman Church and make a determined effort that those that come under the influence of their organization will be given jobs, so, in a satisfactory way, they may earn money to care for themselves.

I am truly alarmed at the employment and relief situation. When I took my place in this House 6 years ago I freely voted for the relief asked for, believing that it was a temporary condition, and I was willing to borrow money on the credit of the Nation to give relief to the unemployed. I am now convinced that it is a permanent condition which we must face, not a depression nor a recession but a development in American economic life which is going to leave a constant line of millions of unemployed unless drastic changes are made.

As a Member of the Seventy-sixth Congress on the Democratic side I am willing to record my concern over the mounting national debt. There must be a limit somewhere and a time not far in the future when Government bonds will not find the ready purchasers that they now have. Quite distinctly I remember when I sold Government bonds after the war for 83 cents on the dollar. Such a price today would close one-half of the banks of the United States and would wreck our economic machine. If we must continue to vote these uncounted millions for W. P. A. and other relief, like Surplus Commodities Corporation, the C. C., and so forth, then I want to vote for tax measures that will raise the money. Oh, I know it will be a terrific strain and will probably defeat the party that proposes or imposes such a tax, but let it be so. The one thing dearest to all of us is perpetuation of this form of government, and it surely cannot safely be maintained many years with such a line of unemployed and such a mounting unbalanced Budget. [Applause.] Perhaps we have got to pass laws in the very near future that will divide up the jobs so that all may share and have a chance to earn something.

Of all the different forms of relief, nothing appeals to me as being as valuable as the C. C. More than a million boys have been taken from the homes of those on relief or those homes that are needy. Of the more than $2,000,000,000 that this activity has cost the Government, 80 percent has been sent directly to the homes of the needy. It is a far better form of relief than the W. P. A., though more costly and limited to youth. In the years to come it may be considered the outstanding social achievement of this administration. The boys are busily engaged in useful work and in school, receiving food, shelter, and medical care. They are employed in caring for the forests and in doing needed work from one end of the country to the other. I believe in increasing their activities, and most especially their educational opportunities and training for useful avocations.

Yes; we must vote this appropriation; but let us do it by saying to our Ways and Means Committee, "Present to us also the bills for laws necessary to raise the money, so we may no longer be forced to borrow either from the Social Security, the banks, or the public." Perhaps we must pass laws still further reducing interest and fixed dividends, which, many students believe, are contributory causes of the present desperate condition.

We cannot discard machinery, but it is certainly in a large measure responsible for the unemployed. We have got to learn to live with the machinery and use it rightly for the benefit of all. It is either that or disaster beyond comprehension and imagination. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Keffe].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, in the last session of Congress the great State of Wisconsin was represented in the Senate by a New Deal Progressive and a New Deal Democrat, and in the House by three New Deal Democrats and seven New Deal Progressives.

The State government in all of its executive departments and in both houses of the legislature was occupied and controlled by the La Follette Progressive dynasty.

On November 8 last the voters of Wisconsin, without previous indication of their attitude, went solemnly to the polls and by their votes emphatically told the Nation, while we still place human rights above property rights, while we still believe in progress and true liberalism, we are sick and tired of cheap political intrigue. Tired of broken platform promises, tired of New Deal experimentation, tired of being exploited, tired of rubber-stamp representation, tired of class legislation, tired of rabble rousing, tired of industrial strife, tired of governmental interference in business, tired of reckless and incompetent Government spending, of waste and extravagance and the brazen attempts to regiment business and agriculture, tired of cheap demagoguery that promises everything and delivers nothing, tired of constantly mounting taxes, tired and ashamed that there should be privation, poverty, and want in the midst of plenty, tired of destroying wealth and curtailing production, sick and tired of brazen attempts made to pack the Supreme Court and to circumvent and destroy constitutional government, tired of seeing our domestic markets flooded with cheap foreignproduced competitive goods and agricultural products, tired of hearing politicians talk of overproduction and surpluses of food and milk when men and women are undernourished and babies throughout the land cry for more milk, tired of paying farmers and great corporations for taking land out of production and then spending hundreds of millions of dollars to irrigate more land to make more production, tired of blank-check appropriations, tired of a Congress that abdicated its constitutional functions and abjectly surrendered to the will of the Executive. In short the voters of Wisconsin clearly said: While we recognize the beautiful expressions of laudable purpose as exemplified by the New Deal and its Progressive copartners the net result is, after 6 years, we are still out of work. We are still losing our homes and farms through loss of income and inability to meet the rapidly mounting tax burden. We just are not getting anywhere, despite the President's oft-repeated statement that we are "on our way." The people of Wisconsin have come to believe that while we are headed some place, the way we are going, they no longer choose to follow.

Note the result of this November 8 declaration made by the voters of Wisconsin. The New Deal Senator was overwhelmingly retired to private life; the three New Deal yes-men Democratic Congressmen were overwhelmingly defeated and five of the seven New Deal Progressive Congressmen were likewise told that their services were not longer needed by the people of Wisconsin.

Not only this, but the entire La Follette dynasty in the State government was ignominiously retired under an overwhelming avalanche of votes.

This unusual and unexpected mandate coming from the great State of Wisconsin, that for 40 years has been the legislative guinea pig of the Nation and has been looked upon as the source of radical legislation, is indeed significant. It does not mean that we have been told to stop progress and true liberal thought, but it does mean that the people of Wisconsin demand a change toward a new objective that will bring results and relief from the intolerable conditions that still exist despite the wasteful and extravagant expenditures of public funds under the New Deal.

This mandate, therefore, places a grave responsibility upon the chosen Representatives from Wisconsin and as applied to the present resolution it demands that we give consideration to the thousands of farmers, small-business men, property owners, and workers who have valiantly fought to preserve their homes and to stay off of relief instead of devoting all of our time and energies in class appeals in behalf of the so-called underprivileged.

It means that the people of Wisconsin want honest, decent people who are unemployed, through no fault of their own, to be taken care of in a sane and humane manner. But it further means that they demand a change in the W. P. A. set-up and administration, and an investigation to determine whether the administrative structure of this great organization cannot be improved, permitting a larger portion of moneys appropriated to come into the hands of those really in need and entitled to it, rather than a diversion of a large part thereof for political purposes and the building of a top-heavy administrative personnel.

I shall vote to maintain W. P. A. in the present emergency because I know full well that the necessity exists throughout the Nation and because I know that in Wisconsin the municipalities charged with the duty of administering relief cannot absorb this W. P. A. problem without a complete break-down of local government.

If those who are now on W. P. A. are thrown back to the local governments to maintain on direct relief, the expenses incident thereto in Wisconsin will become a direct charge against all real property in the State and real estate can bear no increase in tax burden.

Under W. P. A. it can at least be said that the ultimate repayment will come from the direct and indirect taxes that all of the people, including the recipients of relief, will ultimately have to pay.

I trust that the appropriation may be limited so as to permit of an immediate investigation by the Congress and the establishment of rules and regulations by the Congress that will clarify, reorganize, and revitalize, if you please, this emergency department of the Government.

I further hope that the Congress, without delay, will attack the fundamental problems that are the cause of unemployment in this country and give encouragement to business, industry, and the investing public and through a constructive and helpful program advise the Nation that it can proceed full steam ahead with private works, with assurance of a continuity of helpful governmental attitude. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I realize this Committee has done the very best it could in bringing in a measure which would, as far as possible, comply with what the Members of Congress think is a sufficient amount to take care of the country's needs for this purpose. I am just as much in favor as any one of you of furnishing sufficient funds to provide work for those who are unable to find it in private industry. Just as long as the men and women of this country are unable to find work I am willing to support any reasonable measure which will help provide employment for them that is worth while. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion of this measure, and especially to the discussion of the W. P. A. program generally.

I would like to make one or two observations: First, it is a shame, a crime, and a disgrace that under our democratic form of government, after 6 years of trial, we have been unable to provide sufficient labor for men and women who are willing and want to work. It has been acknowledged by the Republicans and Democrats that money appropriated by this Congress to provide jobs for the unfortunate unemployed has been manipulated, mishandled, and in many instances deliberately wasted. No one can justify the mismanagement and misuse of the funds intended for these unfortunate people.

It has also been admitted on both sides of the aisle that in many cases those in authority have been responsible for the manipulation of W. P. A. funds for political purposes. The use of these funds in the hands of local political machines, whether new dealers, Democrats, or Republicans, must be stopped. This very thing is one of the severest criticisms that can be leveled at a great democracy.

Let me call your further attention to the fact that in all the discussion we have had on the floor during the 10 hours' debate—that those who propose this measure have not provided any means whereby W. P. A. funds are to be taken out of politics. There is nothing in this bill that would help to do it. They have told us that we have some 37,000 men and women employed in the administration of these funds. I do not know how much of these funds go to the men and women who are actually on relief, but the best figures I can get show that about 25 to 30 percent of the money does not actually go to those who are without work and cannot get it. Of course, these figures are approximate. But there are some 37,000 employees, many of whom receive handsome salaries, that are paid out of these funds, and who receive a larger share than they are entitled to from these appropriations.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I do not have time; I am sorry.

Why not begin by cutting the administration expenses and cutting them to the core? Why not cut the salaries of the thousands of political appointees who are receiving extravagant wages at the expenses of the fellow who barely gets enough to provide food and shelter for his family? We are not cutting that expenditure a bit; nothing is even said about it. In my judgment, we should do at least three things:

First. Once and for all, take the W. P. A. out of politics; make it a misdemeanor or a felony, if necessary, for anyone to use political power or authority directly or indirectly in connection with the disbursement of these funds.

Second. Let us reduce the administrative expenses while we are at it. Cut them to the core. Let us eliminate all waste and extravagance.

Third. Let us see that these funds are used for real, honest-to-goodness constructive purposes. Let us give these people jobs where they can earn a dollar by doing a dollar's worth of constructive work and have something to show for it. Let us make the people who are earning this money feel that they are doing something that is really worth while and that they are not being paid for just putting in their time. Let us quit boondoggling these funds. The people who provide them are entitled to have them spent in the most economic way possible, and the people who receive these funds and who need the money ought to have every dollar that can be provided for them. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, the resolution we have under consideration contains on page 2, in line 19, a proviso undertaking to avoid the effect of the President's Executive order of June 24 extending the merit system to certain agencies of the Government. I believe the committee had in mind only the W. P. A. when it put that provision in this resolution. I understand from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] that he has prepared an amendment which will protect employees in other agencies who are to be paid out of the funds appropriated in this resolution and in the resolution of similar purport passed last year.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is agreed to it will protect 25,000 employees not in the W. P. A.—10,000 in the Treasury Department who will be affected by the language now in this resolution, 200 in the War Department, 2,200 in the Interior Department, 400 in the Justice Department, 350 in the Navy Department, 14,000 in the Agriculture Department, 100 in the Commerce Department, 2,000 in the Labor Department, 2,600 in the General Accounting Office, 200 in the National Emergency Council, and 200 in the National Resources Committee. These people would be denied civil-service status under the Executive order if the language now in the resolution is adopted.

When the resolution comes to the amendment stage it is my purpose to offer an amendment striking out this proviso in order that the President's Executive order may operate as to all of the employees paid out of the funds appropriated in this resolution.

We have heard a great deal yesterday and today about politics in the W. P. A. I should like to ask those who have spoken on that subject how they propose to keep politics out of the W. P. A. as long as we permit appointment, employment, promotion, and supervision under this agency to be outside of the civil-service laws?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman believe that blanketing people into the civil service without competitive examinations is taking the W. P. A. out of politics? It seems to me it is just putting it in the political power of the people in charge of the administration, not taking it out of politics.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts knows my personal views about that matter. I prefer the competitive method.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the gentleman does.

Mr. RAMSPECK. However, we must be practical here. This is the best we can get. Under this Executive order no person will get civil-service status without passing a non-competitive examination and demonstrating his fitness for the position which he proposes to occupy.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Since 1884, when Grover Cleveland promulgated the first civil-service rules and regulations, every Republican President has blanketed into the civil service all the new agencies that have been created. This is only following the precedent of the Republican Presidents of the past.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sorry; I cannot yield further. I have only 5 minutes.

There is one matter about which I wish to disabuse the minds of the Members of the House. The gentleman from Virginia stated yesterday that his objection to civil service for these employees was that it would make the W. P. A. permanent. There is no such thing as a permanent job in the United States Government except as concerns United States judges. Civil-service employees have no more permanency than non-civil-service employees if the Congress abolishes the agency in which they are employed or the agency abolishes the job any particular employee may occupy. Giving the workers civil-service status does not make the agency permanent. It does not even make permanent the jobs they occupy. The jobs can be abolished just as can any other jobs.

If you want to take this agency out of politics, there is only one way I know of to do it and that is to place the employees under the compulsion of the civil-service law so the Commission itself can discharge them if they are found guilty of engaging in political activities.

I hope the Committee will vote with me when I offer my amendment to strike out this provisio. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I think we have failed to stress some of the benefits which we have received from the W. P. A. program. The building of thousands of miles of paved roads, of farm-to-market roads, the construction of streets and sidewalks, the building of sewers and waterworks systems in many of the towns and cities of this country are outstanding accomplishments of the Works Progress Administration which do have a lasting social and economic value which I think is a point which has been overlooked in the debate on this subject. [Applause.]

I was happy to see my good friend and colleague from Oregon stress the work that has been done with reference to the C. C. C., which is one of the outstanding accomplishments of this administration. Personally, I have been happy to see educational opportunity provided for hundreds of thousands of worthy boys and girls in this country through the National Youth Administration. I feel there has been a stimulation of business through the Works Progress Administration and I think these are benefits that all of us can recognize as being worth while.

Having pointed out these benefits, I call your attention to some of the mistakes which I think we have made with reference to the Works Progress Administration. I have heretofore said, and I repeat, that the mere appropriation of huge sums of money out of the Federal Treasury does not offer a permanent solution of the problem of unemployment in the United States. Furthermore, it brings about a growth of the public debt which is absolutely unhealthy. The Government credit is good at the present time; we want to keep it good; it must be kept good; but we cannot retain a healthful public confidence in our Government if we continue year after year to appropriate more money than we take in. This is an unsound business principle for the Government to engage upon as a permanent policy.

I, for one, have voted for these relief funds and I shall vote for this bill providing $725,000,000 for relief in this country, but at the same time I want to here make known the fact that I am perfectly willing to vote for whatever taxes are necessary to balance the entire Federal Budget as soon as we can possibly do so. This is the honest thing to do and it is the thing we have got to face or someone has got to face sooner or later.

I think, too, we have had too many career reliefers. There should be an overhauling of our entire set-up.

I feel there has been a discrimination in the expenditure of public funds against certain sections of the country. I also feel there has been a discrimination against certain sections of the country in the amount required of the sponsor to put up to carry out a W. P. A. project. For instance, the national average is 16 percent and yet my State, which is one of the so-called poorer States of the Union so far as wealth is concerned, puts up 20.9 percent. The great State of New York, which is the richest State in the Nation, puts up approximately 11 percent, which is below the national average, and yet when it comes to the payment of public funds to give relief, the great State of

New York, or the people who work there, receive two and a half times as much per person as in the State of Alabama.

I am one of those who voted to put a floor under wages and a ceiling upon hours in private business and industry of this country, and I may say here that it is sheer hypocrisy if these discriminations I have referred to in the expenditure of public funds are not recognized and remedied. We cannot lay down one policy for private business and private enterprise on the one hand with respect to hours and wages and then practice another insofar as the Federal Government is concerned.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES of Alabama. When I have finished my statement I shall be happy to yield to anyone.

I am a little bit astonished at some of the arithmetic used in the debate yesterday by some of my distinguished and lovable colleagues. We were told that by trimming this appropriation $150,000,000 at this time we would throw more than 1,000,000 people off the relief rolls; in other words, $725,000,000, if I get their arithmetic correctly, is to maintain approximately 2,000,000 on the relief rolls, whereas if we cut off $150,000,000 in the appropriation, would take off 1,000,000 people. I cannot understand that.

Furthermore, under this act we will have $725,000,000 available now, and I think the statement was inaccurate that we would put from 4,000,000 to 6,000,000 people off the relief rolls in want and hunger and in poverty in midwinter, if we appropriate $725,000,000 instead of $875,000,000, because the Works Progress Administration will have at its behest $725,000,000 to meet the situation.

I will let some of you newcomers in on a little secret. We are going to be here certainly until after June 30, and if the amount of money we are appropriating now is not sufficient to run us until June 30, you need not worry about additional requests being made to meet the situation, because such requests will be made and if the facts justify the requests we are willing to appropriate the necessary amount.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STARNES of Alabama. In a moment. What are some of the solutions of this problem? I do not offer any sure cure. I do not think anybody has a cure-all for this situation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Just let me finish my statement first. I think as a temporary solution we should require a matching by States and localities on a uniform basis. I for one will favor hereafter a policy which will require matching by States and permitting the States to administer the funds. I believe that security wages should be set up to encourage people to seek private employment when better wages are paid. For a permanent solution I favor the following approach: First, we should liquidate the Works Progress Administration as fast as time and circumstances will permit and provide for all unemployables by broadening the base of our Social Security Act. The Social Security Board is the proper place to get a nonpartisan and nonpolitical administration with reference to our unemployables in this country. If we have to place the cost on the taxpayers of this country, why not do it through a permanent agency we have set up already to handle social security for our American citizenship?

Second, I believe we should expand our social security insurance program to care for widows and orphans and wives and disabled people who are unemployable.

Third, I believe in a sound public-works program with a backlog of approved sound constructive public-works projects to be available to this Nation in an era of economic depression, so that we could accelerate the expenditure of Federal funds upon a sound basis upon projects of a lasting social and economic value to provide employment for those who are capable of being employed. In this connection the P. W. A. has done a magnificent job. Sponsor's contribution is uniform, wage scales sound, and private business has been stimulated.

Fourth, and finally, I believe in a legislative policy and a governmental policy which will encourage private business and labor to get together and work out a satisfactory solution or program for providing employment for the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I hold that it is the duty and responsibility of private business and industry to provide employment for American citizenship. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman has made a very able and effective presentation of the case, and I am sure that the House generally is in hearty accord with his suggestion that we dispose of this matter as quickly as conditions will permit, and when he asks as to the accuracy of the statistics, I know that he does it sincerely. If he will consult the hearings he will find those statistics were given us by the Department, and in giving them to the committee the witnesses were subjected to an exhaustive investigation and cross examination.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am answering the gentleman's question.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. But I did not ask a question. I yielded for a question by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then I am glad to give the gentleman information which he wants, and if he wishes further information, he has but to read the hearings and he will find an answer to every question he has asked, including the one as to why we should wait for further appropriations at this session.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I read the hearings, and I read the distinguished gentleman's statement, and I am still unable to use the same formula as a mathematical solution he used in reaching his conclusion.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES of Alabama. For a question.

Mr. SIROVICH. If an amendment is offered on the floor of the House this afternoon providing for the unemployed so far as unskilled workingmen, intermediaries, skilled and professional and technical work are concerned, providing for a minimum uniform wage throughout the United States on a differential of 25 percent, would the distinguished gentleman from Alabama vote for the $875,000,000 to equalize it?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. No. I think $725,000,000 is sufficient at the present time. I will vote for an amendment to equalize wages, but I will not vote to couple with it a provision that Congress grant additional funds.

Mr. SIROVICH. Then in other words, the gentleman— Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Oh, let me answer the question.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would be in favor of a policy of starvation wages?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Oh, that is untrue. I will vote for any amount necessary to provide food for the starving people in America and clothing for them, but I reserve the right to pass on the necessity for any given amount.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman has made a thoroughly sound and constructive address. I was impressed very much by his observation in regard to the discriminatory effect of W. P. A. wage scales as between States and sections. I wonder if the gentleman will give us the benefit of his opinion as to the proposition made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver] of a 25-percent differential. Would that meet the situation?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I think so. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver] has offered a sound approach to the solution of that problem.

Mr. LUDLOW. Does the gentleman think that is as good a remedy as could be chosen?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I do.

Mr. LUDLOW. I agree with the gentleman that it ought to be corrected.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. Does not the gentleman believe that it is true that the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sirovich], if applied to the $725,000,000, will go a long way toward making the $725,000,000 more sufficient than it would otherwise be?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Absolutely.

Before I close I want to say that most of the testimony before this committee—in fact, all of it, other than that by the present Administrator of W. P. A.—came from only three organizations, namely, the mayors of this country, the C. I. O., and the Workers' Alliance. I have not had a single request—and I am voting for the $725,000,000 appropriation—I have not had a single request from my district to vote for any sum for relief at this time. I have had no requests from the entire State of Alabama, except two of the organizations referred to, to vote for any appropriation. Not a single mayor has asked me to vote for any amount or any additional amount. The only two organizations I have heard from are the Workers' Alliance in Birmingham, Ala., and certain C. I. O. organizations.

So long as we permit the mayors and local officials to say how many of our people shall have relief, and the Federal Government has to furnish the bulk of the funds to care for them, you are going to have to cope with this problem. You will have to get a different system for handling it. [Applause.]

The following table furnished by the W. P. A. Administrator is illuminating and shows expenditures by States. It illustrates the discrimination made in allocating funds and the amount required of the sponsors:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the fact that this Congress every year has been called upon to vote staggering sums for the relief of unemployment is the most convincing evidence that could be adduced of the utter failure of the administration's recovery program.

According to the President's recent Budget message, nearly $28,000,000,000 will have been spent for recovery and relief by the end of the next fiscal year. If the unemployment problem had been cured in 6 years' effort on the part of the administration, the pending bill would not be necessary. But it has not been cured, and so long as the administration fails to cure it relief must be continued.

It is obvious by now that the Roosevelt administration will never solve the problem during its incumbency. In 6 years it has never put forward a real recovery program.

Relief measures, while necessary as a temporary expedient, do not cure unemployment. They do not put men back to work.

The results of the last election are an indication of the growing despair of those on relief of ever securing permanent employment so long as the present administration remains in power. They are an indication also that the taxpayers of the country, while they do not begrudge the unemployed the relief that is being given them, do hold the administration responsible for the fact that the relief is still necessary. Likewise, they are an indication that the electorate in general look with extreme disfavor upon the administration's misuse of relief funds for political purposes.

The administration of relief under the present set-up has been nothing short of a national scandal. Money appropriated for human needs has been used to build up a political machine and entrench the present administration in office.

An investigation of this matter by a committee of the Senate has resulted in shocking revelations which stand as an indictment of the Administration's relief methods. Let me quote just one paragraph from the so-called Sheppard committee's report:

The committee in the course of its work has been compelled to give much of its attention to charges of undue political activity in connection with the administration and conduct of the Works Progress Administration in certain States. While many of those charges, after investigation, were not sustained, the committee, nevertheless, finds that there has been in several States, in many forms, unjustifiable political activity in connection with the Works Progress Administration in such States. The committee believes that funds appropriated by Congress for the relief of those in need and in distress have been, in many instances, diverted from those high purposes to political needs. The committee condemns this conduct and recommends to the Senate that legislation be prepared to make impossible, so far as legislation can do so, further offenses of this character.

Mr. Chairman, this is a pretty strong indictment, coming from a committee composed of four Democrats and only one Republican, all of whom signed the committee report.

So when we are told by Members on the other side— Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; not at this time.

So when we are told by Members on the other side that there is no political feature connected with the administration of W. P. A., let us refer them from now on constantly to the so-called Sheppard report.

Now, the President's action in transferring the head of the W. P. A. along with his principal assistant to other positions is simply an attempt to take the sting out of the forthcoming investigation of the handling of relief.

Everyone else, of course, has known for a long time that matters were not conducted as they should be, but the President apparently was content with their methods. Not only was he content with them but he used the power of his office to influence the rejection of the so-called Hatch amendment as proposed in the other body last year, which would have provided punishment for the use of relief funds for partisan purposes.

Mr. Chairman, heretofore, when the annual relief bills have come up the Republican minority have consistently supported an amendment proposing to transfer the actual administration of Federal relief funds to nonpartisan local boards. Such an amendment has usually been sponsored by our late beloved colleague the Honorable Robert L. Bacon, whose untimely death deprived this House of one of its ablest Members.

I should very much like to see the amendment considered in connection with the pending bill. However, in view of the emergency that exists, due to the exhaustion of present relief funds, it is necessary to vote a lump-sum appropriation once more to be administered in the usual manner.

Every time these bills have come up we have been told that there is not time to put the machinery in operation that would be required by the Bacon amendment. There is plenty of time now, however, to change the method of distributing relief if consideration is given to the question before the general relief bill for 1940 is taken up—the measure that must come up in Congress starting when this appropriation is exhausted. Let the committee in charge now get under way with the principle involved in the Bacon amendment.

The so-called Bacon amendment embraces the Republican minority's position on the question of relief. Let me just explain its provisions briefly.

Under the amendment the Federal Government would continue to bear the bulk of the relief load, but the States would be required to put up 25 cents for each $1 of aid granted by the Federal Government. The effect of the amendment would be to increase the total appropriation for relief by the amount of the State contribution.

The Federal appropriation would be allocated by a bipartisan Federal board upon the basis of the number of unemployed in each State, population, financial resources, and living costs. The money would be turned over to the States when they set up bipartisan local boards to administer the funds. This would eliminate politics from relief and insure those in need of fairer treatment and a larger percentage of the money appropriated for them. Moreover, it would permit the elimination of the present Federal relief bureaucracy which requires an overhead of $125,000,000 a year to

I firmly believe that the great majority of the people of this country, including those receiving relief, favor the adoption of the principle of the Bacon amendment. I myself feel very strongly on the subject, and I sincerely regret that because of the emergency character of the present bill, consideration cannot be given to a change in relief methods at this time. However, the question is certain to be raised in connection with the general relief bill for next year.

About the only argument which has been advanced in opposition to the amendment by administration leaders is that we are not going to be permanently in the relief business, and therefore there is no need to change the existing set-up. I concede that we are not going to be permanently in the relief business, because very soon the people are going to restore to power the party which can and will eliminate the necessity for relief. But so far as this administration is concerned, it is now permanently in the relief business, and it will continue to be in the relief business as long as it is in

If there is to be anything approaching permanency in Federal relief grants, then they should be administered in the manner proposed by the Republican minority under the so-called Bacon amendment. We of the minority are not necessarily wedded to the details of that amendment, as heretofore proposed, but we very definitely favor the principle of returning the actual administration of relief funds to the States through nonpartisan local boards.

The real reason why the administration does not want to give up control over relief is that it would then lose its influence over thousands of votes. That is the answer, and there is no denying it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman feel that the elimination of men 65 years old from the W. P. A. rolls is a very cruel thing? They cannot secure employment outside, yet they are perfectly able to do W.P.A. work, office work.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts has touched on one of the details that, of course, is a very serious objection to the present method of administering the

Mr. Chairman, I would like to devote my remaining time to a discussion of why it is still necessary to appropriate billions for relief after 6 years of the New Deal. The answer to that question can perhaps be summarized in one sentence: Because the President has turned his back on the New Deal platform of 1932 and everything for which he stood before he was elected President. In his economy message of March 10, 1933, he did take one step toward carrying out his promises, but he soon forgot all about the warnings he uttered in that great message.

Why, Mr. Chairman, are there still ten or twelve million unemployed? Why are one-sixth of our people dependent upon relief? Let me quote from the President's economy message of 1933.

I paraphrase it as he would have had to deliver it today: For 9 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy.

For the fiscal year 1931 the deficit was $481,000,000.
For the fiscal year 1932 it was $2,529,000,000.
For the fiscal year 1933 it was $1,784,000,000. For the fiscal year 1934 it was $2,895,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1935 it was $3,210,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1936 it was $4,550,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1937 it was $3,148,000,000. For the fiscal year 1938 it was $1,384,000,000.

For the fiscal year 1939 it will probably exceed $3,972,000,000. For the fiscal year 1940, based on my own budget estimates, the deficit will probably exceed $3,326,000,000 unless immediate action

Thus, we shall have piled up an accumulated deficit of $27,-279,000,000.

Now, to go on with the original message of March 10, 1933:

With the utmost seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this fact upon our national economy. It has contributed to the recent collapse of our banking structure. It has accentuated the stagnation of the economic life of our people. It has added to the ranks of the unemployed. Our Government's house is not in order and for many reasons no effective action has been taken to restore it to order.

It should be remembered that when the President originally delivered this message, he was speaking about an accumulated deficit of five billions, and not the present accumulated deficit of twenty-seven billions.

In this last paragraph just quoted lies the answer to the question: "Why are there still ten or twelve million unemployed?" The President said in 1933 that an accumulated deficit of five billions had added to the ranks of the unemployed. Such being the case, it is not unreasonable to suppose that an accumulated deficit of twenty-seven billions would have an even more profound effect upon the ranks of the unemployed. Of course, the effect is largely indirect; it results from the fact that the accumulated deficits cause fear and uncertainty as to the future.

In this connection, let me quote just one more passage from the President's economy message of 1933:

Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government Upon the unimpaired credit of the United States Government rest the safety of deposits, the security of insurance policies, the activity of industrial enterprises, the value of our agricultural products, and the availability of employment. The credit of the United States Government definitely affects these fundamental human values. It, therefore, becomes our first concern to make secure the foundation. National recovery depends upon it.

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

When the President took office in 1933 the national debt was slightly less than twenty-one billions. Today it stands at the staggering and unprecedented total of thirty-nine and one-half billions, and by the end of the fiscal year 1940 it will reach forty-four and one-half billions.

We need look no further in searching for reasons for the present number of unemployed and for the failure to achieve economic recovery. Yet there are other reasons, such as the burdensome and repressive taxes which have been imposed, which, great as they are, do not begin to cover the extravagant expenditures of the New Deal. The administration's harassing restrictions on business have been another factor. The trade-treaty program, under which our tariffs on competitive foreign products are being drastically reduced, is another important factor, since it results in taking work away from our own people and giving it to men and women in other countries. Not the least of the factors retarding recovery have been the President's efforts to centralize authority in his own hands and to gain control over the courts.

Mr. Chairman, the Bible tells us:

Charity shall cover the multitude of sins. (1 Peter 4: 8.)

The New Deal, through its relief program, certainly is trying to cover its sins of omission in failing to bring about reemployment. But the unemployed cannot be fooled indefinitely. They are beginning to realize that the New Deal offers them no hope.

I shall conclude, Mr. Chairman, by summarizing my position on the bill:

First. As a matter of ordinary humanity I shall vote to continue giving relief to the unfortunate victims of the New Deal's job-destroying policies.

Second. However, I am strongly opposed to the continuation of the present costly and reprehensible method of directing the relief program from Washington as an adjunct of the New Deal political machine.

Third. As an alternative I favor the administration of Federal relief funds through nonpartisan local boards.

Fourth. What the unemployed need is not more and more relief, but the elimination of the necessity for relief by encouraging, rather than discouraging, the creation of jobs in private industry.

In his remarks of yesterday, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] expressed the opinion that private industry should take up a large part of the slack in unemployment. Of course, the gentleman knows that businessmen would be overjoyed to take on every one of the unemployed if there were sufficient demand for their products. They fully realize what this administration apparently does not realize, namely, that wealth is created only by production, not by nonproduction.

There is nothing in this bill to encourage private industry to go forward. But it is possible for the administration to bring about such encouragement without spending a single additional dollar of the taxpayers' money. Here are a few suggestions:

First. Eliminate waste and extravagance.

Second. Revise the tax structure, giving full recognition to the law of diminishing returns.

Third. Stop the deficits and make provision for orderly retirement of the public debt.

Fourth. Remove the hampering restrictions from business. Fifth. Repeal the Trade Agreements Act, or at least confine duty reductions and concessions to noncompetitive articles.

Sixth. Encourage cooperation between capital and labor. Seventh. Let Congress resume its constitutional functions. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, we are now in the midst of the discussion of a problem that is very vital to democracy and economic freedom, and the people of this Nation are pinning their faith on the intelligence and fighting qualities of the men and women of Congress.

We of the Democratic faith believe that we are laying the foundation for a finer, cleaner, saner, and fairer democracy with a more just and more equitable distribution of prosperity and we shall all bear the torch and lead the van in the neverending fight to progress.

We all know that the work of recovery is by no means complete. Our opponents are harping on an unbalanced Budget. Nobody denies the importance and desirability of a balanced Budget. It is simple, good, sound business sense to balance a budget, but the extraordinary situation which has existed and still exists in this Nation makes it impossible to balance the Budget at this time. Our opponents are continually spreading gloom of the great amount of money being expended by the Democratic administration and fail to see the good which has been brought about by the expenditure of this money.

The Democratic administration spends money to conserve our natural and human resources. If we do not spend enough to conserve them they will be lost to the people of this country-water power, rich soils, forests, minerals, oil, and human resources, health, energy, skill, morale, and brain power. Should we lose this national wealth, which once destroyed can never be regained? Should we let our country be ruined because it costs money to save it? These are the questions that we of Congress must decide.

The relief appropriations are subject to violent attacks. Nobody is happy at the idea of continuing the drain on the Treasury of the United States as is involved in these billions to be spent on the vast army of people rendered destitute by reason of unemployment, but what else is there to do? A dictatorial government such as we see in Germany, Italy, and Russia can muster the unemployed into the army and by regimentation of business can, for a time at least, abolish unemployment, but a democracy mindful of the people's liberty and rights abhors such systems and so adopts the alternative of relief appropriations. What other course is possible?

The question resolves around the amount of money that is to be expended. It is my contention that the committee has made a horrible mistake in reducing the amount recommended by the Budget by $150,000,000. When the question is presented on the floor of this House I shall vote to restore the one hundred and fifty million.

I have come from a district where there are thousands upon thousands of men and women employed on work relief. These men and women are not there through their own fault but through the fault of those whose short-sightedness brought about economic chaos.

I have heard many statements during this debate charging men and women responsible for the administration of this program with graft and corruption. They have not been able at any time to show any major scandal. Inasmuch as the opposition has raised the question of politics with regard to relief, I consider it my duty to present some facts to you and let you determine who has been playing politics with relief.

I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania yesterday plead eloquently and say that relief should not be contaminated with slimy and filthy politics. He may know what slimy and filthy politics is because I understand he comes from a State, from the party that was controlled by the Vare machine. I do not consider politics slimy and filthy. The politics that I have been connected with cannot be described by those adjectives. I know that the politics that most of the Members of this House are connected with cannot be described with those adjectives.

But during the last campaign certain things happened that bear scrutiny. The opposition claims that the Democratic administration has used the W. P. A. for political purposes, and still in those States where the W. P. A. was very prominent Republicans were sent to this House replacing Democrats. If the W. P. A. was so strong politically, if the W. P. A. was used for politics, then by virtue of statistics was not it Republican politics that was being played because it was Republicans that were elected where the W. P. A. was strongest?

I cite, for instance, the three Lake States of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. In furtherance of my argument. I hold in my hand an advertisement that was run in one of the newspapers of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan during the last campaign. This ad was run in the Eleventh District of Michigan, the district next to mine. I want you to know also that there were some 40,000 pamphlets of the same type spread and even worse politically by the Republican organization on every W. P. A. project by W. P. A. workers who were paid with Republican funds in my

In the Escanaba Press, a paper published in the Eleventh District of Michigan, here is what was advertised:

Voters, ride to the polls. Phone 914, Republican headquarters. (Paid political advertisement.)

ATTENTION! W. P. A. WORKERS!

The $44 a month minmum wage paid to W. P. A. workers in this District of Michigan is the lowest paid anywhere in the North Central States. In the Lower Peninsula and in the State of North Central States. In the Lower Pennsula and in the State of Ohio, our neighbor on the south, the minimum W. P. A. wage is $60 per month. The workers there are the same as the workers here. The cost of living there is the same as here. Yet those people are getting $60 and you are getting $44.

Where was Congressman Luecke when the minimum wage was being set at $60 in lower Michigan and $44 up here?

Your Congressman's neglect has cost you exactly $16 per month for the lest 3 years for the last 3 years. Vote for Fren Bradley for Congress on the Republican ticket. He will see that the W. P. A. men get the same treatment in this district as they are getting in other places. And Bradley will not force you to pay for his political campaigns either.

Take the politics out of relief.

Vote Republican.

This advertisement paid for and sponsored by a committee of W. P. A. workers.

You will note at the top of this advertisement is an ad by the Republican headquarters offering free rides.

They led the voters to believe they were going to pay the W. P. A. workers $60 a month, raise them up from $44 a month, when they knew that they were playing the part of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. They are coming down here now asking that the appropriation be cut down. During the campaign, however, they were promising the W. P. A. workers to give them $60 or $75 a month. I know my opponent offered $75 a month when he knew it was just a bait for votes. The same was done in the Eleventh District, Michigan, where a Republican was elected.

They say further in this advertisement:

Take the politics out of relief. Vote Republican. This advertisement paid for and sponsored by a committee of W. P. A. workers.

I charge that it was not paid for by the W. P. A. workers but was paid out of the slush fund of the Republican Party. Who was playing politics with relief?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Who was it that went out into the highways and the byways and offered these unsuspecting people as high as $75 a month? Some of the same men now come on the floor of this House and ask that the appropriation be cut. If the appropriation is cut, you will reduce the wage and the number on relief.

Oh, let us cut out this Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde stuff!

During the campaign certain things happened that would bear scrutiny. The opposition claims that the Democratic administration used the W. P. A. for political purposes. Notwithstanding that statement, in those States where the W. P. A. was most prominent, Republicans were sent to this House, replacing Democrats.

In closing may I also say there was only one major scandal in my district, and I have here in my hand the affidavit covering the facts. One John Burt was placed on the W. P. A. rolls through the Republican influence of my political opponent for a definite purpose. The files were rifled by him for the Republican organization, and here is evidence where a Republican on the W. P. A. sold W. P. A. jobs for $15 apiece. Who was responsible for the scandals in the W. P. A.? Not a Democrat but an admitted Republican, who was given a job because he was supposed to be in need. If they will sneak in and sell jobs now, what would they do if they were in charge? [Applause.]

In closing let me say that if the amount requested by the Bureau of the Budget is reduced, there will be widespread suffering in my district and throughout the whole north country, where there is below-zero weather, where men and women need clothing and need food.

Should we who believe that we should reduce human suffering cut down on the amount of money that is necessary to relieve that suffering? Could any one of you men and women in this House begin to feed a family on $44 a month?

You Republicans who raided the W. P. A. projects, advertised in the newspapers, and led the W. P. A. workers to believe that they were going to get an increase in pay, are now coming down here and arguing against an appropriation sufficient to even keep them on at their present rate of pay. I believe that pay should be increased to a point where men and women could have at least the necessities of life, and I challenge you, especially you Republican Members who led the people to believe that you were going to increase their wages—I want you to show your good faith now, if you ever had any, and when the time comes to cast your vote cast it for the increased appropriation so that these unfortunate people can be properly cared for. Oh, but you will not, because none of you ever intended to do that.

At the proper time I will offer an amendment that will guarantee these men and women at least the necessities of life. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the last Congress appropriated a sufficient amount of money to take adequate care of relief in this country up to the 4th of March. The reason we are now considering this problem is because the funds were dissipated for corrupt political purposes.

Last year the New York Times compiled figures relating to relief in New York City. While this is an unofficial survey, it does show the extent of a domestic break-down that is typical of cities throughout the Nation. This survey demonstrates the extent to which a large proportion of the public is relying on public funds for support, for example, in New York City:

W. P. A. relief	471, 200
Home relief	567, 300
City government jobs	155, 486
Federal jobs	50,000
State government jobs	8,796
City pensions	23,959
Unemployment insurance	100,000
In hospitals, public expense	24, 750
In jail, public expense	6,700
Dependent children, blind, aged	116,000

It is estimated by the Times that several dependents are maintained by each Government job or pension, which brings the gross total to 2,200,000. To put it another way, 29 percent of New York City's population is now supported by the Government.

Next let us turn to the question of taxation as we consider this relief bill calling for $725,000,000. In Fortune of December 1937 there appears this statement:

The annual tax bill of the United States is now in the neighborhood of $12,000,000,000. That is almost $100 a year apiece for every man, woman, and child in the Nation. It is almost $400 apiece for every head of a family. It is one-fifth of the national income. It is the biggest tax bill in the world. * * * As a matter of fact, the average American does not even realize that 20 cents out of every dollar he earns goes to taxes of one sort or another, Federal, State, or local.

Mr. Chairman, there will be no end to this ever-increasing crushing load for relief until its dispensation is taken out of the hands of wasteful, corrupt politicians and placed in charge of nonpartisan local boards under State supervision. The sordid story of waste and corruption in the administration of relief is now being revealed at the other end of the Capitol. The use made of relief funds to buy, bribe, and corrupt the voters in the recent election has no parallel in history except under the tyrannical and dishonest rule of King James and Charles I.

I have voted against previous relief appropriation bills, not because I am opposed to relief, but as a protest against the use of relief funds for corrupt political purposes. Unless this ill is so amended as to insure State and local administration of these funds, I shall vote against this measure. There is no justification for any Member of the House to continue to bleed the taxpayers white to fatten the pockets of politicians and by so doing deprive the innocent victims of this depression of what a generous public would gladly bestow upon them. This issue of honesty in the administration of relief may as well be settled now as later.

Under State and local administration of relief those in need will receive it, while the mountebanks, the chiselers, and the corrupt politicians will be prevented from diverting the funds to illegitimate ends.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolles].

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, the great tragedy of relief is found in the miles of closed factories wherever you may go in any city of the United States. Since 1929, 2,744 factories have been closed in Wisconsin. There are about 100,000 less factories operating in the United States today than in 1929. Through the methods of the New Deal and the legislation that it has passed, through penalizing taxation and other acts, industries today are no longer able to operate in the way they formerly did. Small factory after small factory died under the blasts of the Blue Eagle. There are 100 factories in two great industrial cities in one county I represent that employ an army of men and women under normal circumstances. Between surplus-profits taxes, penalizing income taxes, and no indication on the part of the Government of this Nation to give industry confidence in operation, these plants have either closed or curtailed production. We have thus destroyed buying power and source of income.

After examining this relief proposition, and as an editor of a newspaper having been in favor of the W. P. A. fund when last passed under the promise that by March 4 these industries would be opened and employment would come to a normal base, I gave my most hearty approval. I expect to vote for a sum that will take care of relief of the people who have been so viciously treated. We cannot take away from that form of relief until we substitute something else. If there had been no waste in its administration, if the W. P. A. had not been used as a political reserve corps for the New Deal, if hundreds who were not eligible for relief had not been paid from those funds, I feel certain we would still have enough money to carry on far beyond January 31 this year. The once prophet of the Democratic Party, now abandoned and utterly discredited by the New Deal, Thomas Jefferson, with the spirit of a Jeremiah, said:

In every government on earth is some trace of human weakness. some germ of corruption and degeneracy, which cunning will discover, and wickedness insensibly open, cultivate, and improve. cover, and wickedness insensibly open, cultivate, and improve. Every government degenerates when trusted to the rulers of the people alone. The people themselves, therefore, are its own safe depositories.

Oh, yes; Jefferson said something else, which has been voiced on the Democratic side, from which I heard several very excellent Republican speeches here this morning. He talked of debt and economy, which made the Sage of Monticello an unquotable person at the other end of the avenue.

There is a great difference in the manner of operating W. P. A. I ask to revise and extend my remarks by printing an editorial from the Janesville Daily Gazette of January 11, 1939, as follows:

W. P. A.'S LEANING SHOVELS

A traveler came into Janesville the other day and remarked that he had just arrived from Milwaukee. Near the Milwaukee city limits in a field was a forest of shovels, all leaning at gentle angles, and each supported by a reclining W. P. A. worker.

There was, of course, nothing new in that part of the story. It

There was, of course, nothing new in that part of the story. It wouldn't even have been worth noting had not the man continued in somewhat this language: "When I came into Janesville I saw another forest of shovels, but there was great activity in the forest, the handles were moving with regularity, and each movement of the handle brought from the soil a sizeable load of dirt."

What could have made the difference? That was what the Milwaukee man wanted to know, and here was our answer:
"Whether on the W. B. A correct we there combination of the New

"Whether on the W. P. A. or any other combination of the New Deal alphabet, the workman is pretty likely to react to conditions as he finds them. Mostly he finds a bureaucratic political regime which is much more interested in his vote than his work, and that is why the W. P. A. has gained an unsavory reputation, the odor of which it shares with its political sponsors.

"In Janesville the situation is different. The W. P. A. worker sees a great public work laid out for him; he catches the contagion of honest devotion to accomplishment from the city officials, who have no political axes to grind. He joins with his comrades in the happy task of delivering a full day's work for his pay. "That, mister, is why they lean into the shovels in Janesville instead of on them; and if you want to read between the lines, there, too, is the answer to the rest of your question."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no Member of this House in my desire or willingness to vote for any needed appropriation to care for those who need and want work. have just one thought in the discussion and argument that has been taking place in the House for the last 2 days, and that is to express the hope that somewhere in this bill there be written regulations which will make sure that those who should not be on the W. P. A. rolls will be purged from those rolls. [Applause.]

I am sure that in my State of Connecticut there are hundreds of such cases on the rolls. I know of two cases, one of which involved a man who had a full-time, 44 hours a week job in a munition factory and he was on the W. P. A. rolls as a night watchman. Those are the things that I hope will be corrected by writing into this act language which will prevent such occurrences.

We campaigned in Connecticut for a cleaning up of the W. P. A., for a return to State administration and supervision of relief. I urge those Members of this House who believe this cannot be administered by the State without the injection of politics to come to my office and observe the record of the Connecticut Emergency Relief Commission, a nonpartisan commission appointed by a Democratic Governor. This is a commission composed of businessmen who frequently met and supervised the spending of the emergency relief money until the W. P. A. came into the State.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, the amount of $875,000,000 carried in the relief bill before us seems to be greater than is actually needed to take care of the W. P. A. workers. However, the amount is not so important as the methods that have been used in the past, and which no doubt will continue until some drastic change is made in administering this relief.

In the first place, I believe the rate of pay should be the same to all in the locality and that the man with the pick and shovel should receive as much as the white-collar man who knows little about his job.

In my district we have men in charge of work relief receiving a much higher salary than the men who are doing the work, and in many instances these men are not as competent as many of the workers, and, moreover, they do not need the job. They are political appointees pure and simple and they hamper rather than help the work along because of their lack of knowledge of the work they are doing, which, in a great part, is the building of highways. For this work we have men elected in every town to supervise and carry on the construction of roads; they are competent men; yet, when a W. P. A. project is started in a town and the town machinery is tied up with the job, the W. P. A. officials insist on appointing some faithful Democrat to oversee the job, and in most cases this man knows little or nothing about constructing highways. Under this system it takes much longer to complete a job and the road is poorer when it is completed than it would be if the superintendent of highways supervised the work of constructing the highway.

It would be a saving of W. P. A. funds, as the superintendent of highways is paid by the town, and more needy persons could be given work with the same amount of money, providing this was not controlled by a political machine. Before election the higher-up officials come around to these men and tell them how they shall vote on election day if they intend to hold their job. They watch them very closely to see that they do vote the Democratic ticket. However, the W. P. A. workers should not be made to suffer by the unscrupulous acts of these political bosses.

I believe work relief should be returned to the States and the localities; that the politicians who do not need a job should be eliminated and work given only to the men who need the work. If the funds were to flow through the ordinary channels of elected officials, we could carry on our work with half the money that is now expended for work relief and take care of our people who need work in the rural counties.

Money is wasted right and left in our highway construction, and, I believe, in other construction, on account of the incompetent supervision of the work. They have no one to answer to, and this, taken with their political activities, makes a very disgraceful mess of work relief. As I have said before, I believe with half the money expended directly through the State, town, and counties the people could be better taken care of and more efficient work would be done.

Back in the days when the Red Cross distributed the supply of flour, pork, and other foods, and clothing made from the cotton turned over by the Government, people could be supported at a very reasonable price. Now, with the Surplus Commodities Corporation, they ship the locality whatever they seem to have the most of. They may get potatoes when they need clothing, they may get butter when they need flour, they may get a large shipment of cheese when they need flour and potatoes, and the lack of efficiency keeps the whole thing in a turmoil and the poor seldom have the right commodity.

During the latter part of the administration of President Hoover he had turned over to the Red Cross wheat for milling, making flour for the needy, and cotton for making clothes for them. With flour and clothing it was not hard to take care of the people in the localities and I hope that We may return to those days and let the Red Cross administer the relief to the people in need.

We have kept on spending for nearly 6 years, just doling out relief money and we find ourselves worse off than we were 6 years ago. There are no more jobs for we still have some 13,000,000 people unemployed and we have an enormous increase in the national debt.

It would seem to me that it is time that we considered a change and let the local elected officials carry on this work with the Government furnishing a reasonable amount of assistance to do it.

While this plan of the President has been somewhat successful politically, the people seem to have turned against it, as they no doubt should, and will continue to oppose these plans of using the taxpayers' money for political purposes. Until such time as the Government stops harassing business and tax them out of existence we cannot look for much improvement in industry. If the President would let it be known to the business world that he is going to stop trying to hamstring them, the businessmen of the Nation could then go ahead and give real jobs to the unemployed and we could stop this dole. Confidence is what is needed.

All we of the minority can do is to protest and point the way. I believe what I have suggested with regard to returning funds to the States to expend through normal channels would go a long way toward helping solve the problem of unemployment, and that cooperation with the businessmen, or at least letting them alone, we could return to the good old days of Calvin Coolidge.

I intend to vote for this bill if the reduced amount proposed by the committee prevails, for many are in need and there is little time to amend the law now. However, I shall work for a return of work relief to the States, with such appropriations from the Government as may be needed and available for assistance to the States.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Casey].

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I assume that every Member of this House will subscribe to the proposition that it is the duty of this Government to take care of those who through no fault of their own are out of work. If that be so, the question comes down to a matter of the method to be used. The only legitimate argument against granting a full appropriation would be the argument to cut and reduce taxes.

I have heard a great deal said by Republicans and Democrats with reference to why we should reduce the amount of $875,000,000 which the administration asks.

It has resolved itself into arguments about communism and about the appointments of Frankfurter, Murphy, and Hopkins. It has seemed to me to have been merely a lot of political gossip that has confused the issue.

Our duty is clear. I favor the reduction of taxes. I yield to no man in my desire to reduce taxes. However, I decry the injection of politics into this discussion. I also question the intellectual honesty of the Republican objections to the appropriation of $875,000,000. You all know that during the last campaign, at least in New England, the Republicans ran upon a platform of favoring the Townsendites. How do they expect to carry in one hand the emblem of reduced taxes and in the other the torch of the 2-percent transaction tax? I question their sincerity. I do not believe they are sincere with the Townsendites. I for one am willing to vote to bring that bill on the floor in order to test their good faith and put them on record. [Applause.]

I have listened this morning to Republicans manifest their sympathy for people over 65 years of age. They have used weasel words, insincere words, words of sympathy, in order to catch votes. You cannot keep the men and women over 65 on the rolls unless you keep this appropriation at $875,000,000. If you are a friend of the men and women over 65, if you want to see them employed, you will vote for a $875,000,000 appropriation. That is a test of whether or not you are friendly with them.

Now, we are faced with this situation: We have a Works Progress Administration run as efficiently as any private business in this country. I have the utmost respect for Harry Hopkins. I believe he is a man of great ability. You do not question his personal integrity or his personal honesty. I, who know how this Administration has been run in Massachusetts, say that the cost of administration of W. P. A. has been kept at a minimum in order that as much as possible of the dollar for relief may go to the man at the bottom.

Sympathy for those on relief is manifested in so many ways. We are here to consider the report which shows how much each dollar will do in the way of giving employment to the men and women. If $875,000,000 is appropriated, there will be a normal reduction in the W. P. A. rolls by June from 3,000,000 to 2,700,000. If you vote for the $725,000,000 appropriation, you will have a reduction to 1,930,000 by June, a decrease of 800,000 in the number of men and women on the W. P. A. rolls; and this country cannot stand such a violent decrease. By that decrease you will not only put out of employment the 800,000 men and women who will be dropped from the W. P. A. rolls but you will inflict suffering and misery and hardship upon those dependent upon them, an additional 3,000,000 of our citizens.

Of course, the W. P. A. is run by a national W. P. A. administration. You who call for a separation of this administration into 48 divisions will have to convince me that 48 units working separately can do this job more cheaply and more efficiently than one national unit which has had the benefit of experience. Why, as far as local authorities are concerned, the W. P. A. is a local proposition now to a great extent. It is the local authorities in the towns and in the cities who set up the specifications for the kind of projects they want. It is the local authorities in the towns and in the cities who certify the men they want for relief.

I hope you do not take the bread out of the mouths of these hundreds of thousands of people who will have to be dropped from the rolls unless you give them the full appropriation of $875,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Patrick].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, there is one question we should think over before we vote. Much has been said here about partisan matters. I believe we can remove that feature from consideration. I do not see why on earth so many things of that character have been said. This resolution will not be in effect after the last of June. No matter how many iniquities may have been practiced, let us not visit the penalty for them upon the heads of the hungry and the needy. There is no national election between now and the first of next July; therefore, the charges that are played upon cannot obtain, and that argument goes out the window.

This seems to be the last mile. If the idea of priming the pump was correct in the beginning—the analogy is not complete, of course—then unless we go the last mile, until we make the priming meet the body of the flow desired, the whole priming program may fall down.

I know the Democrats do not want us to degenerate into a tax-ridden, hopeless nation. The Republicans do not want people to go hungry in the cold of the winter. I am afraid that we can make a mistake.

The suggested cut was $150,000,000. On what is that based; by what measure, what line, or in what compass; by what enclosure do they encase their logic? Is that figure merely an arbitrary one that gives them the opportunity to say they are making some cut in the appropriation? Until I see what it is, until I see whether or not the first and original theory of pump priming was in error, I shall be forced to go the last mile. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 18 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Robston].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, we have before us a deficiency appropriation measure calling for $750,-000,000 to carry on relief for the balance of this fiscal year. Congress before it adjourned in June appropriated over $12,-000,000,000 for relief and all other purposes for this same fiscal year ending June 30, 1939. The President called for an additional $875,000,000, but the Appropriations Committee of the House, which is made up largely of Democrats, brought in this bill for $750,000,000. The relief problem is a vital and pressing problem. This large sum may not have been necessary if the W. P. A. had not engaged so actively in politics in Kentucky and throughout the Nation during 1938. The President's message delivered in person to the House and Senate did not bring much encouragement to either agriculture, industry, the millions of unemployed, or the needy of our coun-There was scarcely a word of comfort in his message for either of these groups. The greater portion of his message was devoted to foreign affairs and to the threat that we were about to be involved in another World War. This war scare in my opinion was really a smoke screen to cover up conditions in our own country and take the minds of the people of this Nation off of their sad plight. If the President had devoted more time to our domestic problems and less time to foreign affairs, I am sure it would have been more helpful to all of us. The President, however, did emphasize in his message that we should continue to borrow and waste and spend more and more. Was this good advice in view of our present economic and financial condition?

UNSOUND ADVICE AND POLICIES

He has already called on us to appropriate during this session of Congress more than $10,000,000,000. Of course, other demands will be made before the end of this session. If we appropriate this ten or more billion dollars and no more, then the Congresses under him will have appropriated for the 7 years of his administration more than $66,000,000,-000. When we realize that only a little over $32,000,000,000 were appropriated by all the Congresses in the 124 years from George Washington down to Woodrow Wilson, we can see at once what the New Dealers are doing to our country. With less than half of that amount of money in 124 years we paid off the debt of the Revolution, fought all of our wars except the World War, acquired all of the territory we ever bought, dug the Panama Canal, spent billions in improving our rivers, harbors, and highways, carried on all the expenses of our Government, and paid the pensions due the veterans and their dependents. But, with the $56,-000,000,000 that was appropriated up to June 1938, and that the administration has been spending what results have been accomplished? There are now 3,000,000 on W. P. A. There are at least 10,000,000 more unemployed workers. Car loadings last week were 24 percent less than they were the corresponding week in 1937. There are less railroad workers now than there has ever been in 50 years. There are less coal miners busy now than there has been in 40 or 50 years. Farm prices have come down and down until they are now only about half or a third what they were in 1937. Business is stagnated. The national debt, if we appropriate this Congress what the President has asked, will go beyond $45,000,000,000.

The President, running true to form, has given Congress and the country to understand that taxes will be increased. This administration has never failed to create more deficits, more debts, and increase taxes at each and every Congress. The credit of the Nation is threatened. The economic outlook is depressing. For this condition the country can thank the new dealers and their unwise, unworkable, and un-American policies.

REPUBLICANS FAVOR RELIEF FOR THE NEEDY

The Republican Party, as well as myself, is deeply interested in relief for the needy. The President has promised time and again that he is in favor of appropriating sufficient money to take care of the needy of this country. This bill does not do that, and no bill that the President has ever proposed did that. There are 10,000,000 unemployed, needy workers in America, other than those on W. P. A. There are 1,500,000 of the sick, the halt, the blind, and the disabled, and most of them are heads of families. There are hundreds of thousands of needy widows with children who have been denied work on the W. P. A. Altogether we have in addition to the 3,000,000 W. P. A. workers some 12,000,000 of other unemployed workers, needy unemployables, and needy widows; so if this bill is passed in any form or any other bill that the President has proposed, it would not take care of more than 20 percent of the needy. You ignore the other 80 percent of the needy. Therefore, if you are going to take care of the needy, it will have to be in some other way than the plan that has been suggested in this bill or any other bill that the administration has proposed. The bill favored by the President will not care for more than 3,000,000 of the 15,000,000. These 12,000,000 that are neglected and ignored have the same right to relief as the 3,000,000 who get on the W. P. A.

HAS THERE BEEN POLITICS IN RELIEF?

For the first time since I returned to Congress in 1935, when these relief bills were up for consideration, the Democrats freely admit now that politics and favoritism have created a national scandal. The Sheppard committee, headed by Senator Sheppard, of Texas, in its recent report made a scathing indictment of those in charge of W. P. A. and the scandalous use of the relief money in politics. In Kentucky last year we had a hot race for Senator between Senator BARKLEY and Governor Chandler. Judge Stewart, the county judge of Senator BARKLEY's home county, was campaign manager for Governor Chandler. He saw and knew what was going on in Kentucky, and on May 23, 1938, he wrote a letter to President Roosevelt. in which he said:

You will not countenance the use of taxpayers' funds set aside to feed the hungry of the Nation to be employed in this Commonwealth in such a manner as to result in public scandal. Meetings and conferences have been held in practically every county in the State by keymen in places of importance with the W. P. A., at which definite instructions were given to selected agents that no one should be placed on Federal relief except upon the advice of Senator Barkley's campaign managers in the respective countles. Furthermore, these same agents have been required to inform all those individuals who seek Federal assistance that unless they are for the candidate for Senator whom the heads of the relief administration are supporting there will be neither relief funds nor jobs for them.

He goes on to say that a great army of men and women put on the W. P. A. render no service except going about over Kentucky campaigning and organizing for Senator BARKLEY, drawing all the way from $100 to $500 a month out of your relief funds. He also says, as does Senator Sheppard's committee, these poor relief clients were shaken down for thousands of dollars for campaign funds to take care of the campaign expenses of Senator BARKLEY. Let me bring to your attention just one of the many cases brought to my attention. In a certain town in my congressional district there lived a disabled veteran of the World War. Because of some technicality, his pension was cut off under the Economy Act. He has a wife and young children. She secured a little job on the W. P. A. at $30 per month. This is the story she told to me, with tears streaming down her cheeks, in the presence of her husband:

Last July she was called upon by her W. P. A. boss to contribute $10 of her meager wages to the campaign fund of Senator Barkley. She said:

I cannot do that; it takes $15 a month of my $30 to buy medicine and give medical treatment to my husband. I have already pledged the other $15 to pay my store account, and I cannot do that.

What happened? A few days after that she was removed from the rolls, and when she inquired as to the cause her boss said it was because she had refused to "cooperate."

In that same town a certain Democrat who is a professor in the high school with a salary of $150 per month had a relief job on the side that paid him about $100 a month.

Mr. Chairman, my State last year had thousands of cases where men and women, if they refused to change their registration as Judge Stewart says, or refused to promise to support Senator Barkley, were either denied any work on the W. P. A. or were taken off the W. P. A. rolls. W. P. A. work was denied Chandler Democrats as well as Republicans. Where is the sympathy for the needy? Where is this wonderful feeling for those who are in distress? I have said publicly in Kentucky, and I shall say here, if any county judge or other county officer in Kentucky used the public funds as these W. P. A. funds were used in Kentucky, they could be and would be indicted and convicted for malfeasance in office. Yet this goes unpunished. And the same men who carried on that program of intimidation and political coercion in Kentucky last year are still in charge, and will continue in charge, to spend this money that we are proposing to appropriate.

Some one said that there is no national election on between now and next July. I see some of my Democratic colleagues here from Kentucky, and I ask them if they can challenge the statement that the W. P. A. funds were used in the same way in the election for Governor in 1935. The W. P. A. funds made Governor Chandler happy in 1935 but unhappy in 1938. I know of other instances in my home county where the W. P. A., under this same influence and coercion, was used in a local-option election and used in many county races. These funds may be used in Kentucky this year to undertake to elect a house and senate and nominate a Governor who is in line with the New Deal and against those who are opposed to the New Deal. You do not have to have a national election to use these funds and this political coercion.

I have many letters from my district, and I can only read a few of them. Here is one that says:

I am a World War veteran. I was a supervisor on a W. P. A. job and experienced in that work. They took my job away from me and gave it to an inexperienced man who was a Democrat and a new dealer. It was for political purposes, because I refused to go out and get cards signed up for a young man's Democratic club to support Senator BARKLEY for Senator.

Another states:

I am writing to inform you of something that should not go on on W. P. A. One wealthy woman, who owns a beauty shop, and her mother is rich, teaches one man, who is just out of the home for the feeble-minded, I hour a day and draws $60. Another daughter works in the W. P. A. Her husband teaches school. They drew three salaries last year.

TAKE THE POLITICIANS AND CHISELERS OFF W. P. A.

You could take care of at least 500,000 more needy people if you would take the politicians off the pay rolls of the W. P. A., and it would afford relief for many hundreds of thousands more if those who are not entitled to relief but who are on W. P. A. because of politics, favoritism, and partiality should be taken off. The W. P. A. rolls are honeycombed with politicians and favorites. These politicians and favorites get the good jobs ranging from $100 to $500 per month. They absorb a great bulk of the relief money.

FAVORITISM-NEPOTISM

In one county of my district there are eight people of the same family, all of them well-to-do, all of them have goodpaying white-collar jobs. Their salaries, I would say, range from $125 to about $300 per month. In another county I know of one man with two big farms, plenty of stock, and with money in the bank, receiving a high salary as a W. P. A. foreman. He had influence enough to get his son in the C. C. C. and his daughter a job with the N. Y. A. In another county there are four brothers who own farms and city property and are well-to-do. They have responsible positions with the W. P. A., and other Government agencies, receiving good salaries. This same partiality and favoritism with people on the W. P. A. and other relief agencies who do not need it can be found in practically every community in my district, and I am satisfied these conditions prevail throughout the Nation.

I receive many letters from widows with young children. They want to know why they are not permitted to work on the W. P. A. to clothe and feed their children and send them to school. They are informed that they cannot be given work because they had not been employed 6 months before the application was made. In most instances they were merely mothers and housekeepers. Their husbands died and left them with these children.

I have other letters from veterans and disabled veterans who have been denied jobs or who have been taken off their jobs because they refused to register and vote according to the demands of their W. P. A. bosses.

FAVORITISM AND PARTIALITY

Other evidences of political use of the W. P. A. funds is seen on every hand through partiality and favoritism. The amount received by relief workers-for instance, the lowest paid W. P. A. workers per hour in Tennessee is 18 cents for common labor. A W. P. A. worker doing the same kind of common labor in the State of Illinois may be paid $1.021/2 an hour. The minimum paid for the same common labor for relief work in Kentucky is 25 cents an hour. The minimum paid to a skilled worker in Kentucky is 34 cents an hour, while a skilled worker in Pennsylvania may be paid as much as $3.03 an hour.

There is a tremendous discrimination between the W. P. A. workers in the so-called Republican States as against the W. P. A. workers in the solid South. In 1 year there was expended on W. P. A. in Pennsylvania the sum of $234,000,-000 while the amounts spent on W. P. A. in the 11 so-called Democratic States of the solid South was about $210,000,000. Of course the population was greater and the need of relief greater in these 11 Southern States than in Pennsylvania, but these Southern States were safely in the Democratic fold. The new dealers were out to capture Pennsylvania, Illinois, New York, Ohio, and other so-called Republican States. The President and others in control of these various relief funds have been using this money to influence elections, both primary and final. The President went to Maryland last summer in his effort to purge Senator Typings and in one of his speeches proposed building certain bridges on the Chesapeake Bay. The relief bosses and clients were busy in South Carolina, Georgia, Maryland, Kentucky, and other points where the President was trying to purge the real Democrats out of his own party. This might not be so bad if there were not millions of unemployed and needy workers, men, women, and widows, crying for food.

Judge Stewart in his letter to the President pointed out that many of these W. P. A. so-called bosses did nothing but go over Kentucky and work in the elections. He said the W. P. A. trucks were used to haul people to register and to change their registration, and he wound up with a most bitter indictment of the whole mess:

Those with starving mouths to feed are forced to surrender their one remaining privilege of choosing for whom they shall vot otherwise they and their dependents must go hungry and naked.

We must take relief out of politics. This partiality, favoritism, and nepotism must go. Those who are not in need of relief must be taken off and the places given to those who need it. This wide difference in the wages in the different parts of the country must be eliminated. Persons, simply because they have passed the age of 60 or 65 years, must not be denied relief. Widows with dependent children must be included, and last but not least, I hope to have an opportunity to vote for an amendment to make it a felony for anyone to chisel on relief or to attempt in any way at all to intimidate or coerce needy people to change their registration or to vote for any man or group of men or any party in order to receive the benefits from the W. P. A. and other relief agencies of this Nation. Aliens must be taken from the relief rolls and preference given American citizens.

There is every indication that the real Democrats of the House and the Republicans are going to clean up this relief mess and make it possible for the relief to go to the needy.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gross].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote to recommit this joint resolution and I am going to vote for 2 months' appropriation in order that we may have an investigation of the entire set-up.

I am compelled to take this stand because of the rottenness that exists in the set-up as well as in the Administration.

I know that the relief pay rolls in Pennsylvania have been padded before the recent election. Anybody from high-school boys to old men could get on relief.

I know that immediately after election, when the lay-off came in W. P. A., they did not lay off the men in the same rotation as they had hired them. They laid off those men with large families in order to load the direct relief rolls for the incoming Governor.

The relief rolls of Pennsylvania have on them many men who own real estate, farms as well as city real estate, particularly in the white-collar group in those 37,000 composed of the administrative group.

I am convinced if the rolls were purged, if plain ordinary horse sense were used, an appropriation of $500,000,000 would be sufficient.

I know where the W. P. A. cut locust trees on a school ground where I am president of the board that cost $60 to cut a cord of wood.

I know of a road job in my vicinity where 40 men were employed all summer where on the 9th of October the whole gang were intoxicated and when they went home in the evening some of them took the bottles along to show what brand of liquor they were drinking.

This kind of procedure is going to make it impossible for worthy poor people to get relief—that is why I am for an investigation.

If the President is so much interested in helping poor people why, when the price of wheat in this country is around 50 cents as it has been for a long time, does he not see that the people get a 5-cent loaf of bread? Why does he not see to it that the poor consumer gets his living at the same low cost that the farmer receives for his crops?

If this were the case we would not have many surpluses. People would be well fed and appropriations such as they are now asking for would be unheard of. The money for these appropriations can only come from one source and that is from taxes.

Many of our industries are now overtaxed; for instance, in my district the taxes on a job are as much as $1.80 per day and that is as much tax on a job as the wages were when I was a boy.

I am for an investigation of the relief set-up because many tradesmen have abandoned their trades to live on relief and if it is so attractive then there is something desperately wrong. I know in many cases where men hired on farms contented for years moved into a little tenement house somewhere in the community where they knew they could beat the rent and went on relief.

I know where relief administrators refused to tell those on relief that there were jobs awaiting them in their communities because they wanted them on relief to control their votes.

If the President is interested in poor farmers why did he, in the recent session, veto a bill to keep the interest rate on Federal land bank mortgages down? I can tell you that if a farmer who has a heavy mortgage on his farm can save $100 a year on his interest that is the best type of farm relief I know of and I would like to have some new dealers tell me why the President was against that type of farm relief.

To make a long story short relief has been a club held over the heads of millions of people ever since its beginning. Common decency, honesty, and sanity demands that this be investigated and relief from now on be administered in a different manner. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Geyer].

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I am a new man in Congress, but even the customs of the House of Representatives, rigid as they might be, do not preclude a Member from expressing himself when human welfare is at stake. I come from a district in California where this matter of caring for the unemployed is a vital matter. There are sections in my district where a greater percentage of the people are dependent on some form of relief. Let us get the record straight. These people are out of work through no fault of their own, and neither do they remain in that condition from any choice of their own. We are living at a time when the machine, the automatic machine, if you please, has taken the place of human beings. Every day we read, if we read the right papers, where hundreds of men are being displaced by the installation of new and up-to-date machinery. Where are these men to turn? If they go to another similar place of employment they either find the same or a like machine has been installed there or the length of the line awaiting jobs so long that it is impossible to get employment even at the low wage resulting from the flooding of the labor market by this same machine. There was a time in the history of our country when if a man found himself out of a job he could move a little farther west and make his home on 160 acres of virgin land, furnished to him by a beneficent Government. But this time has passed into history. Now there remains but some Government agency to give him a job or starvation.

Some of the arguments that have been given here against continuing or adequately financing the W. P. A. program sound to me very simple and childish.

Those very people crying out the loudest about their Americanism are the very ones that are the bitterest foes to giving our people the rights that our form of government under our Constitution guarantees to all of its citizens. I believe that every man under this Constitution, which you and I have sworn to uphold, has a right to a job at a decent living wage; and if business, industry, and finance cannot or will not supply him with that job, it is the duty of government to do so. For, as our First Lady has said:

Whenever democracy fills the needs of the people, one need have no fear of "isms."

The President has, according to those who have testified before the committee, been entirely too modest in his request for money with which to carry on the W.P.A. He has asked for but $875,000,000, when the Mayors Conference called for $950,000,000. Now, under the terms of this bill there would be slashed from the conservative request of the President $150,000,000. This, we are told by the experts, will bring suffering to almost a million people besides cutting down the purchasing power to the point where we will again sink deeper into the depression, just when the economists tell us we are starting on the upward trend.

Mr. Chairman, I think it time we cease this talk of communism, politics interfering with business, making loafers out of our people, and the like, and face the issue squarely. Do we want starvation, misery, and suffering or do we want our people to at least subsist until something permanent can be worked out? I, for one, favor first the billion-dollar amendment that has been requested; next, if that fails, the eight hundred and seventy-five million that the President requested; and, that failing, the lesser amount that the committee recommends. Anxious as I am to balance the dollars and cents budget, I am still more anxious to balance the human budget. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the House is again engaging in that annual—no; semiannual—pastime necessitated by the New Deal of considering a relief appropriation bill. We have had 2 days of interesting debate. It is the same old story. We are on the way, but where? However, very little additional information has been developed. True, much additional proof has been offered showing just how politics has been used in the administration of W. P. A. to the benefit of subservient New Deal adherents. I have heard nothing about changing the policy to be pursued to get out of the mess.

Of course, when the first spending-lending bill was before the Congress we all thought in prospect. When the next one came along we still thought in prospect, but knew a little more about the subject matter. Today, after 6 years of pump priming, P. W. A., W. P. A., C. W. A., F. E. R. A., and all the others, we can speak and think in retrospect. To use an apt expression, "The proof of the pudding is the eating thereof."

In June 1933 President Roosevelt asked Congress for an appropriation of $3,300,000,000, which he said would put 10.000.000 unemployed persons back to work and restore prosperity. If you will recall, 6,000,000 of these people were to be back at work before Labor Day in September 1933. Of course, that did not happen.

In January 1935 the President again demanded an appropriation of $4,880,000,000, and again we were promised that this would eliminate unemployment and restore prosperity.

Of course, that did not happen.

In May 1937 Mr. Roosevelt demanded another appropriation of $1,500,000,000, which later was supplemented by $225,-000,000 more. We were assured that the depression was over and that this sum would take care of the needy to July 1. 1938. Of course, that did not happen; and on February 10, 1938, the President, by special message to Congress, demanded $250,000,000 more to carry on necessary relief to July 1, 1938.

On May 12, 1938, the House passed another mammoth spending-lending bill, title I of which carried $1,250,000,000 more for W. P. A. and relief. This was election year and, in order not to make the amount too large, it was provided that this appropriation would take care of the needy only until March 1, 1939. In other words, the usual custom of appropriating for the fiscal year, or to July 1, 1939, was not followed. Most of the money was spent before election. The election is over. All of the $1,250,000,000 will be gone on February 7, 1939. In short, millions of people throughout the country, whose only means of livelihood today is W. P. A. employment or direct relief, will be thrown out into the cold. This is really an emergency bill. The Committee on Appropriations has given careful consideration and the subcommittee recommends $725,000,000 as being absolutely necessary at this time if suffering is to be averted and starvation prevented. I have heard no one having knowledge of the facts deny this assertion. Therefore, I am constrained to accept this condition and vote to prevent this suffering or to vote against this whole appropriation because I do not believe in the efficacy of the New Deal policy.

It is not claimed that this is a recovery bill in any sense of the word. It has no recovery features. It is simply a relief bill to provide sustenance for the needy. When this money is exhausted we will be no nearer recovery than we are today if present methods adhered to by the administration are doggedly pursued in the future as they have been during the last 6 years.

We all know and admit that there are as many unemployed in the country today as there were in the darkest days of 1932-33, and that the prospects for recovery are not as bright as they were in 1933. The patience, the endurance, and confidence of our people are about exhausted. This money may prevent suffering but it will not inspire that which is necessary in order that these W. P. A. workers may secure decent jobs in honorable employment at living

When the last relief bill was being considered in debate on May 12, 1938, less than a year ago, I expressed my views on this general subject, and at that time I called the attention of the House and the country to the fact that relief has become the Nation's fourth largest industry. Only farming, manufacturing, and service industries engage more workers than are getting some form of relief subsidy. More people are obtaining Government aid in some form or other than secure their living from all the mining, public utilities, transportation, and construction employment in the country. condition obtained on May 12, 1938, and it obtains today in an even more aggravated form.

Of course, this has nothing to do with whether or not these unemployed citizens need relief, but it is most relevant in determining whether or not the Congress is to pursue the present huge pump-priming and spending policy, which has failed so completely after 6 years' trial. Those who do not believe in these New Deal extravagances have said so many times that "we cannot spend ourselves out of debt and into prosperity" that the statement has become threadbare. Yet repetition sometimes is necessary before the people fully realize.

The days of our national Santa Claus are numbered. The pocket is empty. The national debt is more than $40,000,000,000. The national credit is in jeopardy, and at last the people are realizing that a National Santa Claus is no more real than the Santa Claus who filled our stockings in childhood. As long as we believed in Santa Claus as children and as long as our parents were able to supply the gifts, trim the tree, and fill the stockings, we were all happy, but in due season the children all learn that in turn they have to be Santa Claus if the tradition is to be continued. The children of today, therefore, are not only going to be asked to provide the gifts for the future but to pay for the presents that the Federal Santa Claus has been distributing for the last 6 years. We just cannot place any more burden on those who are to follow. We just must take another route.

The Republican Party made this matter clear during the last campaign. The people now understand, and on November 8 returned this large, independent Republican membership, with not only instructions but a mandate to join with independent, patriotic Members of Congress, regardless of their politics, in putting an end to profligate, useless, and unreasonable expenditures. From the Republican standpoint we might say that a great victory was ours on November 8. I prefer to say that this last campaign was not a fight between Republicans and Democrats as we have always known them, but was a fight between the New Deal and the rest of us.

The people whom I represent and who elected me to Congress have no use for that brand of representation commonly known as "yes-man" in present-day vernacular. By the same token, they have no use for narrow-minded "no-men." What the people want is less politics and more cooperation in the common interest. I am sure that an overwhelming percentage of those on this side of the aisle will give approval to this statement.

Every Member in the Chamber knows right now just how he is going to vote on this resolution. For my part, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber], the ranking Republican on the committee. which provides for sufficient funds to carry on W. P. A. relief to April 7, 1939, and provides further for the creation of a committee to investigate the relief situation and report back to the House before that date, a method whereby the administration of relief will be turned back to the States, with contributions from the States. This is what should be done. We who believe that relief should be administered by local authorities and the States will have an opportunity to go on record expressing our views and indicating what would happen if the Republicans were in the majority at this time. Relief cannot be discontinued until something else takes its

If the Taber amendment is defeated, then I shall vote for the $725,000,000, the amount which the committee advises is sufficient to carry on proper W. P. A. activities to July 1,

Up to this time I have consistently refused to vote for any of these large lending-spending bills. I did, however, vote for the $250,000,000 deficiency appropriation to carry through from February to July 1938. That was relief money. We knew where and how it was going to be spent. This resolution likewise provides relief money. I have never refused to vote for relief. The committee has been advised where this money is going to be spent. Practically speaking, it cannot be called a blank-check bill. I will not vote to give the President a large lump sum to spend if, when, and how he desires, limited only by the watchful eye of the Comptroller General, which office the administration, through its reorganization bill, hopes to abolish.

The people whom I represent are almost unanimous in their demand that this wasteful, reckless New Deal spending shall be stopped. At the same time they are just as anxious that the deserving who, through no fault of their own, are out of employment shall be cared for. The fact that so much money heretofore appropriated has gone to administration, been spent unwisely and, in some cases, possibly corruptly, and the fact that politicians have prostrated the purposes of the relief, are not sufficient justification to deny innocent victims of economic conditions the right to eat and keep warm.

There should be investigation. W. P. A. should be discontinued. Conditions should be changed. I hope that will come at the earliest possible moment. However, the fact is that millions of persons will be out of W. P. A. work, and thereby out of a means of livelihood, on February 7 unless this resolution is passed. Under all the circumstances, I cannot find justification for voting against this relief, even though I rebel against the policy that makes the relief necessary. It is a condition we face and not a theory. Let us be practical and nonpartisan.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have only one more speaker. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is only one more speaker on this side. If the gentleman will use his time, we will then use ours, and the debate will be closed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, the thunderous oratory from this Well on a very realistic problem is just about over. In a little while the Seventy-sixth Congress will go on record with its first roll-call vote. It will be rather interesting to see whether the "spirit of "76" is going to animate the Seventy-sixth Congress as the word relative to that roll call goes out to the country.

It is an important vote and it is an important issue. Human need is always important. Human need is a very realistic problem, and after all the banter and criminations and recriminations from this well and on this floor during the past 2 days, I am still of the opinion that there is a great swelling heart in every Member of this body, and that there is no monopoly of humanitarian impulses and instincts at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. But this vote is going to be important because it is going to be in the nature of a test of strength. It is going to be a message to the business and industry of this country as to the determination of this Congress to do something genuine in the field of unemployment and relief.

This begins my seventh year in this body and there has not been a session that one after another has not paraded through this well and shouted to the heavens about the necessity of private industry taking up the slack in order to solve the unemployment problem. Then in the same breath and under the same legislative action we have so often beaten business over the head and taken away all initiative and all effort to get out of the trough of this depression. Is it not high time that Congress take the initiative and make a start toward bringing reassurance to industry in the hope that absorption of the unemployed may get under way? If it fails, we shall then know what to do.

So it is important as to what will be reflected and recorded in the minds of the country when those boys up in the press gallery sent out the record of the first roll call of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

There are more than 100 new Members in this body, and, in my judgment, they have sufficient legislative power to defeat, to change, to alter, or to modify the pending bill. I would address myself very specially to those who were not Members of the Seventy-fifth Congress when the 1938 work-relief bill was on this floor for 3 days. The debate occupied 125 pages in the Congressional Record on the 12th, 13th, and 14th of May of that year. The pattern is exactly the same. You can read almost the identic speeches that were made on this bill. So let us forget for a little while some of this hysteria and emotionalism and get down to the verities and realities, because it is not only important how you vote, but it is important whether or not you can defend your vote. Now to that I want to address myself for a little while.

I can talk with dispassion and fairness about W. P. A. I am one Republican who can pat the district director out in Illinois on the back and say, "Good and faithful servant. You have done a good job in this district." There was no politics in that district. He is an independent businessman, two-fisted and four-square, who has never permitted any politician to come into those 26 counties to tamper with or to seek or solicit funds and do the other things that have prostituted W. P. A. in some of the other States. So you are looking at one Republican today who can talk with fairness and with neither malice nor passion in his heart as he talks about W. P. A.

Now, let us take a look at the history of this thing. Here was this bill in 1938. About one and one-third billion dollars were made available, and we put an escape clause in that bill to provide certain emergency powers for the President. If an emergency arose, he could chop down the 8 months' period over which that appropriation was to be expended and reduce it by not to exceed 1 month. That is the power that the Congress gave him. He exercised that power and said: "The money you gave me shall be apportioned over a 7month period." Accordingly, the funds were apportioned to cover a 7-month period, and it now develops that they will be sufficient only to the first week in February, and that additional funds are required to carry on for the balance of the fiscal year 1939. On that basis they come here now and ask for a deficiency appropriation to carry on for the next 5 months. To me it is rather singular that there has been some alteration in estimates. Every Member ought to provide himself with a copy of the Budget-it is as big as a Sears, Roebuck catalog-and examine it, particularly the pages that are numbered in roman numerals. From that you will find that the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget is not for $875,000,000 but for $750,000,000. That was considered in September, October, and November when they were getting ready to assemble the Budget figures and send them to the press-$750,000,000, not $875,000,000. Then, on the 5th day of January comes the message that they are asking for how much?-$875,000,000. Why are these amounts changed? Why this constant increase? And exactly what is the reason behind this thing? I would like to know.

Nobody has a monopoly of expert wisdom on whether the amount ought to be less or greater than a specified figure. The Congress of Industrial Organizations wants at least $1,000,000,000. You will find their testimony in the hearings. The American Federation of Teachers want at least $1,000,-000,000. The Farm Bureau Federation has memorialized the President, and they want a continuance of relief. Then, the Conference of Mayors, represented by Mayor LaGuardia, wants $915,000,000. So you can start with zero for those who would destroy this program and go up to $1,050,000,000 wanted by the Workers' Alliance, represented by Mr. Lasser, who came before the committee. Now, you use your own judgment as to what the right amount will be, but let me submit this to you as you think about the amount: as they talk about those who are to be laid off. What about the 225,000 who were laid off from the 29th of October to the 24th of December? If your hearts bleed as much for them as for those who it is expected will be laid off, why not include other hundreds of millions for them? What about the 112,000 who have been and will be laid off between December 24 and the 1st day of February? What about the 750,000 who are eligible for W. P. A., according to Colonel Harrington, but for whom there are no funds? If you gentlemen want to increase this amount to take care of all human needs, then you ought to add not $100,000,000, but another billion to the bill. That is where your logic will carry you, but I have heard no suggestion from any quarter that an effort will be made for an extra half billion dollars for these distressed persons.

I have some different notions about it. Gentlemen, it seems to me there is one thing we can do today thinking as citizens of a common country, with every Member moved by the impulse to take care of the needs of the country; and that is to use reason on both sides. Some no doubt will be laid off, perhaps 200,000—not in a year, not in a month. The accumulative total may be 1,000,000, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri. But it must be understood that this is a cumulative total, and you ought to have that in

Can we not, out of the welter of effort, out of all the protestations we have made that industry must absorb the unemployed in the country, extend a challenge to business and to industry today as we go on the record and say: "We will strike a bargain with you. We do not know which comes first, the hen or the egg, but we will just forget all that metaphysical logic and will say to you that if you give the unemployed a break and start taking up the slack, we will initiate the thing, we will reduce it to $725,000,000, and then see what reaction sets in during the next 30 or 60 days."

I am willing to give them that kind of chance, and I think that was the mandate of the people on the 8th day of November 1938. Have we not carried on long enough in a futile way to find the solution to this unemployment and relief problem, and is it not now time to strike boldly in the fervent hope that we can find the solution?

There are some other considerations, however, that ought to be carried in mind that have not been overly discussed. One is: What is this Congress going to do about the report made by the Sheppard committee? Every Member ought to get himself a copy of this Senate report and read what they said about Tennessee, about Kentucky, about Pennsylvania, and the other States of the Union where there was a great deal of difficulty, and then look at the recommendations of the Sheppard committee, especially recommendation No. 3. This Senate committee, under the able leadership of Senator Sheppard, has made some odorous disclosures, and it would be difficult indeed to pass them off with a shrug and ignore them for another 5 months while three-quarters of a billion is to be spent by W. P. A.

The committee recommends that section 19, title I, of the present Work Relief Act making it a misdemeanor be amended to make it a felony.

What are you going to do about it? Are you going to follow the language of the message and not amend this bill and have no program and no investigation of these abuses and no background of information when the next measure for the appropriation for relief for the fiscal year 1940 comes to this floor within the next few months? Are you going to ignore that recommendation of four distinguished Democratic Senators and one Republican? Are you going to ignore recommendation No. 4 of the committee with respect to making fraudulent statements in using relief for political purposes and in a campaign? Are you going to ignore that? We do not believe that you can defend that kind of position before the country. Are you going to give a blank check now and say, "Oh, well, we will just forget that for about 5 or 6 months"? Shall we confess that in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and Tennessee an odorous situation existed but it must wait until later for consideration?

Or are you going to take cognizance of these charges and recommendations that have been made and assure the people of the country that we are going to eliminate abuses and investigate charges of rottenness in the W. P. A. in the various States as disclosed by a committee which contained four members of the administration party?

I do not believe that the position can be defended. This Congress is going to have to take some action on it. What kind of action can we take? You will find it summarized in the minority position. It seems to me it would have been a splendid idea to develop an appropriation to cover, say, a 90-day period, long enough to continue W. P. A. on its present basis, and long enough also to give this Congress an opportunity to make a reasonably exhaustive investigation into these recommendations and into the facts and figures that were disclosed. We could then determine how we are going to earmark and probably restrict the appropriation for the rest of the fiscal year and have a basis on which the 1940 work-relief and relief bill will be written. That sort of thing cannot be ignored, Mr. Chairman. That position will be offered by the minority side, and I am reasonably sure that it is sound. It also works in harmony with the total amount carried in this bill, namely, $725,000,000. We want to stay within that provision because we believe it will be adequate and we believe this alternative position will be an assurance to the taxpayers of the country that the Congress of the United States has taken cognizance of this situation, not on June 30 or July 1 but right now, and proposes to go into it. That kind of position can be defended.

Let me say a word about the civil service. I think the committee has done a good job by putting a provision in this bill that will prevent the operation of an Executive order to cover all administrative personnel of W. P. A. under the civil service at this time. I heard the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Ramspeck], one of the most able Members of the House, present the case a little while ago in behalf of striking this provision; but our side of the case is simply this: Read the report of the Senate committee and see how many administrators and how many directors and others in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and Tennessee have been charged by the senatorial committee with known political activity in behalf of certain candidates. If you are going to cover them all in, those gentlemen will have to be covered in. Everybody whose name is mentioned in this report will have to be covered in without exception. Do you want the Congress of the United States to take that position?

Mr. MAY. In the face of that report.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; in the face of a report by a senatorial committee consisting of four sound, stalwart Democrats and one Republican, all of which has been made public. I think the people of this country owe a debt of thanks to Morris Sheppard, of Texas, who has represented the Lone Star Republic in the Senate with such distinction all of these years.

I do not believe you can tamper with the work of the committee and eliminate that provision without covering and freezing into the civil service among the 28,000 W. P. A. personnel a lot of folks who are under suspicion or who may be open to objection in the language and in the recommendations of the senatorial committee.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. MAY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in reference to the approximately 28,000 employees of the W. P. A. who would be covered into the civil service by an Executive order if the gentleman thinks it is right to place them in the position where they cannot be discharged and leave the underworkers subject to discharge?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly not at this time, and not until the matter has been thoroughly investigated.

May I suggest still another thing that needs attention? If you will read this report, you will find that in Tennessee, for instance, they built private driveways, and the inference was, according to the Senate committee, it was done for political purposes. They said with respect to the State of Pennsylvania there has been an abuse of the highway funds and the road-building program up there; that more money was given to Pennsylvania than should have been; that the sponsor failed to put up its share under the regulations; all done ostensibly for political purposes, according to the language of the senatorial committee.

If you will resolve this thing as we wrote it in the first place and expected it to be administered, every sponsor will put up its share, and there will be a saving of Federal funds, and we will make up some of the $150,000,000, no doubt, that represents the difference between the $725,000,000 carried in this bill and the $875,000,000 requested in the special message.

There is one other thing I want to bring to the attention of the committee. I believe that today the W. P. A. is immune from any efforts on the part of the Comptroller General to look into the W. P. A. At least I have no record of it. I examined the old language of the act, and I could find no place where an audit is provided for. I believe the finest self-purge measure that could be written into this bill—and it would not be subject to the criticism that it is hasty and ill-conceived—would be to put an amendment in the pending resolution to the effect there ought to be a public audit monthly, and it ought to be open to public inspection; then those who do the administering will be pretty careful whose names go on, who the recipients are, and what the amounts are, because the sunshine and the daylight is going to shine in; and those, in my judgment, are the most salutary remedies that we have in our form of democracy.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.
Mr. PATRICK. Is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRK-SEN] mindful of the fact this entire program is extinguished on the 1st of July?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, yes; I am quite mindful of that fact. Mr. PATRICK. Do those things obtain, even under the purview of the Sheppard report? Can they assail it and is the gentleman advising that to beat down the sum that would likely be voted, when there is absolutely no political activity, State or National, that can be applied to the W. P. A. between now and then?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will stop and think that during this winter and spring there will be municipal elections from one end of the land to the other, and that in some States the W. P. A. has been subject to use in such local elections, he can discern that any proposal to improve the operations of W. P. A. is as applicable now as when a State or national election is in progress.

I am of the opinion that administrators, directors, engineers, and other personnel of W. P. A. in those States that have operated above reproach and criticism, would like to see the bad spots in the organization overhauled. People refer generically to W. P. A. and so often fail to distinguish the States and areas that have been good and above reproach from those where there has been proven culpability. Consequently, the derelictions of officials in one State reflect upon the whole organization and upon all its personnel, and Permit me one final observation. Everybody in this House entertains a deep and abiding sympathy for those in distress. Our problem is to find a solution that will be in the interest of the taxpayers, the Federal Treasury, and in the interest of developing a spirit of confidence in the business structure of the country whereby definite inroads will be made upon unemployment and upon relief.

Heretofore we have followed the policy of continued spending at high levels in the hope that a business momentum would be generated. That momentum began in 1937 and was eclipsed by the recession of 1938. Once more we are confronted with the same problem-shall we spend at present levels or curtail and retrench moderately and see whether that course does not offer the solution? I for one believe that it is worth the attempt.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman feels that by cutting down the appropriation and reducing the extent of the program we will remedy that evil?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. Mr. PATRICK. Then what is the argument?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was simply answering the gentleman's observation that there is no election between now and the 5th of July 1940. If the gentleman will read the report of the Senate committee he will find the activities of the W. P. A. in some States have not been confined to Federal elections and State elections. Oh, no; it has been used in the case of municipal elections also, and that is an answer to the rebuttal the gentleman makes. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

THE NEED FOR ADEQUATE DEFICIENCY W. P. A. APPROPRIATION

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am speaking here today, not in favor of a cut in W. P. A. appropriations, not in favor of the President's appropriation request, but in favor of an increase in the deficiency appropriation to $1,050,000,000.

It is my intention to introduce an amendment to this effect because I believe that this expenditure is the soundest kind of an investment for the continued recovery of our Nation.

REDUCTIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS HAVE STOPPED PROSPERITY BEFORE

The problem we are faced with here is a very simple one. On two occasions during the depression that started in 1929 the Government sharply reduced its contribution to unemployment relief and recovery. That was early in 1934 and in 1937. The first was by the demobilization of the C. W. A. program; the second was by the discharge of seven or eight hundred thousand W. P. A. workers. Each such cut was followed by a sharp business recession in which we lost a great deal of the recovery gains we had made. In each case, upon the resumption of Government aid, the recovery movement started anew; purchasing power increased; the shelves of merchants were cleared of goods; factories began to increase operation; employment increased.

Now, we again have a recovery movement. It is just acquiring strength and vitality; and these impatient Budgetbalancers, these theoretical economists on the Appropriations Committee, already want to cut Government aid and give a deathblow to the recovery movement.

I share with these gentlemen their desire to bring Government expenditures in line with Government income. But I say that, since experience has demonstrated on two occasions that their hasty and ill-advised cuts in Government aid have proved disastrous, in the name of reason and common sense. why should they insist upon another disastrous blunder?

LET US STIMULATE RECOVERY

I say let us give this recovery movement the aid necessary to get it safely over the hilltop. Let us give the recovery movement enough vitality and strength so that we will be beyond the danger of a decline such as we had in 1937. Then would be the proper time to consider, not in a hasty manner such as we are doing now but with calm and considered judgment, how and where cuts might be made.

In proposing my appropriation request of $1,050,000,000, I and not those on the Appropriations Committee am the true friend of Government economy.

THE EXIGENT NEED FOR ONE BILLION FIFTY MILLION NOW

I propose this $1,050,000,000 appropriation, first, because the recovery movement, after its great gains, is now beginning to falter and hesitate. The danger signals are appearing; employment is no longer increasing at the rapid rate of last fall; increased consumer purchasing power is greatly needed; the index of business activity is beginning to drop; the recovery front is beginning to weaken; it needs

My proposal would keep employed on the W. P. A. rolls the 3,200,000 workers who were employed before the cuts began in November.

INDICTING THE W. P. A. WORKER IS NOT THE ANSWER

I have listened carefully to the remarks and to the testimony of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum], giving his calm assurances that the need for W. P. A. jobs is not 3,200,000, not 2,800,000, as the President proposed, but is actually only 2,000,000. Mr. Woodrum informs this Committee that by purging the rolls; that by taking off the unemployables; that by taking off the malingerers, we can cut the rolls to 2,000,000 in the period of the next few months. Can the honorable gentleman from Virginia seriously mean these statements? Does he not know that every project worker on W. P. A. has had to pass a means test; that in most of the States there have been continual check-ups by the relief authorities; that, in addition, every W. P. A. worker has recently filled out a quarterly statement of outside earnings; and yet, with all these things, plus the drop of those who went into private industry, the authorities had to resort to hundreds of thousands of arbitrary lay-offs in order to make necessary reductions of 150,000 a month, throwing W. P. A. workers onto the streets in the middle of winter, without any possibility of aid, either from relief or social security, because these rolls are already choked.

And does not the honorable gentleman from Virginia know that today there are on the certification lists of the Works Progress Administration nearly 1,000,000 certified eligibles who have passed every requirement of employability and need, but for whom there are no jobs?

THE GENTLEMAN FROM VIRGINIA ERRS

And does not the honorable gentleman from Virginia know further that the present rolls of those certified are far from complete, because the W. P. A. authorities admit that many of the certifying agencies certify just so many and then stop their certification? And that there are another million or two who are eligible for certification but have not been certified?

And does not the gentleman from Virginia know, further, that the million people now securing unemployment compensation are exhausting their benefits at the rate of more than a hundred thousand a month and joining the ranks of those in need of Government aid?

And yet, in spite of all these facts, Mr. Woodrum gives us the calm assurance that it is possible to cut the W. P. A. rolls by 1,200,000 in the next 5 months.

ACUTE UNEMPLOYMENT CANNOT BE DENIED

Mr. Woodrum's figures are a tissue of rosy hopes and selfdelusion. They have absolutely no basis in fact or experience. The few figures that he has submitted do not stand the light of day.

One million workers were reemployed in private industry in the last 5 or 6 months. What share of these private jobs did the W. P. A. workers get? On a proportionate basis they would have gotten 250,000 jobs. But we know that the W. P. A. workers do not share proportionately in reemployment.

If there is a reemployment during the next 5 months of 1,500,000 workers in private industry, how many of these jobs will the W. P. A. workers get? On a proportionate basis they would get a total of about 350,000, but actually they would get far less. Yet Mr. Woodrum proposes an appropriation that would cut 1,200,000 off the rolls.

And let us also examine the question of under what circumstances the 1,500,000 are to be reemployed. I am sure he will agree that this reemployment is based upon the continuation and expansion of business recovery. What will happen to this business recovery if the Federal Government cuts its own contribution to it by fifty or sixty or seventy million dollars a month—a direct contribution which in its net effect means hundreds of millions of dollars a month in purchasing power?

A CUT IN FEDERAL RELIEF WEAKENS RECOVERY MOVEMENT

Is it not more likely, on the basis of our past practical experience, that a cut in Government aid such as is proposed by the Appropriations Committee will weaken the whole recovery movement and mean not more private employment but less?

The fact that there were before the present cuts 3,200,000 W. P. A. workers on the rolls; the fact that there are a million certified eligibles; the fact that those not yet on the relief lists are rapidly exhausting their resources—these facts make my request for a continuation of 3,200,000 a modest and reasonable one.

There is a second element in this picture, and that is the income received by the W. P. A. workers. I have before me a copy of a letter sent by the officers of the Workers' Alliance of America to the Works Progress Administration as a result of a 3-day wage conference and open hearing held between the Alliance and the Administration.

During this conference the Alliance brought forward as witnesses W. P. A. workers from all over the country to give testimony as to their experiences on the W. P. A. program. It is amusing, in light of this testimony, to hear the statement of Mr. Woodrum that the W. P. A. rolls have a large percentage of malingerers, people who insist on remaining in W. P. A.

W. P. A. WAGES ARE NOTORIOUSLY INADEQUATE

The testimony of the W. P. A. workers indicated that the wages paid them are so inadequate, for even a minimum standard of living, that the W. P. A. workers are enduring great suffering and privation.

I wonder if Mr. Woodrum thinks that, in his own State of Virginia, where W. P. A. wages are as low as $26 a month, that people malinger on the program for that income—approximately $6 a week.

In my own State of Washington, where the minimum W. P. A. wage is $40 a month, I know that the W. P. A. workers are suffering great privation. And I know that there is not

5 percent who would not take a job in private industry at decent wages if such employment were possible.

I would like permission to insert in the Record the letter of the Workers' Alliance of America to the Works Progress Administration containing the conclusions of this wage hearing.

I believe that there has been a case established for an increase in the W. P. A. monthly wages, to give these people, who are Government employees, at least a better chance than at present to meet the minimum requirements of the essentials of life.

Therefore my proposal for $1,050,000,000 not only covers the need for 3,200,000 jobs but also for a desperately needed increase in the W. P. A. wage scale.

THE PROPOSED W. P. A. CUT NOW WILL BE DISASTROUS

I say that every dollar of this money will be spent immediately by the W. P. A. workers to quicken the pulses of trade; to increase employment in private industry; and to make possible a really sound and practical reduction in further Government aid.

I want to say, in conclusion, that I view the report of the Appropriations Committee not only as a blow at the four or five million men, women, and children who will be made destitute by the committee's appropriation request, but I view it also as a serious blow at recovery itself.

I say that this Congress, if it votes the $725,000,000, will have the responsibility of telling these four or five million men, women, and children what they should do in order to keep themselves alive.

I say that this Congress will take upon itself the responsibility for the serious consequences that will undoubtedly result.

You have read the statement of Colonel Harrington in the Record, the statement of the new W. P. A. Administrator, a safe and sound Army officer. He declares that the people of America will not starve peacefully.

This Congress will have upon its head the responsibility for the riots, the bloodshed, the social disorders that may occur following the voting of $725,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, in the closing minutes of this debate on this most important subject I want to go on record as being 100 percent in favor of restoring this appropriation from $725,000,000 to its full amount, $875,000,000.

If the present cut from $875,000,000 to $725,000,000 goes through, 50,000 W. P. A. workers in my State of Massachusetts will lose their jobs. At the present time in the great textile city of Lawrence, in the great leather city of Peabody, in my own home city, the shoe city of Lynn, as well as in Salem, Revere, and Wakefield and other industrial communities in my district, there are thousands of certified eligible applicants for W. P. A. work who are still waiting to take their places in this great relief program if given the opportunity. These eligibles are not seeking this relief employment through choice but rather through sheer necessity because of unfortunate circumstances beyond their control.

The W. P. A. program barely scratches the surface of unemployment in Massachusetts. And now we are faced with the possibility, should this cut go through, of 50,000 workers now on W. P. A. being added to our already heavy list of unemployed. Our Massachusetts industries cannot absorb them and this cut coming as it will now in the dead of winter will but result in untold distress, hardship, and misery. Our local agencies are carrying capacity loads right now and the local cities and towns cannot stand further burden.

The pleas of economy and balance the Budget have been made on this floor during the last 2 days, but I know that the membership of this House, both Republicans and Democrats, are not going to favor any economy that means the depriving of men and women and children throughout this country of their daily sustenance—depriving them of the roof over their heads and the bread and butter for their mouths for which they have had to turn to their Government and for which they now turn to us here in Congress in order to insure their future well-being.

Very shortly we will be called upon to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for armament in order that our country may be properly defended and safeguarded against any and all possible aggressors. We are going to spend hundreds of millions to manufacture guns, cannons, airplanes, and war supplies. And still with the knowledge of this forthcoming tremendous expenditure, we quibble over the cutting of $150,-000,000 from this relief when we know that it is safeguarding the people of our country by insuring them against misery, distress, and possibly starvation.

For heaven's sake, gentlemen, if we must economize, let us do it elsewhere. Let us not do it here in this bill at the expense of the unemployed of the Nation—those who are less fortunate than we. Let us, when the amendment is offered later on today, restore to this bill the full amount of $875,000,-000 which was originally requested of us and which we have been told is in itself entirely inadequate.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sacks].

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I believe that in view of the present economic situation it is absolutely necessary that we appropriate an amount sufficient to carry on the W. P. A. for the next few months. Therefore, I am in favor of going along with the President's suggestion, and perhaps appropriating a larger sum. [Applause.]

Too many of our citizens are being put in a position today where truth and candor are not given with fairness and sincerity. The recent elections in this country have given those reactionary interests an opportunity to demagogue upon human misery. I recall the recent election in Pennsylvania. During that period the Republican candidates, from governorship down to the election officials, promised the electorate that they would continue W. P. A. and relief upon the present basis, and even increase their lot. They smilingly and with forensic fervor lamented the poor lot of the W. P. A. worker, but today the solid Republican membership of the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress are voting to cut over 100,000 people, heads of families in Pennsylvania, from the W. P. A. rolls; to go back on the inadequate dole of relief. Too soon their promises are broken; too soon their breach of faith with the people is discovered; too soon, my friends, their unwavering worship and subservience has been displayed to the big financial interests of Pennsylvania; too soon, my friends, their loyalty to Pew, Grundy, Weir, and other special interests has overshadowed their duty to their constituency. This is the first example of Republican faithlessness to their public trusts. I, for one, keep my promise to my people. I promised support of W. P. A. I am voting for an appropriation of $1,050,000,000 and if defeated for the mayor's proposal of $915,000,000, and if defeated for the President's proposal of $875,000,000.

Let Pennsylvania citizens know their Representatives, their votes, and their bosses. Mine are my people. The people of Pennsylvania can judge whose orders the Republican Representatives are following when they vote solidly to cut work relief.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, on one hand President Roosevelt, by his recommendation, advises us that $875,-000,000 is necessary for W. P. A. relief activities during the remainder of the fiscal year; and on the other hand, a majority of the Committee on Appropriations decides that $725,-000,000 is sufficient. Between these two estimates you and I must decide.

With all respect to the views of the members of the Appropriations Committee who voted for $725,000,000. I feel that President Roosevelt is in the best position to know the conditions existing throughout the country. Furthermore, he views this problem from a national angle and not from a sectional or local angle.

Furthermore, the evidence of the printed hearings clearly support the amount he recommended.

We also have the evidence of the United States Conference of Mayors. They know the local conditions of employment, permanent, temporary, and seasonal; they know their relief load, and they know the financial limitations of their cities. Certainly their views and opinions cannot be ignored.

The mayors of our cities have a very difficult task confronting them. One of the most difficult public offices in these days is to be a mayor. The means of raising revenue in a city are very limited, with 80 to 85 percent of all revenue raised coming from and through property taxes. Already the tax rates of most cities are prohibitive, and yet it has been the cities of the country that have borne the main burden of relief and welfare assistance during the entire depression. The reduction of W. P. A. workers resulting from the cutting of $150,000,000 from the amount recommended by President Roosevelt will be immediately followed by increased relief and welfare burdens on our cities.

In a recent news release dated January 11 of the United States Conference of Mayors it was stated:

One million one hundred and fifty-one thousand three hundred needy W. P. A. workers must be discharged from their jobs by June 30 if the action of the House of Representatives subcommittee in recommending a W. P. A. deficiency appropriation of only seven hundred and twenty-five millions is sustained by the Congress.

hundred and twenty-five millions is sustained by the Congress.

W. P. A. employment on January 1, 1939, totaled 3,081,300 workers. Under the reduced amount of seven hundred and twenty-five millions reported by the subcommittee employment will have to go down to 1,930,000 by June 30.

In the news release the effect in reduced quotas of various States and cities was stated.

The release then stated:

The figures tabulated are based upon a gradual reduction, beginning February, in accordance with the limited amount recommended, namely, seven hundred and twenty-five millions. If, however, the W. P. A. maintains its present quota of 3,000,000 workers during the months of February and March, it will then be necessary to get down to a quota of 1,375,000 workers by June 30. This would mean that between April 1 and June 30, 1,625,000 needy W. P. A. workers would have to be discharged.

With the tremendous financial strain cities are under. with a sharp increase of local aid, which a reduction of W. P. A. quotas will bring about, the load is likely to become so great in many cities that they will be unable to carry on. To reduce the W. P. A. rolls and have them passed on to local government is only having our strongest financial unit of government pass the burden over to our unit of government that is the least able to assume the same. In connection with this we must bear in mind that the Federal Government made an implied, if not expressed, promise to take care, through the W. P. A., of the unemployed needy persons, and that it is the primary duty of local government to take care of the needs of unemployable persons who require assistance. The cities of the country have done their job well. We are now passing on to them the responsibilities of the Federal Government.

There is no question but what the W. P. A., with all of the human mistakes that have been made in administration, and which honest-minded persons expect to happen, has served a great purpose.

Meeting the very minimum demands of millions of our citizens-of human beings-for existence, through the aid and assistance given, the W. P. A. has prevented enemies of our Government from capitalizing the discontent that would exist if millions were allowed to starve or to face starvation. Undernourishment on a national scale has been prevented, and undernourishment does not end with one generation. It has enabled employable persons in need to obtain and accept assistance and still retain their selfrespect. Few persons who are economically secure give consideration to these important results. The money paid to those employed goes into the hands of consumers and then into the channels of trade. These are results that flow, results that are beneficial to the country. Human suffering and distress calls for relief appropriations; the money is not wasted, the prevention of undernourishment, the allaying of discontent following complete economic insecurity, the feeling of respect that follows when one is rendering work, and the benefit to local business cannot be ignored as results of a beneficial nature. These results are not consciously appreciated because the opposite, undernourishment of millions, assistance based upon the so-called pauper's oath, have been averted mainly through W. P. A. appropriations.

The undernourishment that would have existed generally, with the results therefrom flowing for at least two generations, with the harmful effect upon our national life, have been averted. That aspect is overlooked.

Appropriations for relief are based upon necessity and exigency. We should not and cannot let people starve. Every one of us regrets the existence of conditions which require relief appropriations. However, our economic system has been seriously disturbed, as a result of which millions of employable persons in need are unable to obtain work. We were and are still faced with a practical problem, and we had to and must continue to meet it in a practical manner. Pending the pick-up of private business, we must make appropriations that will meet the relief needs. Recently 69 economists wrote President Roosevelt calling attention to the danger of curtailment. In the concluding paragraph of their letter to the President they stated:

We conclude, Mr. President, that the curtailment of the W. P. A. at the present time would be particularly ill-timed from an economic as well as from a humanitarian viewpoint, and we strongly urge that the contemplated policy of curtailment be abandoned.

The evidence is strong that $875,000,000 is needed for the remainder of the fiscal year. It is false economy to reduce the appropriations below what is needed. In my opinion, the amount recommended by the President is the minimum needed.

When the amendment is offered to strike out the $725,000,-000 reported by the committee and to restore the $875,000,000 recommended by President Roosevelt, I shall vote to support the President. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. Chairman, in a few minutes the Committee will come to consider such amendments as may be offered to this joint resolution. Before we get to that I feel it timely to brush away a few of the cobwebs the wide-ranging and far-flung debate may have injected into the situation. It has been very interesting and somewhat illuminating but, with all deference to my brethren, it has not been very much confined to the real issue. The debate was supposed to be confined to the joint resolution, but, as you will witness, Members have been permitted to say just about what they felt like saying, in the hope that they would get it out of their systems and we would all feel better and get down to business.

Mr. Chairman, I venture to express the very earnest hope that the debate on this first bill we have taken up is not an index of what we are going to have all through this session of Congress. I believe my colleagues will bear witness to the fact that I can be just as partisan as the next fellow when the occasion calls for it, but I certainly hope every bill that comes up will not provide an opportunity for holding a field day for the 1940 campaign. [Applause.] If it is, that is just going to be too bad for the American people.

There was no reason for injecting a lot of partisanship into the consideration of the joint resolution. The resolution does not undertake at all to settle permanently the relief problem. Its purpose is merely to provide temporary funds to carry on the W. P. A. until Congress can approach the problem in a more leisurely, a more logical, and a more orderly way.

Addressing my remarks now somewhat to the democratic side of the aisle, one of the first cobwebs I should like to brush away is the suggestion made if not directly, then very inferentially, that unless a Democrat in voting on an appropriation item votes for every penny the Budget estimates should be appropriated he is taking a slap at the President of the United States. That is a ridiculous and a childish position for anyone to take. [Applause.]

I heard the President from that rostrum a few days ago say the matter of appropriations is for the Congress, for the legislative branch of the Government. If the resolution is finally enacted into law as our committee has brought it to you, it is an administration victory. Why? Because the policy, the humanitarian purpose of the President to provide for the unemployed and those who need relief, is written into this joint resolution.

The determination of the extent to which that program should go and the amount of money needed for that purpose is a legislative function, and the President of the United States himself would be the last man in the world to tell you that it is his function, not ours.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not right now; I will yield a little later.

Mr. Chairman, the request of the President was that the Congress appropriate sufficient funds to carry on the W. P. A. during the remainder of this fiscal year, that it bear in mind the economic conditions, that it not overload the legislation with restrictive amendments, and that the Congress wait, if you please, until the regular 1940 appropriation to settle any fundamental change of policy which it might wish to write into the law. This bill does that. The President told you his estimate of the amount necessary was $875,000,000. The legislative committee handling the problem practically unanimously has told you that in their judgment, after very careful hearings and after very careful consideration, bearing in mind the same humanitarian objectives the President had, they believe that with certain economies and certain reforms which can and should be put into operation by the W. P. A. these objectives can be obtained with the amount reported in this joint resolution.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman recall that the day his committee reported this bill, all the daily papers carried the headlines that your committee had snubbed the President, and does not the gentleman know that if we vote to cut the amount down to what the committee has put in here, the newspapers will carry the headline that the Congress has snubbed the President?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. And I suppose the gentleman contends that in order that we may keep the headlines of the newspapers right we ought to appropriate more than we think is necessary. [Laughter.] Is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. The gentleman has not answered my question. Will it not be read throughout the country, if we follow the committee, that this is a snub of the President?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I imagine that will be said in the press and I imagine that if Congress goes wild and continues to go wild and appropriates money that it has not got and which is not needed, just in order to demagogue in the newspapers, some other things are going to be said about Congress, not only in the newspapers, but by ballots in future elections. [Applause.] I am not interested in what is going to be in the newspapers tomorrow. I am interested in trying, after 6 years, to start the curve of public expenditures downward instead of upward. [Applause.]

Now, with respect to another cobweb, a friend of mine, a dear, splendid fellow, rushed into the Chamber this morning, a man with a big, warm heart, and said, "I just must have some time to speak on this bill. I have got to speak on it." I said, "Take it easy," and he continued, "As I came down the street in the snow this morning I happened to think that here we are in Congress about to take some jobs away from some poor people." I brushed the tears away. Let us reason logically. All through this program there have been from 10.000,000 to 15,000,000 unemployed people in There have never been more than 3,000,000 of America. them on these rolls. No one in the administration has ever seriously asked to put them on and we have never undertaken to do more than this. Of course, there are going to be men out of jobs. Appropriate the $875,000,000 and there will be unemployed the next day after it goes into operation. No one claims that even $875,000,000 will provide a job for everyone.

Another friend of mine said, "Why, I read in the newspapers this morning that out in my State there are a thousand mothers who want to get on W. P. A. and cannot get on." Sure, there are, and why can they not get on? Because the day W. P. A. opened for business two or three million applicants got in line and they are sitting on the job and some of them will be there until the crack of doom unless those rolls are purged.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Always, to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The testimony before the committee, which has not been controverted, is that less than 10 percent have been on since 1936 and that out of the last 300,000 men put on, 50 percent have never been on before. Of course, it is inevitable that a few here and there would remain on, but the great bulk of these places change from day to day and it is only necessary to read the hearings to know that thousands are going off and thousands are coming on every week. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But about 300,000 of the 3,000,000 W. P. A. employees today have been there from the first day the program started.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The real question is about the 2,700,000 who are answering every requirement suggested by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I say to you solemnly— Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to finish this statement

Mr. McGRANERY. Would the gentleman make the statement the members who have been on since the beginning of the W. P. A. are administrative employees?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Oh, no; I refer to W. P. A. workers and not the administrative people.

Mr. McGRANERY. How many of them are administrative?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. None of the 10 percent. The 10 percent that I refer to are W. P. A. workers and not the administrative personnel.

Mr. McGRANERY. I do not refer to the administrative personnel in the central office here, but throughout the country. How many are there of them?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That does not contemplate any of the administration personnel. That is the relief people, the W. P. A. workers. I say to you solemnly there if in every locality of America the certifying agency will purge the relief rolls they will find thousands and thousands of people there whose relief status and need have changed in the last three and a half to four years, and who are now able to make it for themselves, and in that case a place will be made for some of these mothers and some of these heartbreaking cases that are now developing every day all over the country. And that is what this Committee wants to see done. We want to see a purging of the relief rolls.

It has been very interesting to see how some of our good friends have magnified their mathematics, and facetiously I want to make this remark, and I make it very facetiously. Someone has said that "figures do not lie, but that liars figure." I know that nobody would tell a lie here, but when we are advocates do not we just let the thing keep going, as it grows in front of us until some of the gentlemen here say that four or five million are going to be taken off the relief rolls.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Always to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We would be glad to have the gentleman give the name of any Member who has made such a statement. I have listened to all the debate, and I have never heard such a statement by anyone here either yesterday or today. No one to my knowledge has ever asserted that five or six million people were being taken off the rolls.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Perhaps I have exaggerated a little.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman has exaggerated a great deal. I said that 1,151,300 breadwinners, the heads of families, would be taken off the rolls and that was the testimony before our committee, and the gentleman himself examined the witness and he was unable to reduce it by a single family.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Then the gentleman multiplied that by how many in the family?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I did not say any multiplication of any number were going to be taken off the rolls. I said that millions would be dependent, and I am certain this House will agree that when a breadwinner goes off the roll his family is without sustenance.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the gentleman added about three or four million. I think he figured it up to that.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlemen yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I understand there are about 40,000,000 people in the United States who make their living by work, and if there are eleven or twelve million now unemployed and industry were to absorb its part, would the gentleman not think three million enough for the Government to care for as a part of that load?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. My colleagues, everyone tells us that business is improving. The W.P. A. tells us there will be a million and a half new jobs in the next 5 months, and if you are ever going to reduce the W.P. A. rolls the time to do it is now.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not for a moment. There are a few things yet that I want to say. Gentlemen will find in the committee's report on this bill a statement, on page 4, which is so clear that every wayfaring man can understand it. It sets out a table, furnished to us by the Works Progress Administration, as to the manner in which they would use the funds if appropriated as requested. They have on their rolls as of January 1 a little over 3,000,000 people. If the $875,000,000 is appropriated as the Budget requested, that program will taper off to 2,700,000 on the 1st of July. follows a statement by the committee showing that if the $725,000,000 is appropriated the rolls may be reduced to only 2,800,000 in February, and that is only a reduction of 200,000. to 2,600,000 in March, which is a reduction of another 200,000, to 2,400,000 in April, another 200,000 reduction, and to 2,200,000 in May, and to 2,000,000 on the 1st of July-a gradual tapering off of this program—no such wholesale turning out of millions of people as some of our friends in their emotionalism and melodramatics have undertaken to present to the Congress.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SWEENEY. The gentleman stated that everybody says that business is improving and I take it the implication is that industry may absorb some of these unemployed. How does the gentleman harmonize that statement with the statement in the Record from the mayors of 86 cities in the United States who came here and asked this Congress to appropriate $915,000,000 to take care of the needs of their respective communities?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am very glad the gentleman has asked that question because I wanted to comment on it. That is the milk in the coconut. Every person that the mayor can put on the W. P. A. rolls is paid out of the Federal Treasury and the city budget is reduced that much, and that is the way you harmonize it; and if you take the unemployables, the people who cannot participate in the works program, and take them off the relief rolls and put them on local relief, where they are supposed to be under this program, you will absorb a large part of the reduction called for in this appropriation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman will recall that the representatives of those mayors testifying before the committee told us that instead of their local budgets being reduced by the amount paid out in Federal funds, they were already carrying, in direct relief burdens, more than they could afford. Forty million dollars per month are being spent in direct relief, and they testified that if families were taken off the W. P. A. they would be unable to carry the additional load, as they were already burdened to the limit of their tax capacity in taking care of direct relief cases.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes. That gentleman also testified that the $875,000,000 was not enough.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield. Mr. MARCANTONIO. The mayors' representative also testified that the various cities and States are taking care of 1,650,000 cases now. Do you think the cities and States can afford to take care of any more?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think a great many of them can afford to do a lot more than they are doing.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In view of the present status of their treasuries?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. A great many of the States can do more than they are doing, I think.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word before I take my seat and yield the floor to read the bill. However much we may differ as to amounts, methods, and programs, I am sure there is not a Member of the Committee who would want to see the situation arise where on February 6 funds would not be available to the W. P. A. to meet their pay rolls. For that reason I want to express the very earnest hope that the Committee will permit this legislation to pass, substantially in the form in which the committee has reported it. We will very shortly get Budget estimates for the 1940 relief program. Then the way will be wide open for the Congress to do whatever in its wisdom it may wish to do with reference to a permanent program or a change of permanent policy.

Undoubtedly, there are many things that should be done. Some amendments will be offered here today that embody fine suggestions. My good friend from Georgia is going to offer an amendment which will seek to more nearly equalize the rate of pay by W. P. A. in the different localities of the country. There is much merit in that suggestion. My good friend from Alabama is going to offer an amendment which will have for its purpose preventing the exploitation of W. P. A. workers and to prevent money from being paid to workers who belong to communistic organizations.

Our friends on the minority are going to offer an amendment, in the way of a motion to recommit, which, if enacted into law, would dismantle relief in America. If you would pass the minority viewpoint today and only appropriate money until April, you would absolutely throw chaos and confusion into the ranks of the relief situation in America. I am perfectly willing for those boys to have their little game of politics on that and introduce their amendment and have it voted down, but the worst thing that could happen for the relief situation in America today would be to adopt any such

So I do hope that my colleagues will permit this legislation to go forward, go to the other end of the Capitol, and we will send it there with our prayers that it may be speeded on its way, and that temporary funds may be made available. and that the Congress then, in a more orderly, logical, and leisurely fashion, may approach this broad question of public policy and change of policy.

I yield the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, the time for general debate has expired. The Clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to continue to provide work relief on useful public projects, and relief, as authorized in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, and subject to all of the provisions of such act, there is hereby appropriated to the Works Progress Administration, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $725,000,000, which amount shall be added to the $1,425,000,000 appropriated to that Administration in section 1, subsection 1, of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 and shall proportionately increase the amounts specified in limitations (1), (2), and (3), of (d) of subsection (1) of section 1 of such act: Provided, That the provisions of section 2 of such act prescribing February 28, 1939, as the end of the period over which the funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration shall be apportioned and distributed are hereby amended so as to prescribe June 30, 1939, as the end of such period: Provided further, That notwithstanding any of the provisions of section 2 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, the amount herein appropriated shall be so apportioned by the Works Progress Administration as to cover the entire period from the date of the approval of this act until June 30, 1939: by the Works Progress Administration as to cover the entire period from the date of the approval of this act until June 30, 1939: Provided further, That the limitation of $60,000,000 in section 3 of such act, on the amount that may be allocated to other Federal departments, establishments, and agencies is hereby increased to $83,000,000: Provided further, That the words "and prior to February 28, 1939," are hereby deleted from section 23 of such act: Provided further, That the provisions of Executive Order No. 7916, dated June 24, 1938, shall not apply to positions the compensation of which is payable from appropriations contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or from the amount appropriated in this coint resolution, and such appropriations shall not period the appropriation act of 1936 or from the amount appropriated in this joint resolution, and such appropriations shall not be available for the compensation of the incumbent of any position placed in the competitive classified civil service of the United States after January 10, 1939.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from South Dakota for the purpose of propounding a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do, Mr. Chairman. Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to propound this parliamentary question, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask again for the benefit of the House and the Committee, particularly for the newer Members of the House, whether the Chair will interpret this as a strictly appropriation bill or a joint appropriation and legislative bill, under which legislative amendments are in order? I may say that in view of the large number of new Members, the present distinguished occupant of the chair could help, I think, in our deliberations, since this is the first bill of this character.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The Chair will be glad to answer the gentleman. This is not strictly an appropriation bill. However, it is a legislative bill carrying an appropriation. Therefore amendments to it would depend upon their germaneness. Prior to going into Committee of the Whole certain points of order were waived by unanimous consent. The present occupant of the chair cannot see why that was at all necessary, because the Committee on Appropriations was well within its rights, well within the rules of the House, in bringing in the bill as it did.

This being a bill for work relief and for relief, it would depend entirely upon the germaneness of the amendments hereafter offered.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Woodrum of Virginia: On page 3, line 3, before the period, insert ", but this proviso shall not apply to positions the compensation of which is payable from appropriations made in subsections (5), (6), (7), and (8) of section 1 of the said Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this provision is to clarify the so-called civil-service provision in the joint resolution. Without this provision the inhibition aganst paying funds to civil-service employees would reach out into several departments of the Government where civilservice employees are engaged in carrying on work for the Relief Administration, while in some other departments temporary personnel has been covered into the civil service. The General Accounting Office, as a matter of fact, has some temporary employees who will go into the civil service under this same Executive order.

What the committee particularly meant to reach was the supervisory personnel of the Works Progress Administration in the Washington office, which numbers about 2,000, and in the field, which numbers about 35,000. With the adoption of this amendment that will be clarified.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. This is an amendment which would throw all of the Treasury and General Accounting Office employees under civil service and give them a civil-service status.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; and employees of other Federal agencies paid out of emergency relief funds.

Mr. TABER. And after they have been given civil-service status, as W. P. A. operations decline, as some of us hope they will some time, and these people are thrown off the rolls, they will have preferential status over everyone who has taken a competitive civil-service examination for any appointments that were made in the Government. Is not that correct?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman and I have discussed that. I do not quite agree with his viewpoint. There are temporary employees in the General Accounting Office and in the Treasury who are covered into the civil service by this Executive order, that the language in this bill would not touch; but I do not understand that they are entirely engaged on W. P. A. work.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does it affect employees of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This proviso will save those

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman means that his amendment will protect those people now covered under civil service?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It is true, is it not, that those people are not regularly on the W. P. A. at all but that they are merely paid out of funds which are appropriated in the same bill,

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the last appropriation bill which this amends carries a provision giving preference to American citizens and preference to veterans. I would like a ruling from the Chair to ascertain whether under this particular bill which does not carry that preference, the old preference would carry over as to American citizens and veterans of the World War and Spanish-American War?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, would not attempt to answer that inquiry at the present time, because it is entirely premature and would only attempt to answer it in the event amendments along that line were offered.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, I can answer the gentleman's question. The provisions to which he alludes are in the permanent law and will apply to this appropriation the same as to any other.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has studied the problem and is sure of that fact?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. One does not have to study it to know that it does; yes.

Mr. FISH. The reason I said that was that this bill is being brought up in a peculiar way, and I did not know whether it included what was done before.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. Taber: Page 1, beginning in line 8, strike out "$725,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$350,000,000." Page 2, line 13, strike out "June 30, 1939," and insert in lieu thereof "April 7, 1939." Page 2, line 17, strike out "$83,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment with the idea of providing funds to carry the W. P. A. through April 7. I recognize it is absolutely impossible to abruptly cut off a set-up of this kind. You must give some time and thought to the matter. However, I believe the 23/4 months that will elapse between now and April 7 is ample time to permit the Congress to establish a definite program with reference to the administration of relief. I have fixed a figure that will carry through until April 7. It is a figure which will really carry it from February 7 to April 7, a period of 2 months. There will be plenty of money to carry on the operation through the winter months. There will be plenty of time to establish and put into effect a positive, definite program of relief, so that it may be handled without the abuses we have had, which have discredited our entire governmental set-up.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. Under the gentleman's amendment would the amount to be made available during those 2 months be more or less than proposed in the present bill?

Mr. TABER. During those 2 months the average amount to be made available would be $175,000,000 per month from February 7 to April 7. The average amount made available under the $725,000,000 appropriation is $145,000,000 a month.

Mr. MAAS. So this is not a proposal to cut the amount of relief?

Mr. TABER. During the winter months, no. It is a proposal simply to take some cognizance of seasonal situa-

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, if we are ever to get out of this situation, we must adopt some positive, affirmative program, something like this, and follow it up with a resolution and a study on the part of the committees of the House which will give us something to go by and an opportunity to solve this problem. I hate to see this dragging along in the same old way. I think it is about time for the Congress to take some positive, affirmative action.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment will be agreed to and that we will have started on our way. This is not a destructive amendment. It gives plenty of time to work the thing out, and it points out and gives us a start toward a solution of the relief program on an intelligent basis. [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. Chairman, everything that is produced in our country through agriculture and industry is the result of the labor of the beast of burden, of machinery, and human beings. What are the wages of the beast of burden today in our country? All that he receives from his master whom he serves loyally and faithfully are the food products necessary to keep him alive, besides a roof that shelters him from the ravages of inclement weather. His compensation is just enough so he can live and exist as an animal to protect the property rights of his owner invested in him.

What is the wage that the modern machine receives? Its compensation consists in being well oiled, well cleaned, well housed, and better taken care of than the beast of burden in order that the ravages of storm and weather may not disintegrate the highly mechanized machine that costs so much

What are the wages of human beings throughout the length and breadth of our country in agriculture and industry? First, starvation wages which cannot keep body and soul together and are less than the beast of burden receives, and are responsible for all the malnutrition, undernourishment, and anemia that is found in our Nation, which makes men, women, and children susceptible to all the ravages of infectious diseases. Second, we have living wages, which just barely keep body and soul together and do not permit a modern workingman to save. His wages do not equal the cost of shelter that the modern machine receives. Third, is the principle involving saving wages whereby the modern workingman may be able to receive wages that would enable him to save in times of affluence and prosperity for days of adversity and misfortune, which should be the great American formula and standard that we as Democrats and Republicans should battle and struggle together to help achieve and realize for the American worker and toiler.

Mr. Chairman, to what great principle in life does every spiritual human being dedicate and consecrate his life? In my humble opinion it is to preserve his home. To me the home is the symbol of our great American institutions. It is the barometer of our civilization. It is the foundation upon which the superstructure of our Nation must rest. To protect its welfare we are ever ready to sacrifice life and everything we hold near and dear. The home is hallowed by memories and traditions of our grandparents, parents, brothers, sisters, children, and all those whom we love and cherish.

Mr. Chairman, as go the parents, so go the children. As go the children, so goes the home. As goes the home, so go the Nation, the world, society, and civilization. If a workingman cannot earn enough to preserve his home for his wife and children when he is willing to work and work at anything, then it is the duty of the Government of the United States, interested in the welfare of spiritual human beings and interested in the preservation of its institutions, to help him preserve his home.

The purpose of my address is to speak in opposition to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who has just concluded his remarks in offering an amendment to reduce the appropriation for the relief of unemployed for the next 2 months to $375,000,000. Mr. Chairman, while I have a wholesome respect for my colleague, I believe this amendment is grossly unjust, unfair, and undeserving to millions of self-respecting Americans who are today the tragic victims of our economic depression and who are looking for an opportunity to preserve and keep intact their humble homes. If we pass the bill that the Committee on Appropriations recommended, which is $725,000,000, while the President of the United States asked for $875,000,000, it would be instrumental in liquidating from the relief rolls of the unemployed 1,100,000 men and women, while an additional 750,000 who have already been examined, certified, and approved would likewise flounder as hopeless and helpless victims on the ocean of unemployment.

The amendment of Mr. TABER would proportionately throw out of work almost one-half a million people during the next 2 months, which would be instrumental in destroying the consuming and purchasing power of these unfortunate people and help to bring about a new recession and a new catastrophic disturbance in our economic order.

Mr. Chairman, I therefore appeal to the patriotic sentiments that animate the Republicans and Democrats on both sides of this aisle to interest themselves only in the agonizing cries of human misery and suffering throughout our Nation appealing to us to help them in this great hour of their need to preserve their home, their hearth and fireside, by voting down the amendment of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber]. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

Mr. SWEENEY reserved the right to object.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I modify the request and ask that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. GIFFORD reserved the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Because so many gentleman have risen, the Chair will be unable to distribute the time unless the Chair knows in advance who should be recognized.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I see three gentlemen on their feet. I again modify my request, Mr. Chairman, and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I have not taken any time to speak on this bill up to this hour, and I should like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Again modifying my request, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the gentleman from North Carolina wanted to speak.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I do not want to speak, Mr. Chairman. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I should like to have 3 minutes of the time at the end, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Virginia that four gentlemen rose, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sweeney], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford].

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sweeney].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment presented by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] which seeks to reduce the amount of appropriation agreed upon by the committee from $725,000,000 to $350,000,000.

Today I sat in conference with the representative of the mayor of the city of Cleveland and members from the City Council of Cleveland, who pleaded with the Ohio delegation to support the sum suggested by the President of the United States; to wit, $875,000,000 as necessary to continue W. P. A. operations for the balance of the fiscal year. These gentlemen presented a gloomy, discouraging picture, registering despair and tragedy in my city of Cleveland, where there are now 71,000 men and women employed on the W. P. A. program in that area, and approximately 16,500 men and women certified as eligible, and waiting for assignment to W. P. A. projects. Daily thousands are being laid off, and an attempt is made to have the city and other social agencies assume the responsibility of caring for these unfortunates. The municipality, and the State departments of old-age pension, mother's pension, and other agencies are not able to carry the load. The result, these people are facing a critical situation. Let us be practical about this Federal aid to the unemployed. Whether you believe it or not, it is my humble opinion that we are going to have a permanent Federal relief The greatest problem before our country today is set-up. the solution of unemployment, which has been made possible by technological advances, especially in the mass-production fields. Mass production must have its corollary, mass consumption. There is no consuming purchasing power worthwhile talking about in this country with its vast resources unequaled in any country in the world. I wonder how many Members of this Congress are familiar with this subject? Have you ever made a personal study of this problem as it affects large industrial centers? Let me take you in fancy into a mass-production factory. For instance, the Ford Motor Co., the Fisher Body, and similar corporations who employ thousands of men, sometimes as high as 75,000. As we enter these factories we notice the absence of men who are 45 years of age, or over. All the employed are young men, employed because of their muscle, their sinew, and their ability to endure physical strain.

In some of these factories a turret automobile top can be stamped out in 14 seconds. The operator of a modern machine is literally chained to its handle. Listen to the humming of the machinery as we start through a mass-production factory. Interpreted, it is repeating "production, production, production, and more production, causing workers to tax their strength to the straining point. In many cases these men cannot live over 5 years, because of the pace that modern industry exacts. Except but for the recent efforts of organized labor, they were never paid a decent wage. Their work was seasonable. When unemployed they had in recent days to seek W. P. A. aid and other agencies. My good friend, Congressman Sirovich, of New York, has discussed this matter of mass production on the floor of this House many times.

I recognize there is politics in W. P. A. Republican and Democratic leaders have prostituted the agency. In many cases there is incompetence on the part of the administrators in charge of employing thousands, who, physically strong and through no fault of their own, are unable to find work to support their families and themselves. In the State of Ohio we have an administrator who is charged with the employing and supervising of 288,000 of our citizens. This man in charge of this great segment of our human family is a horse doctor, who never had any knowledge or experience, so far as I can determine, in the handling of human beings. He has been discourteous, arrogant with Members of Congress, and has loaded the pay roll in the administrative brackets with alleged professional social workers and freaks of every description. However, I am more concerned today with the allocation of funds to carry on the W. P. A. than I am with the political aspects of this controversy. By his conduct he was responsible for the defeat of 15 Democratic candidates for Congress in Ohio and the entire State Democratic ticket. He demoralized the trucking industry by insisting upon the competitive-bid system for truck hire and discriminated against the singleoperator truck owner. It is my judgment that the mayors of the 86 cities of the United States whose report is contained in the hearings before the subcommittee on this appropriation bill are correct in their statement that business and industry have not improved sufficiently to absorb large numbers of the unemployed, as stated on the floor of this House today. That it will be necessary to appropriate $915,000,000 in this deficiency appropriation bill is the opinion of the mayors of these large cities, and in a sense they are a factfinding body or commission. They reached their conclusion after a thorough study of facts in their communities and their experience with the unemployment situation for the past few years.

I will support the amendment for $915,000,000, suggested by the Conference of Mayors. Failing in that, I ask you in God's name to at least support the amendment suggested by the President of the United States, who also has knowledge of the true situation in the Nation. This amount is $875,000,000. The amount under consideration is nothing more or less than a stopgap, and in my opinion, would necessitate renewing the controversy in April for the purpose of making political capital for the Republican minority. I stand here today cognizant of the situation in my congressional district, which is a good cross section of conditions as they exist throughout the United States, and plead for aid for these unfortunates. I have lived with this W. P. A. problem for a long time. Since the Seventy-fifth Congress adjourned in June 1938, it was my experience to talk to 75 to 100 applicants daily, all seeking employment. I heard strong men, responsible for the care of their families, threaten to commit suicide. Reports disclose that suicides are common throughout the country as the result of unemployment. I can fully appreciate the sentiment of those who believe that the Federal Government should get out of this employment and relief business, but until such time as industry can assume its full responsibility in taking from the Government pay rolls those who should be working in the factories and shops of our country, there is no alternative for the Nation except shoulder the responsibility of at least feeding, clothing, and giving shelter to those making up the Government itself.

On several occasions I have bluntly stated on the floor of this House that unless the Government does continue its responsibility I am fearful of the riots and disorder that may follow. In other words, putting it bluntly again, you have to feed them or fight them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I know how persuasive these emotional and sometimes near-hysterical speeches can be; but, after all, we must be guided by the Record, and that is the only thing on which you can defend your position when you go back home. All the melodrama of this Well will not be there as so much theatrical background. You will have to go by the Record.

My esteemed and scholarly friend the gentleman from New York, Dr. Sirovich, did not exactly state the case. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] does not take anyone off the rolls. Colonel Harrington, who is now administering the W. P. A., came before the committee and gave the figures which are shown on page 61 of the hearings. For 2 months, February and March, there will be about 3.000.000 people on the rolls, at an estimated cost of $183,-000,000 per month. Multiply $183,000,000 by 2, and you get $366,000,000. The gentleman from New York proposes to appropriate $350,000,000 for those 2 months; that is all. This might necessitate taking a few people off the rolls, but very few, indeed. There is no intent to knock anybody off the rolls. The amendment is designed to give 60 days in which to keep W. P. A. going, not interfering in any way whatever with the administrative set-up and changing exactly nothing here or in the field offices, and at the same time give the Congress 60 days in which to look into the problem.

The chairman of the subcommittee stated a little while ago that in a short time there will be a message before the Appropriations Committee with respect to the proposed relief act for 1940, or the next fiscal year. We have not an lota of fact at the present time on which to change the set-up as written into the act in 1938. We expect to take about 60 days in which to make an investigation, probably prepare some very necessary amendments that even the President of the United States recognizes as necessary as stated in the message that came here on January 5, dealing with the request for $875,000,000.

Mr. DALY and Mr. SIROVICH rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The so-called stopgap that my friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sweeney] refers to is not a stopgap at all. We will be here 60 days hence, and we will hear the clamor, if there be any, and we will hear also the demand of the people of this country to see that there is a house-cleaning in the States where necessary, and that there is an efficient expenditure of the taxpayer's dollar. You can scarcely defend your position in view of the disclosures of the Senate committee under the leadership of Senator Shepard unless you vote for this proposal which will give us an opportunity then to make the best of the many recommendations made by that committee relative to work-relief acts in the future and providing a penalty for fraud or for prostituting the purposes of the act.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. The distinguished gentleman quoted the Administrator of W. P. A., Colonel Harrington. I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but I have heard members of that committee on the floor of the House quote Colonel Harrington as insisting that we need $875,000,000 to continue adequately the work of W. P. A. Now, if you cut the amount of $875,000,000—

Mr. DIRKSEN. I must refuse to yield further in order that I may answer that statement.

The gentleman from New York did not make that announcement here a moment ago. What he aimed to persuade this House on was that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York would virtually hamstring and knock all these people off of the relief rolls or the W. P. A. rolls at the present time. This does not interfere with the administrative set-up one whit. It only gives us 60 days within which to look into the matter further, and we are entitled to that because this Congress is only 9 days old. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak on this matter, but when the chairman of the subcommittee attempted to limit the debate on this most important matter which will be the motion made later to recommit, it is highly important that a reasonable time should be allowed to discuss it.

It is very unfair of the chairman of the subcommittee to say simply that if this motion prevails it will sabotage the whole program. The gentleman did not explain why, and he did not want to explain why. He simply said we would have plenty of time after this resolution is passed and before Congress adjourns to bring in a permanent plan. How familiar is the ring of that statement. The gentleman has made it practically every year now for the last several years. permanent plan is apparently yet in a dim future. We should recall the C. W. A., which smelled to heaven. Its name was changed so that the public might forget it. They renamed it the E. R. A. Later they changed that name to W. P. A., and year after year has gone by without any attempt whatsoever to bring in here any permanent set-up or plan. The gentleman himself is busy day in and day out on the Appropriations Committee. The gentleman is apparently much too busy to give attention to a permanent plan.

The last speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen], clearly showed you, and made it fully understood, that this does not interfere in the slightest with the plan or set-up of this relief question.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Sweeney] talked about the songs of the wheels of industry. I listened to them formerly in the city which I represent. Many of those wheels turn no longer, largely because of what the Government itself has done to the industry. The assessed values in that city have decreased more than one-half in a few short years. It needs a large share of relief funds. Many cities do not. The wealthiest city in this country, the city of New York, where we from the country constantly take our savings largely for entertainment or investment. Yet this wealthy city seems begging for tremendous amounts of money from Federal funds to save its tax rate, as do many others, and this was clearly shown by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia. It has been shown that wealthy towns and cities have taken their full share and reduced their tax rate. Many were fully able to take care of their own relief needs. Truly, a new method of apportioning funds for relief should immediately be adopted.

There has been no attempt to apportion this money according to need. We of the minority are mindful of the sentiment reflected by the vote of last November and insist that you formulate at once a permanent method for distribution of these funds to the needy and not for other purposes. I hope, now that the situation is getting a little clearer, that the chairman of this committee cannot influence us by a broad statement saying we would sabotage the whole thing if this passed without any explanation whatever. We do not take his extravagant statement without a demand for a fuller understanding of the effects of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to indulge in partisan politics in relief, because I feel that we are discussing primarily cause and effect. The other day in speaking in New York, Chairman Eccles, of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, said:

What, to my mind, we can and should have is the fullest possible encouragement to private enterprise upon which our system essentially depends. Private enterprise, business, industry, agriculture, have always, even in the depth of depression, provided employment and income for the overwhelming majority of our people. At best, government, through relief, made work, or otherwise, can hope to provide for only a relatively small proportion of the total. Certainly we cannot substitute government for private enterprise and still have our system.

I have emphasized those two words, "our system." At the same time the Governor said this:

I feel that, functionally, the Government through monetary and fiscal policy, through taxation, through Budget and other policy can do much to make economic progress smoother and steadier, with the main objective always of a maximum of employment in private enterprise.

The Governor also said:

The banking system as a whole creates money by its lending and investment operations. Conversely, when loans and investments will decrease, deposits, that is money, decrease correspondingly. Because of this function of creating money, the banking system as a whole plays a role of the greatest importance in the functioning of a debtor-creditor economy.

We are dealing with debits and credits, the issuing of debtbearing securities, which we must feed into our banking system. The Federal Reserve Board quotes under date of January 5 that the excess reserves of member banks were, on January 4, 1939, $3,300,000,000, and that they increased $230,000,000 for the week.

The banks have no place to invest their excess reserves today except in Government paper, and that brings about an absolute stagnation of industry and industrial enterprise and private employment, as evidenced by further information which has just been furnished me by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Bank, in which they show that in 1929 the total debits to individual deposits accounts at reporting banks amounted to $983,000,000,000; in 1936 it amounted to only $462,000,000,000; in 1937 to $469,000,-000,000; in 1938 to only $406,000,000, which is conclusive evidence that the program we are following through this pump-priming policy is further stagnating industry and keeping people off the private pay rolls of industry. Governor was right when he said this would not solve the problem. Furthermore, since we instituted baby bonds in this country we have sold through December 31, 1938, baby bonds with maturity values of $2,075,000,000 and cash values of $1,556,000,000. We are sucking all of our private capital out of industry, away from jobs, away from employment, into the purchase of Government paper issued to finance programs such as you are advocating here today. I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber]. I believe this policy of pump-priming and debt building is a sure road to economic suicide, and I feel that it will deprive my son and your son and their sons of any opportunity whatsoever under the American system, to which the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board has so impressively referred. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, Colonel Harrington of the W. P. A. testified unequivocally and positively before the committee that to undertake a W. P. A. program on a month-to-month basis would absolutely demoralize it, that they have to pick their projects, plan them, order material, get up their rolls, and have to put people to work, and this amendment, if carried, instead of putting men to work between now and April would absolutely make chaos and confusion out of the whole thing, and I am confident that nobody in this House wants to see that situation arise. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Taber) there were—ayes 154, noes 214.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: On page 1, in lines 8 and 9, after the word "of", strike out "$725,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$875,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. The gentleman from Missouri has been recognized.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] just now said this resolution was introduced in a peculiar manner. As a matter of fact, the manner in which this resolution was introduced is unprecedented in the history of the House.

In referring to this same question this morning the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia] insisted that this was the usual procedure, and he called attention to the supply bills. That is an entirely different class of bills. The supply bills are always introduced as amended by the committees. But appropriations of this character have always been introduced as received from the Budget with committee amendments. There has not been an instance within the memory of the oldest Member on this floor when one of them has been subjected to this unprecedented procedure and has been introduced in this peculiar fashion. And inasmuch as the gentleman has persisted in such statements as he has made here today, I give below a complete list of all such bills which have been introduced from the Seventy-third Congress down to the Seventy-fifth Congress. inclusive. Here they are:

73-2. H. R. 7527.

74-1. H. J. Res. 117.

74-2. H. R. 12624.

75-1. H. J. Res. 361.

75-2. H. J. Res. 596.

75-2. H. J. Res. 679.

The gentleman from Virginia says it has been the practice to introduce such Budget estimates in this fashion. On the contrary, there is a complete list of every such appropriation since the Seventy-third Congress and not a one of them has been introduced in the exceptional manner followed in the introduction of the pending resolution. In fact, the procedure in handling a resolution of this character is so long established and so well understood that the clerk of the committee always prepares the resolution as a matter of routine. And when I first saw this resolution the clerk of the committee, following the usual practice, had drawn it as all preceding resolutions had been drawn. But when received from the document room after being reported from the committee it was in the form in which it is being considered here this afternoon. I went to the gentleman's office. I told him it was important from a party point of view that the Republicans, practically all of whom had made prodigal campaign promises, be put on record in this vote. He assured me he would call the committee together and make the change. He announced to the press that he would make the change. But in the meantime it was rumored about that if the Republicans were put on record some of them would have to support the Budget estimate in order to redeem campaign pledges and the change was not made.

Now, what is the significance of this change in procedure? There is one result, and only one. When introduced in this exceptional form the House cannot be assured of a record vote on the reduction. That is the sum and substance of the whole matter. It is a question of getting a record vote. That is all there is to it.

Mr. Chairman, to deny a record vote is subversive of representative government. When the Constitution of the United States was written the founding fathers put into that great document only two House rules. First, they provided that the House could not transact business without a quorum. Then they provided that, on the request of one-fifth of the Members, you could have the yeas and nays on any vote in the House. And to be certain that the citizens of the Republic were informed of the position of their representatives on any question brought to a vote in the House, they also provided at the same time that the Journal of the House containing those roll calls should be printed and published. Such a provision is indispensable in a democracy. And in that respect the newspapers of the country are rendering an invaluable service to free government.

Correspondents in the press gallery have inquired as to the manner of taking the vote on this question. They suggest that it is an important vote and that their newspapers want to carry the roll call. I have explained that the question will be taken by tellers, and an opportunity will be afforded to tabulate the vote as it passes down the aisle.

But the form in which the resolution is presented is not the only extraordinary feature of this proceeding. We have been sitting here on this side of the aisle all day yesterday and all day today listening to the most abusive debate from the Republican side of the aisle that has ever been heard on the floor of this House. They have abused our party. They have abused our administration. They have abused our leadership. They have maligned and abused the administration of this law. And there has been no answer from the Democratic table on this side of the House. Read again the report of these speeches in the RECORD for the last 2 days. And now we are asked to condone all this abuse and endorse and approve these partisan and vituperative harangues by voting with the Republican Members who made them. Never have the Democratic Members of the House found themselves in a more humiliating position.

It was a very significant thing, my friends, that when the gentleman in charge of this bill made his last speech closing the debate he was repeatedly and vigorously applauded from the Republican side of the House, while the Democratic side of the House throughout his speech remained silent.

We are nearing a vote on the resolution, one of the most important votes to be cast in this Congress. The vote is on the one issue presented by the resolution, whether to continue the W. P. A. program, whether to give the President the amount he has requested, the actual requirements of the country, or whether to arbitrarily, unscientifically, without supporting evidence either in the hearings or on the floor, vote to put 1,151,300 heads of families out of employment when there are no opportunities in private industry for them, and when there is no place to which they can turn for work or for daily bread.

That is the one issue before us and before the country this afternoon, and on that issue I submit the question. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have not taken occasion to make any remarks on this bill up to this time.

Today I have seen happen in this House what I have seen happen before—very unpopular positions taken by gentlemen who were doing what they thought was their duty to their country, and I have seen them receive inferential abuse and misunderstanding, all because they were trying to do that duty.

The chairman of this committee, my friends, is as sympathetic, is as warm-hearted, is as much interested as any man who has spoken on this floor in the problem of the man who is the beneficiary of W. P. A.; yet he, as a matter of duty, as a matter of right, has stood here and dared to take the unpopular side. Undoubtedly he will pay the penalty as has been suggested to you by the press of the opposition and by the abuse of some of the people in his own district, and all because he has tried to do what he thinks is the right thing for his country.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, there is not a man on this committee who would not like to stand here and vote for $1,500,000,000, or any amount over the seven hundred and twenty-five millions, so that he could go back and say to the people in his district, "Look what a good fellow I am! Look how tender-hearted I am! Look what I did for you!" That is a delightful position to be in, but it is an impossible position for one who sat through the hearing and listened to the testimony. We are trying to do what is best for our country.

I care not, Mr. Chairman, about all the discussion of how the bill came before us. To me that is unimportant. And in a bill appropriating this amount of money I do not think political arguments and many of the other arguments that have been used are applicable or that they touch the problem at hand. Those things may be all right on other matters, but today we are dealing with the question of human misery and we are trying to relieve it. At the same time we are trying to start our country up the hill to bring us back to the country we knew before, the land of the free, where everybody is treated alike, where the rights of everyone are considered, not only the rights of the poor but of the average fellow who is on a salary, who has to pay the tax, and of all others of our citizens. Let us look the question fairly in the eye and see what we can do to take care of the load that we all want to take care of, but at the same time to give the taxpayer fair consideration.

Your committee had some things in mind when they went into the consideration of this bill that were equally important, and when they decided on $725,000,000 they had in mind that if it were possible to economize and still meet our obligations to the unfortunates, we should do it; and we have made a start. Let us do it. Second, the committee had in mind that the long-range interests of our country, including the beneficiaries of the W. P. A., require an ever-continuing effort to bring our country into a sound financial condition. The W. P. A. beneficiaries are as much interested in this, Mr. Chairman, as we are. We must bring this country back into a sound financial condition if it is to survive and even if the beneficiaries of W. P. A. are to continue receiving help.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. Another consideration in our minds was that this is not an obligation wholly of the Federal Government. Because there is misery and hunger does not mean that we can dump the entire problem into the lap of the Federal Government and say: "You take care of it." It is a load of which the Federal Government should carry its part, but the obligation also rests on the other subdivisions of our country. This should be borne in mind. The committee did have in mind that there should be a proper apportionment of the

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'NEAL. In a moment I shall be glad to yield.

The committee also considered that it should be ever vigilant in requiring prudent and careful management. With this in mind the committee received the Budget estimate, and with the same sympathy that all the rest of you would have, that every Member here has, we thought the Budget estimate could be safely reduced. Now, please remember that nobody would reduce it a dime if it could not be done safely, without causing suffering. If there were no way out, nobody would cut the amount. The W. P. A. officials stated that they need many millions more than their recommendation to take care of the entire load, so they cut the amount to $875,000,000. The committee felt that it knew where reductions could be made without undue hardship. We have studied the question. We have studied it more than the Budget Bureau has, and possibly more than most of the Members of the House have, and we felt it could be reduced and economies effected. You gentlemen know, if you have watched the business situation in your own State or cities, that business improvement has already started and that this will provide jobs for a great many people and should really make possible a greater decrease than has been anticipated.

We believe further that many of the W. P. A. enrollees, namely, the unemployables, are, technically, and probably improperly, on the rolls.

This is a work-relief program to help those men get work who are able to work. Those who are not able to work are not supposed to be on the roll. Colonel Harrington said he could effect tremendous economies if he might be allowed to take the unemployables off the rolls and put men to work who were able to work.

Further, Mr. Chairman, I think it is an unkindness-it is wrong, in order to permit the unemployables to receive these benefits, to require them to work when they are not physically able to work. They should be taken care of in some other way than through W. P. A. funds.

We also found out that other governmental activities would furnish additional employment not considered by the Budget or W. P. A.; for example, the P. W. A. This was not taken into account, but if you will look at the hearings you will find that the P. W. A. will in the near future take a large number of employables, which will be of great assistance in relieving the load of the W. P. A.

In conclusion may I say that all of us are perfectly conscious of what it means to stand up here and talk about economy. All of us are perfectly aware of the fact that it is not a popular thing to do. I would give a great deal if my conscience would let me, after hearing this testimony and considering all factors, vote for the full amount, and if I could feel that I was doing the right thing; but I do not feel that way. I heard the testimony and I recognize the necessity for reasonable economy.

I believe we can safely cut the appropriation from $6,000,-000 a day, as it is now, to $5,000,000 a day, and that is what this cut means. I would like to join with you gentlemen, but I feel, as did the committee, that it is my duty after hearing the evidence to try to bring this country back to a sound financial condition, if in doing so we do not take one dime from the people who deserve it.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. SABATH. Was there any evidence at all to show that the municipalities would take care of these men who are to be released, discharged, or dismissed, or was there evidence to the effect that in many of the larger cities it is absolutely impossible for the cities and for the States to take care of these unfortunate people?

Mr. O'NEAL. I will answer that question. Many of these mayors represented towns that were not doing proportionately what other towns were doing and the contribution of some of the cities as compared to others was comparatively little.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we cannot agree to time on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] he was about to recognize the gentleman from Washington to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Is that a pro forma amendment or an actual amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. A bona fide amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I wonder if we could limit debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] and all amendments thereto to 30

Mr. Chairman, in view of the apparent number who wish to speak, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum]?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment on the desk on which I would like to have the opportunity to speak.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am sure the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are a number of other amendments that will be offered here and I want to speak on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon]. I am afraid if the time is limited those of us who wish to speak on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri will not have that opportunity.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffee] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Coffee of Washington to the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: Page 1, line 8, after the word "of", strike out the words and figures "$875,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "$1,050,000,000."

WE MUST NOT "LET THE PEOPLE DOWN"

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment in the amount of $1,050,000,000, which is the Workers' Alliance recommendation as to the Works Progress Administration, in order to bring before this honorable body a discussion of the exigent need for further financial appropriation for the W. P. A. workers.

Much has been said upon the floor and in the sui generis Dies committee concerning the Workers' Alliance as to whether or not it is a patriotic organization. I am concerned solely with the 3,000,000 Works Progress Administration workers in the United States, and for them I am speaking on this floor today.

The amendment which I have offered proposes to restore to the Works Progress Administration 3,200,000 workers in all, including those employed at the present time; in other words, to bring back to the rolls of the W. P. A. the same number who were on those rolls on October 15, 1938.

NEED OF HUNGRY SOLE ISSUE

I have heard statements made on this floor by distinguished gentlemen to the effect that political repercussions, deleterious of their political ambitions, would accrue by reason of their championship of a reduction in the W. P. A. I think some of the gentlemen may come from districts where the championship of rigid economy at the expense of the unemployed would redound to their advantage politically. Hence, it requires no courage for them now to advocate drastic curtailment of W. P. A.

However, regardless of that fact, I am not viewing this situation subjectively; I am trying to look at it objectively. We should not be concerned with our political fortunes in this controversy. Personally, I am not worried about them. I came back here with a 41,000 majority, an increase over the vote I received in the Democratic landslide of 1936. However, I do know that out on the Pacific slope there is imperative need for the restoration to the W. P. A. rolls of a vast number of workers.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. COFFEE of Washington. I am sorry, I have only 5 minutes.

SPENDING AS AID TO PROSPERITY HAS BEEN PROVEN

We do know that such prosperity as we have achieved in the last 6 or 7 years was brought about to a large extent by Federal spending. I well recall that on April 20, 1937, when the first drastic cut in the W. P. A. was proposed, a few of us sitting on this floor then said the date would be historical because that date would be contemporaneous with the inception of the new depression. Our prediction made at that time during the debate on this floor concerning the W. P. A. was proved subsequently to be true, when in the winter of 1937-38 the recession attained its full velocity.

SHALL WE BE THE HOPE OR NEMESIS OF THE UNEMPLOYED?

I now provide this body an opportunity to vote to restore to the W. P. A. rolls the same number of workers that were employed on October 15, 1938. I appeal to the Members of this body to put human rights above property rights. I appeal to the Members of this body and ask them whether or not the first economies proposed are going to be taken out of the hides of the unfortunate, the starving, and the needy of the United States? What kind of message are you going to take back to those who are unemployed in America? When you go back home this summer, are you going to say you were so interested in economy you saw to it the first attempt at economy should be imposed upon the needy and the starving?

PITIFUL EPISODES SHOULD MOVE US

Some reference was made in this debate to a certain city where a thousand women were lined up in front of the W. P. A. headquarters hoping for relief. I will tell you in what city that incident occurred. It was in the great city of St. Louis, ably represented here by some of the distinguished gentlemen who have spoken in this debate. My heart aches with pity when I think of the thousands of these needy people in the richest land on the face of the earth, which is now contemplating appropriating more money for its Navy than any other nation on the face of the earth. Yes, we are crass and callous when it comes to spending money freely for the birds in the air, for the beasts in the forests, and for the insects in the ground, but when it comes to relieving poverty and distress among our unemployed, we are too often apathetic to their piteous appeals. [Applause.]

ECONOMISTS SUPPORT SPENDING AS NECESSARY NOW

Mr. Chairman, recently seven nationally prominent economists identified with Harvard University and Tufts College—Richard V. Gilbert, Paul M. Sweezy, Maxine Y. Sweezy, George H. Hildebrand, Jr., Arthur W. Stuart, John D. Wilson, and Lorie Tarshis—wrote a provocative brochure entitled "An Economic Program for American Democracy." In this arresting little volume will be found confirmation, in logical arguments set forth by these experts, of the soundness of the views expressed by that school which ascribes prosperity in the machine age in America as inseparable from a program of governmental spending. I quote from a trenchant statement in this work:

The conclusion is inescapable that the 1933-37 recovery had its origin in the Federal Government's contribution to community expenditure, and that the whole process of cumulative expansion of income, output, and employment rested upon public spending as a foundation.

The Government must assume responsibility for maintaining the national income at a sufficiently high level to assure full and effective utilization of our human and material resources if needless hardship and suffering are to be averted and a decent standard of life for the common man attained.

These economists deny that spending menaces Federal financing. There was a gross increase of debt of $15,500,-000,000 over 5 years, which increased national income by $30,000,000,000 a year, while annual debt charges increased by but $238,000,000, yet national revenues increased $4,400,-000,000 per year.

TREMENDOUS INCREASE IN NATIONAL ASSETS MADE POSSIBLE

Investments in flood control, in housing, in public health and reforestation, in communications and water power, it is contended, will lead to a net increase of general welfare, and effectuate, within a reasonable time, a national income of $80,000,000,000 a year.

Certainly no reasonable person can deny that the cycle of prosperity has moved up or down in just the proportion that Federal expenditures have increased or decreased. One cannot laugh off nor exorcise this situation.

POLITICS BUGABOO GREATLY EXAGGERATED

Much has been said in this debate to the effect that politics has saturated the W. P. A. The gravamen of this viewpoint has been carried by our Republican friends in this House. The irony of it is that many of them are in this body by reason of the espousal of their candidacy by W. P. A. workers. It has been my observation that politics works both ways. In any large organization, controlling the livelihood of millions, there is bound to occur now and then an instance, sporadically, of maladministration, corruption, discrimination, political influence. I do not exculpate the W. P. A. of these charges, but I emphatically deny that the proportion of such instances reaches anything like the degree insisted upon here by the proponents of a drastic cut.

WHY SHOULD WORKERS SUFFER FOR MISTAKES OF FEW?

Mr. Chairman, the attitude of those who indict W. P. A. executives with the charge of political chicanery is beyond my comprehension. They would visit their anger upon the helpless and inarticulate, just as they have vented their indignation in this debate. I categorically deny the justice of imposing upon the unemployed rank and file vengeance or hatred against men in executive positions false to their trust. It seems to me that it savors in some degree of the policy recently inaugurated by a European dictator, who persecutes the Jewish race in his own country unmercifully because of the demented, criminal act of one misguided member of that race residing in a foreign country.

MINIMUM W. P. A. WAGE SHOULD BE 25 CENTS PER HOUR

The W. P. A. has so far failed to enforce the 1938 Relief Act with reference to minimum wages. The Fair Labor Standards Act became effective October 24, 1938. Since that date the W. P. A. has failed in its duty to pay 25 cents per hour minimum wage universally on the W. P. A. through lack of funds. It seems to me that we should enable the Government to set the example by paying its own employees in the W. P. A. a minimum of 25 cents per hour, even though it may be contended such employees are not engaged in interstate commerce.

MAYORS ARE AWARE OF NEED

The United States Conference of Mayors has, in condensed language, notified each Member of Congress of the tragic situation which will ensue if the recommendation of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, to wit, to reduce the approprition to $725,000,000 is accepted by the Congress. Under the reduced amount employment on the W. P. A. will drop from 3,081,300 January 1, 1939, to 1,930,000 by June 30, 1939, a net reduction of 1,151,300 needy workers in a brief period of 6 months. Can anyone here conceive of the poignant suffering which will be the inevitable lot of these heads of families, as they are dumped upon a cruel and merciless world by a Congress, so motivated by economy, and so impressed by Tory editorials with the need for retrenchment that it imposed the restriction upon the very folks least able to bear the pain?

WE SHOULD NOT ISOLATE OURSELVES FROM THE PROBLEM

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members of Congress: Do not isolate yourselves in ivory towers and view the situation cold-bloodedly from afar. Are we a group of heartless philosophers assembled upon a lonely peak in Darien, who wish to cut ourselves off entirely from the problems of the world? I sometimes think that residence in this beautiful city of Washington insulates Members of Congress from the heartaches of the plain people at home. I hope I will be disillusioned in that conviction by the vote cast by the Members here today. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not very optimistic. I have heard the rumblings already here in this House. Though our Republican friends will almost unanimously vote for the final appropriation, it is regrettable that the votes they individually cast upon important amendments to this measure will not be revealed in the Congressional RECORD so that their constituents at home may know how they stood.

STATE OF WASHINGTON FACES SERIOUS HARDSHIP

In my own State of Washington, where unemployment conditions have been acute for years in the industrial areas, the retrenchment proposed by the committee will unavoidably necessitate a reduction in the total employed on the W. P. A. from 53,300 on December 31, 1938, to 33,400, as of June 30, 1939, a total net reduction of 19,900 heads of families.

I have never contended that the W. P. A. was a solution for unemployment. At best, it is a panacea of transitory character. It is a stop-gap. I compare it with the effectiveness of insulin in the treatment of diabetics. Insulin does not cure, but it keeps the patient alive. This Congress has lacked the intestinal fortitude necessary to attack the economic problem head-on. It has dodged, it has temporized, it has indulged in circumlocution. In this streamlined, machine age we have permitted the machine to emerge as the master rather than the slave of its creator.

THE PEOPLE ARE LONG SUFFERING

How long, O Lord, how long must the long-suffering people wait for reform in the form of substantial national oldage pensions, money reform, agricultural relief, and so forth? Until that day arrives, Mr. Chairman, I contend that it is the burden of the Government to show by legislation that no able-bodied unemployed head of a family shall be sent out into the pasture alone and forsaken. That is our duty and our obligation. Will you join me, then, in supporting my amendment? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dunn].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffee]. I sent an amendment to the desk seeking to increase the appropriation to $1,100,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, last fall the majority of the Members of Congress did their utmost to impress upon the minds of their constituents that if they were elected to Congress they would do what they could to provide adequate relief for the unemployed. When there are approximately 14,000,000 people unemployed in the United States, $1,100,000,000 is not one cent too much to appropriate for their relief; therefore this progressive and humanitarian amendment should be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. As the Committee knows, debate has been limited on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri and all amendments thereto. In view of the fact that other amendments to that amendment may be desired to be offered, the Chair thinks that in the interest of orderly procedure a vote should now be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington to the amendment, because as long as that is pending no further amendment to the amendment can be offered.

Therefore, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffee] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Daly], a member of the committee, is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

After the election of 2 months ago the Republican newspapers of the country, the Republican press of this country, the Republican editors, and Republican leaders all over the country boasted of the fact that they had gained a certain number of new Members in the House, and that a coalition was about to be formed between them and Members on the Democratic side of the House who were opposed to the New Deal and desired to hit the Chief Executive of the Nation.

In the light of the peculiar legislative procedure we have adopted here, the details of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] gave you in a manner on which I could not hope to improve, we are confronted with a remarkably peculiar situation that would prevent a roll call and give Republicans a chance to avoid placing themselves on record on this grave matter.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish], in alluding a few moments ago to something that for the moment I have forgotten, said, "It stinks and shines and it shines and stinks." I wonder if he had in mind this very procedure, because to me it both shines and stinks.

I want to put on record not only the Republicans, whom I do not blame very much for their partisanship, because it is all they have to boast of and all they have ever stood for, but also put on record what I call the reactionary Democrats, who have joined with the Republicans in this desire to thwart the beneficial effects of the New Deal and to snipe at the President of the United States. I venture to say right now that if I asked if any Republican was willing to have a roll call on this matter, not one of them would stand up; and if I applied that test to my own side of the House, I wonder how many of those who may have joined in this agreement that is most peculiar would be willing to stand up.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALY. I will not yield.

What we have before us is this: As I understand, the only evidence adduced before the subcommittee was the evidence of Colonel Harrington, the Budget Bureau, and the message of the President of the United States delivered on the floor.

This was the only evidence, and they all agreed that at least $875,000,000 was necessary, and absolutely necessary, to have the W. P. A. set-up carry on. Where was there any evidence otherwise, and when the gentleman from Virginia stated that they carefully considered the evidence offered before the subcommittee, if I understand it correctly, all the evidence they had was evidence in support of at least $875,000,000. This is the sum that is necessary in the opinion of those who know. We had an appropriation made up to the 1st of March of $1,425,000,000, which reduced practically to $1,400,000,000 by certain provisions, and this provided for 7 months, or $200,-000,000 a month, and even at that P. W. A. projects had to be cut, P. W. A. employees had to be laid off; and, taking that figure, it would require at least $1,000,000,000 for the remaining 5 months of the present fiscal year; and yet there are gentlemen who say that with those figures and facts known to them $725,000,000 will be a sufficient sum to provide for the unemployed and destitute in the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, being a freshman, I do not want to seem presumptuous in addressing this body within the first 2 weeks of its opening. However, the introduction of House Joint Resolution No. 83, calling for an additional appropriation for the Works Progress Administration to meet the deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, has precipitated my making some brief remarks as to what, in my opinion, motivated the people of the United States in electing Republicans and real Democrats as distinguished from new dealers.

On November 8, 1938, the people rendered a decision in a series of trials which were started some time prior, wherein the administration and its representatives were on trial defending themselves against charges made by the Republicans, and in many cases the real Democrats. Their defense was the record of 6 years of unprecedented expenditures and an all-time high of the public debt. The prosecution, in laying its case, had many charges of governmental waste, unnecessary expenditures, fantastic undertakings, and the use of public funds indiscriminately as a campaign fund to perpetuate in office the administration and its representatives, to say nothing of the constant delegation of power from Congress to the President. Both sides submitted to the jury, the electorate, on election day. The result is apparent. The defense, the administration, was found guilty, and we now have a Congress made up of a greatly augmented delegation of Republicans and real Democrats. The people have spoken. It is a mandate and an order to us, representing the people, to carry out those statements and promises made by us in the campaign which resulted in our election, to wit, to do everything reasonable and in our power to stop governmental waste and expenditure of public funds, the removal of politics from relief, and to bend every effort to prevent the use of the suffering of our unfortunates and unemployed as a political sinecure.

Immediately upon our entry into the Halls of Congress we are informed by the administration that due to excessive expenditures and waste of W. P. A. funds for election purposes that there is a deficiency for the balance of the fiscal year, and it is necessary to appropriate $875,000,000 to carry on the W. P. A. program for the balance of the fiscal year.

I might say in the outset, having been associated with a municipal government for 9 years, I recognize the desperate financial plight of the average municipality in trying to cope with the crying need of those who are victims of the depression, to keep them from want, and I am heartily in favor of the Federal Government subsidizing the States and municipalities to assist in their burden of relief. Until this country has risen from the depths of depression and once more business and industry can function, I cannot conscientiously stand by and see anyone go hungry or in want for clothing or warm homes. But how can business recover as long as the Government continues to excessively spend money? Under the present form of the legislation now to be considered, and having been introduced, hereinbefore referred to, the appropriation will be allocated and administered in the same manner and method as it was prior to the first of this year, without restrictions as to what amount will actually find its way to the relief and assistance of those in want or what amount will be used for the administration of it.

In my State, New Jersey-and I believe in a great many other States, if not all—there is in the State government at the present time a relief administration adequately manned with properly qualified investigators and administrators well versed in the methods of administering relief; and in my city—and I believe in a great many cities in the United States—under the director of relief, there is also an organization composed of experts in the administration of relief and a full and competent staff of investigators, all of whom are competent and better acquainted with the needs of the people to handle the expenditure of public funds than is the present W. P. A. administration. We are all aware of the method used in the appointment of the district employees of the W. P. A. administration, and I speak with complete knowledge of my own district, without presuming to have knowledge of others, and I may be in error as to some districts. I am well aware that in my district the administration of the W. P. A. and the employees, as distinguished from the recipients, have all been appointed because of their political position and not because of their knowledge of relief. The higher a person is in the Democratic political machine, the better the job he has received in the W. P. A. administration office. Also, we are all aware of the fact that a man's voting record indicates, even to the recipients, what classification he is in. Is it not a duplication of effort and an unnecessary expense to maintain a W. P. A. administration when the State is equipped to handle it? Would not it be less expensive to the taxpayer to allow the present State relief administration to administer the funds? Would not a much decreased appropriation through the State render more benefit to the unemployed?

I would be heartily in favor of an appropriation to care for the needs of those in want, in spite of the fact that the deficiency was caused by wasteful spending in a desperate and vain attempt to carry an election, providing such funds were under the supervision and control of the State relief department and distributed through the municipal relief department and the funds necessary to maintain and keep in office the members of the political machine be stricken from the appropriation. I think an examination of the figures will disclose that adequate relief can be given to the unfortunates deserving it with a far less amount than is intended to be appropriated were the administration directed as I have stated. We are all cognizant of the methods used in October to further the political desires, and many were discharged from the rolls to starve because they refused to be dictated to as to whom they should vote for. The exploitation of the misfortune of our people for political purposes is deplorable and despicable and should be stopped.

It is because the resolution to be voted on does not restrict the expenditures that I am going to vote against it, and not because I am against relief. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Marcantonio to the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: Page 1, lines 8 and 9, after the word "of", strike out "$875,000,000" and insert "$915,000,000."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, at the very outset I would like to state for the RECORD that not only did I vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffee], providing $1,050,000,000, but I feel it is the most equitable figure and the most adequate figure. Failing that, I now offer the amendment providing for an appropriation of $915,000,000, which is the figure suggested by the United States Conference of Mayors. If my amendment fails, I shall vote for the Cannon amendment, which provides for the appropriation recommended by the President of $875,000,000.

It was stated by the gentleman from Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, that the cities and States could very well handle the men and women who are thrown off W. P. A. and not absorbed by private industry. Experience has taught us that private industry has absorbed mighty few of these people who have been thrown off W. P. A., and the report of the Mayors' Conference shows that where W. P. A. failed to make replacements in November and December the direct relief rolls increased, for which the cities are paying. The United States Conference of Mayors is an organization of the mayors of 86 cities. You must admit that the mayors know what the financial conditions of their cities are. They know the needs of the unemployed of their cities, and I submit that the opinion of the 86 mayors of 86 major cities, with all due respect to the majority on this committee, should have more weight with us here in determining this question than the recommendation of the majority of the full committee.

I would like to cite, for instance, an analysis which was submitted by the Conference of Mayors and which states:

1. The cities, together with the States and counties, are paying all of the costs of direct relief (now estimated at 1,650,000 cases for all of the costs of direct relief (now estimated at 1,650,000 cases for January 1 involving a monthly cost of nearly $40,000,000), 45 percent of the cost of all Works Progress Administration projects [about 25 percent of the cost of all Works Progress Administration projects], and the statutory share of the various social-security aid programs. The local share of financing this huge relief and welfare load must come, and is coming, from the only two major sources of revenue available: (1) Taxes on real estate, and (2) bond issues. To request the cities to carry any increased financial burden, under the system of taxation which they are forced to utilize, is impossible.

2 Works Progress Administration and direct-relief needs for the

2. Works Progress Administration and direct-relief needs for the next 5 months will be such as to require the maintenance of an average national Works Progress Administration quota of at least 3,000,000 workers. This will require a deficiency appropriation of approximately $915,000,000 for the balance of the present fiscal year if Federal responsibility for the destitute employable group is to be fulfilled.

3. The cities recognize that the ultimate solution of this most serious problem is to get employable destitute persons back into private employment, but pending accomplishment of this goal, it is the duty of the Federal Government to provide adequately for the needy employable unemployed. As we have so often enunciated over the past years, the American way of meeting the problem is through work and not the dole. Likewise, it is the duty of the cities and States to provide adequately for the needs of destitute unemployable persons.

This is the statement of the mayors. I suggest you read their full report which is contained in the hearings and see what W. P. A. cuts will mean to your city. When these mayors asked for $915,000,000 it was not politics. These are Republican mayors and Democratic mayors, including the mayor of Philadelphia and the mayor of Pittsburgh and the mayor of Detroit, as well as the mayor of the city of These mayors know what they are talking about. They know just what their cities need. They are not sponging on the Government of the United States. They are taxing the people of their cities to the fullest extent in order to care for the people who are on relief. The cities can hardly assume any additional burden. Private industry cannot at this time absorb the W. P. A. workers that will be discharged as a result of reduced appropriations. Therefore, I again ask you, What do you propose to do with the 1,151,300 W. P. A. workers whom you force off W. P. A.? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I now include in the RECORD a letter from the Commissioner of Welfare of New York Cily, Hon. William Hodson, which gives the direct relief and W. P. A. picture in

CITY OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE, New York, N. Y., January 11, 1959.

Hon. VITO MARCANTONIO,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MARCANTONIO: There is no question but

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN MARCANTONIO: There is no question but that a curtailment in the W. P. A. appropriation may well work substantial hardships on the unemployed in New York City. Our recent experience proves this beyond a peradventure of a doubt. In November the W. P. A. in New York City started to reduce the number of placements on its rolls, and by December it had stopped making any replacements. As a consequence, our caseload immediately began to rise, so that in November and December there was a net increase in our home-relief caseload of approximately 8,600 cases. Today we have approximately 17500 cases. mately 6,600 cases. Today we have approximately 175,000 cases receiving relief in the city of New York. Included in these cases are about 550,000 individuals. Applications are still coming in at a very heavy rate—between 5,000 and 6,000 a week. Therefore, if W. P. A. does not resume its policy of filling vacancies as these occur, the city and State authorities will have to bear the full cost occur, the city and State authorities will have to bear the full cost of this rising relief load.

We have estimated that at the present rate of rise the total relief bill in 1939 will be $128,000,000, of which the city's share will be approximately $81,000,000. The comptroller of the city of New York has estimated the total yield from relief taxes at $71,300,000. Therefore the city faces a probable deficit of $9,700,000.

This picture, pessimistic as it may seem, does not assume forced W. P. A. lay-offs. Obviously a drastic cut in the W. P. A. appropriation will result in such lay-offs. Past experience has indicated a very large percentage of the persons dismissed from W. P. A. promptly return to relief. Therefore our potential deficit will still further be increased as a result of new cases that may have to be taken on in the event of a drastic W. P. A. cut. It is impossible at this time to make any estimate as to what the additional burden will be because we do not know how many W. P. A. workers would have to be forcibly separated from the pay roll in the event of such a cut.

It is clear from these figures that a difficult situation would be

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM HODSON, Commissioner.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Marc-

Mr. Chairman, we now have a situation which is very much as follows: The Conference of Mayors have asked for $915,000,000, the Appropriations Committee has brought in a bill for $725,000,000, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Coffeel has offered an amendment which was defeated, providing for $1,050,000,000, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] offered an amendment which is still pending, in the sum of $875,000,000, which is the recommendation of our distinguished President.

Now, apparently, there is grave doubt in the minds of many as to what the exact amount ought to be to carry us forward in this relief efficiently and judiciously. I would think that the great President and his very wise and sagacious aides ought to know what is appropriate and proper, and for that reason, despite the fact that I have the highest regard and respect for the judgment of the mayor of my own city and for the Conference of Mayors and their deliberations and their judgments, nevertheless I feel it incumbent to stand by the President, and I shall support willingly and with all the power within me the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri in the sum of $875,000,000.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the gentleman realize that Colonel Harrington, in defending the figure of $875,000,-000, stated that that in and of itself was not adequate?

Mr. CELLER. That may be so, but we must realize that we are approaching a very gigantic relief figure and the time must come when we will have to "haul in our sails"; and even in this extremity, if I may put it that way, we must compromise, and the figure set by our distinguished President is primarily a compromise that should meet all reasonable needs and demands. I recognize that cities, particularly my own city, are approaching situations highly dangerous. If we adopt, for example, the figure of $725,000,000, there will be placed out of jobs, those who have jobs now, many thousands in my own city of New York, and in a tabulation of 24 major cities we are shown that reductions of over 33 percent of the present W. P. A. employment quotas will be necessary by June 30. With the committee appropriation of $725,000,-000, these figures show a range in the necessity for discharge of 1,800 W. P. A. workers in Baltimore by June 30, up to 43,500 in Chicago, 21,400 in Detroit, 66,700 in New York City, 13,200 in Los Angeles, 27,200 in Cleveland, 11,200 in Boston, 9,700 in Milwaukee, 12,600 in St. Louis, and 8,900 in Philadelphia. Also, we are aware, Mr. Chairman, that these cities have reached the limitations on their debt or are approaching those limitations and are unable to borrow any more money. Their credit is practically ruined in many of these cities, and no one will purchase their bonds if they keep on issuing them. I know also that many cities cannot tax to any greater appreciable degree. We cannot increase our real-estate tax rate or assessment in New York City. We were compelled there recently to inflict upon our citizens an obnoxious sales tax, but it was necessary to take care of the city's needs. When the Government fails to provide employment by W. P. A., the cities must so provide. To do so means greater taxation to be inflicted upon an overburdened citizenry in the cities. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the President's judgment will be the judgment of this House. I say this in the spirit of compromise and fair play. The President knows better than any of us. Trust his judgment.

Furthermore, cutting down the appropriation to $725,000,000 would mean divorcing from W. P. A. employment some 1,100,000 or so men, all heads of families. Thus that many families would be dreadfully hard hit. Each family comprises, on the average, a father, a mother, and three children—five. Thus over 5,500,000 persons would face a dark, dismal winter with fear and trepidation.

Also, such a drastic cut as the committee offers would hit hardest the white-collar projects, especially the Federal art projects.

Permit a word at this juncture concerning the Federal art projects. I commend in that connection your reading carefully the splendid statement entitled "Federal Art Project," placed in the record of the hearings at page 111 et sequentia.

Yesterday some very disparaging remarks were made concerning those in charge of these projects. That was unfortunate. In general I know of no aggregation of officials that are more patriotic, efficient, and hard working than those in control of these works. Here and there you may find exceptions. Some may be Communists or dangerous radicals. Get rid of them by all means. They should have no place in any Government service. If attention is called to such employment and those in charge refuse or fail to respond properly by dismissing such Communists, those thus negligent should be fired, together with such Communists.

But, because of the wrongs or derelictions of a few in the administration of the art projects there is no reason for bringing a wholesale indictment against the entire administration.

The Federal art project is a wonderful means of interpreting America to Americans in the graphic arts—music, painting, sculpture, murals, mosaics, drama, and so forth.

Life at best is often difficult. Art removes much of life that is dull and drab and unhappy. These art projects have brought much sunshine and happiness into the lives of thousands and thousands of the poor, impoverished, and downtrodden.

We are told that all that is past is but prologue. These art projects interpret for the masses the past of America to enable us in the future to live a better and more useful life.

The work of the professional artists employed by the Works Progress Administration has been made available to millions of American people in hundreds of American communities heretofore lacking in art facilities. Works Progress Administration artists are interpreting America to Americans through almost every form of the visual arts—from vast mosaics and murals through sculpture and easel paintings, through teaching and community art center programs from eastern metropolitan areas to small communities of the far West and South.

Professional artists of all types were hard hit by the depression. The Works Progress Administration Federal art project, set up to employ jobless mural and easel painters, sculptors, art teachers, and allied workers, has operated in 41 States, New York City, and the District of Columbia. At its peak it employed 5,212 artists of all types and at the end of December 1938, 4,979. Effective January 15, 1939, this figure will be reduced to 4,700 persons.

A total of 13,458 tax-supported public institutions have received allocations of project work for which they have contributed the material and other nonlabor costs. On the walls of schools, hospitals, armories, and other public buildings all over the country hang the works of project artists. A total of more than 100,000 works of art created by Works Progress Administration artists in the fields of painting, sculpture, and graphic arts have been allocated to these institutions. Other art workers have created 550 dioramas and models, 450,000 posters, 35,000 map drawings and diagrams, 45,000 arts and crafts objects, 350,000 photographs, 10,000 lantern slides and various types of visual aids, and 10,000 Index of American Design drawings, making a grand total of about a million works of all kinds allocated by the project to tax-supported institutions during the past 3 years. In addition to these allocations there are another 25,000 works circulating in traveling exhibitions throughout the country, which will be included in future allocations. This means that for every worker now employed on the program the public has received 200 works in creative and applied art. Over 1,200 artists who are not producing work for allocation are engaged in the art educational and teaching program.

The constant drift of talent away from home communities toward the great cities has been counteracted for the first time in American art history. The initiation of the Federal-sponsored community art center program has enabled the Federal art project to carry art into areas of the country, especially in the South and West, where the people have had few opportunities to enjoy art. Since January 1936 it has established, in cooperation with local communities, 62 Federal-sponsored community art centers and galleries in Alabama, Arizona, California, Florida, Iowa, Maryland, Mississippi, Montana, New Mexico, New York State, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Virginia, Washington, Wyoming, the District of Columbia, and New York City. Other art centers are now being projected for South Dakota, Michigan, Minnesota, West Virginia, and Kansas, where communities have formed their organizations and secured sponsors' funds to make possible the establishment of art centers for these States. The interest of the communities in these art centers is attested by the fact that over $300,000 has been contributed toward the program by the communities themselves.

During this comparatively short period more than four and one-half million persons have participated in the activities promoted by these galleries. They have attended regular lectures by leading authorities on art. There have been demonstrations of the processes of art print and poster making, easel painting, fresco painting, and sculpture. They have received free instruction in art classes, and they have seen 256 exhibits circulated by the national headquarters of the Works Progress Administration Federal art project, containing the work of America's creative artists in all fields—painting and sculpture, in the graphic arts, the decorative and industrial arts, and the arts and crafts. These exhibitions have had 1,252 individual showings at the centers. More than 250 other exhibitions of local works have also been exhibited. All this has been accomplished with an employment of 425 artists who staff and operate the centers and galleries.

MUSIC PROJECT

The Works Progress Administration Federal music project was established to provide employment for professional musicians on the relief rolls. At the peak of its employment there were almost 16,000 persons engaged in carrying out its program. On December 1, 1938, the number was 11,618, and as of January 15, 1939, 9,700 will remain. The music project is operating in 42 States, New York City, and the District of Columbia.

Inherent in the program has been the principle that while the professional skills of these musicians are being preserved the workers must return certain services to their communities. Each month approximately 3,000,000 persons attend the 5,000 performances of Works Progress Administration musicians. Hundreds of musicians, their skills preserved and even improved, have returned to private employment; music teachers have been absorbed into public-school systems or have reopened private studios, and players have found work with symphony orchestras and bands.

On December 1, 1938, 428 units of the music project were in operation. They included 125 symphony and concert orchestras, 135 concert, military, and dance bands, 17 chambermusic ensembles, 32 choral and opera units, 74 teaching projects, 15 projects for copyists, arrangers, and librarians, and 30 administrative and supervisory units.

When the Federal music project was created in July 1935 thousands of musicians were unemployed. The introduction of the talkie track had removed more than 20,000 from moving-picture theater pay rolls, and with the economic depression many others lost opportunities for earning their livelihood.

In developing the program under Works Progress Administration, a first consideration was whether the unemployed musicians in a community were professionally qualified. Needy musicians were required to appear before audition committees, which judged their qualifications, and only those persons who passed their auditions were placed on the music-project rolls.

Cosponsors of music-project units include the universities of Harvard, Columbia, New York, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Temple, Ohio State, Chicago, Loyola, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Oklahoma, North Carolina, New Mexico, California, and Southern California; and the colleges of Bennington, Boston, and the City of New York.

City commissioners, city councils, county and township boards; school districts and boards of education; recreation groups, chambers of commerce, locals of the musicians' union, service clubs, fraternal orders, and veterans' organizations are also active as cosponsors. The National Federation of Music Clubs, with more than 5,000 member bodies in 48 States, was among the first to assume the responsibilities of cooperating sponsorship for the Federal music project program.

The firm insistence upon proved musical integrity in concert performances and educational activities has resulted in a significant penetration into the cultural life of many communities. Great music has been taken to millions for the first time and music instruction and music leadership generally have been carried to the underprivileged, the relief population, and the needy in remote rural regions and into the congested sections of the cities. Approximately 132,000 children and adults are receiving musical instruction in class units directed by project teachers in 26 States and the District of Columbia. All instruction is in class groups in order to avoid competition with the private teacher of individual students.

Distinguished educators and musicians have contributed their services to the project. Among those who have appeared in public concerts with project units are Arnold Schoenberg, Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Paul Hindemith, Frederick Stock, Willem van Noogstraten, Eugene Ormandy, the late Henry Hadley, Rudolph Ganz, Carles Chavez, Ferde Grofe, Arthur Fiedler, Paul Stassevitch, Giovanni Martinelli, Nina Koshetz, Carl Friedberg, Goerges Barrerre, and Ernest Hutcheson

THEATER PROJECT

Statistics: The Works Progress Administration Federal theater project, designed to give work to the theater's unemployed, gives more than a thousand performances each month before nearly a million people, 78 percent of whom pay no admission charge and many of whom have never before seen a play with living actors. To date 2,754 productions of approximately 950 different plays have been given 80,000 performances. Units at present operate in 40 cities in 20 States, playing not only in city theaters but in community halls, tents, schools, prisons, armories, churches, parks, hospitals, and Civilian Conservation Corps camps.

During the week ending December 24, 1938, the Federal theater project employed 9,841 actors, designers, technicians, playwrights, theater musicians, stage hands, ushers, and boxoffice, accounting, and secretarial people, as against a peak in 1936 of 12,700. Effective January 15, 1939, employment will be reduced to 7,900. Over a period of 3 years more than 2,000 workers have left the pay roll to return to private employment.

Plays: Plays so far produced by Federal theater fall into the following categories, some of which are, of course, overlapping: New plays, classical plays, former Broadway plays, foreign plays, stock plays, children's plays, revues and musical comedies, vaudeville, dance plays, early Americans, American agents, and marionette plays. Opinions of the project's success with such material have come from widely divergent places and people. Sinclair Lewis voiced his tremendous enthusiasm and released the dramatization of his antidictatorial, It Can't Happen Here, for simultaneous production by 21 Federal theater units. Samuel Eliot Morrison, professor of history at Harvard, expressed his hearty approval. Burns Mantle, New York drama critic, declared the project has turned the theater back to the people, to whom it rightfully belongs. Paul Green, playwright and educator, called the Federal theater the most important thing ever to occur in the history of the American drama.

Federal theater stresses, especially in cities which have no theater, production of plays by established American dramatists of the past and present. In addition, Federal theater has produced over 100 new plays by American authors, many of whom were given their first opportunity on the Federal theater project. Federal theater has produced living newspapers which originated on the project, among them Triple-A Ploughed Under; Injunction Granted; One-Third of a Nation; Flax; and Spirochete. The list of new works also includes several musical shows written on the project, among them Ready; Aim, Fire; Revue of Reviews; Swing It; and Two-a-Day. Less than 10 percent of these works of established or new American authors are concerned primarily with social problems.

In many cities Federal theater has developed a classical series giving, in addition to an extensive religious cycle from the Middle Ages, plays by Euripides, Plautus, Marlowe, Shakespeare, Beaumont and Fletcher, Lope de Vega, Molire, Sheridan, Goldsmith, Ibsen, Tolstoy, Shekhov, Shaw, and O'Neill.

Federal theater emphasizes certain lines of activity not usually stressed by commercial theater, such as children's theater, dance theater, religious theater, marionette theater, and the celebration of various civic, State, and National holidays.

Federal theater includes among its units Negro groups in several centers, among them New York City, Boston, Raleigh, Seattle, Philadelphia, and Los Angeles.

Service and research: The National Service Bureau, with offices in each of the five regions of the Federal theater project, offers advice on plays and production methods, publishes catalogs of all types of plays, and provides much other information not only to the project itself but to little theaters, schools, churches, welfare organizations, and tax-supported institutions.

Within the National Service Bureau a unit has been set up to make a historical survey of the American theater and thereby provide for the first time a comprehensive picture of the American theater, not only in book form but in photographs, microfilms, voice recordings, designs, models, life masks, and so forth.

The project also studies the theater as a force in education, therapy, and prison welfare. Cooperation with Bellevue Hospital authorities in New York City has resulted in successful experiments which have aided the progress of mental therapy. Hand-marionette companies work in hosiptals with children whose hands are paralyzed. Marionette companies have dramatized Death Takes the Wheel to cooperate with local police in a campaign against reckless driving.

Retraining: Federal theater undertakes the retraining of its personnel. In New York City, for example, when an actor finishes an engagement he reports at once to the Provincetown Theater, where, until he is again cast, he takes courses in diction, body work, fencing, reading rehearsals, and voice.

Provincetown Theater is also the center of training for an activity which provides a good avenue of reemployment for professional theater people, namely, professional leadership for community groups. Thus 300 dramatic coaches have been provided to the New York City community with the purpose of building, through community participation, new outlets for community expression and better audiences for the theater

Radio: The Federal theater radio division, which plays to an estimated weekly audience of 10,000,000, has established units in a dozen cities. A series of dramatic versions of Paul de Kruif's studies of science, Men Against Death, has been a leader among dramatic programs on the air. The radio unit also cooperates with other governmental agencies; for example, it has made a series of recordings entitled "Slums Cost You Money" for distribution by the United States Housing Authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Marcantonio) there were—ayes 21 and noes 199.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Massingale] for 3 minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can do nearly as well on 3 minutes as I could on 30 minutes, but I do hope to state to this House that I am in favor of the Cannon amendment. It is a very serious matter to my mind that we are considering here today, and there may be no telling what the consequences will be if we go ahead here cutting and slashing in the beginning of an economy campaign for the purpose of trying to balance the Budget. Just as a lawyer-and most of us here in this House have licenses to practice law-I submit this to you as a proposition. The chairman of this committee is a lovable character and very good lawyer. I believe every man who practices here, however, will agree with me that if all of the evidence that the chairman has brought forward and that those supporters of his have brought forward should be taken before a justice of the peace court, and assuming now, of course, that the Budget Committee and the President of the United States can make an issue upon which to predicate a procedure for the passage of a bill in the House, then the average justice of the peace would sustain a general demurrer to the evidence of the committee to overturn that recommendation.

The chairman of the subcommittee has been very frank about it. He says that he has no evidence. All he is acting on is rumor-rumor from somebody that we are just about now to set in on a great business upturn; and if we have that upturn, in the opinion of somebody else, there will be lots of men put to work; and he is going to put a lot of them on the P. W. A., which will absorb a lot of them and absorb also a lot in the national youth movement. My God; these W. P. A. fellows are not qualified for the youth movement: and you cannot put these girls that are going to be taken care of in the National Youth Administration on the W. P. A. It is just foolishness. Why not get down to business and pass this Cannon amendment, because it is an estimate of some capable authority, and the subcommittee recommends nothing except that we follow somebody's prediction as to what may happen. There is no fact shown by the subcommittee report upon which this committee can intelligently act. If the subcommittee's guess recommendation for a cut of $150,000,000 from the recommendation of $875,000,000 by the Budget should be followed it will put us in the attitude of endangering the lives of many who are getting a small amount of money a month upon which to live. If we have due regard to the general welfare we ought not to act upon guesswork, but should follow the recommendations of the Budget, which has given us the only evidence of what should be done. [Ap-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. TOLAN] for 1 minute.

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Chairman, in supporting this amendment increasing the amount for the W. P. A. appropriation, may I say that I do so with all sincerity after listening yesterday and today to the interesting debates on this very important piece of legislation.

This is not a political issue but one that strikes at the very hearts and souls of the American people regardless of party. As it has been repeatedly stated on the floor, the committee's recommendation of $725,000,000 means the discharge of over 1,000,000 workers and will necessarily affect other millions of dependents, and this, too, in the dead of winter.

Please let us pause and ask ourselves the question just who are these millions of workers and dependents? Why, they are the very bone and sinew of America. Thousands upon thousands of them have helped this country to be what it is today, and now they are in want and misery. And from whom are they asking help but from their paid representatives in Congress?

May I ask you just what are these millions of workers and dependents to do? The States and counties cannot take care of them. They are too intelligent to starve. What would any one of you Members do if you were cut from the W. P. A., your rent not paid, and the children hungry, and yet your next-door neighbor kept on the rolls?

As far as I am personally concerned, I do not believe that this Nation can ever survive with part of our people eating and working regularly and another part unemployed and hungry.

Yes; I know we hear much about balancing the Budget, but it never should be balanced at the sacrifice of millions of our

As individuals I know you would sacrifice your last ounce of credit for your children, for we would be poor fathers and mothers, indeed, if our children came to us out of work and hungry and we told them that we could do nothing for them, even if it broke up our families, as we must maintain our credit and balance our budgets. Uncle Sam, as the financial head of this great Nation, is in that identical position today.

This Nation will never go into decay by feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. This commandment comes straight from God, and a Nation can easily fall if we do not obey this commandment.

So I appeal to my colleagues to think twice before you vote in favor of the reduced committee amount, for if you do it means millions of discouraged and helpless men, women, and children in what is supposed to be the richest country on

Millions of people are awaiting your vote today, and if you vote for the reduced amount the great cry that will echo and reecho throughout this Nation from husband and wife, from mothers and fathers, and helpless little children, "What are we going to do now?" Let us answer that cry right here and now by at least voting for the $875,000,000 appropriation, which is based upon a scientific study.

My own personal wish is that it should be at least a billion dollars. If we do this, God will bless us and we can hold our heads high when we go home and feel happier and better, for it has been said that "happiness is like a perfume; you cannot pour it on others without getting a few drops on yourself."

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis] for 3 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, if anybody wants to know what I think about this proposition, I have a speech in the RECORD yesterday afternoon. I am for the Cannon amendment. I voted for the two other amendments. and I did that for the primary reason that I think in the protection of our democratic society and institutions, that the more you can relieve the pressure of poverty the better, and the more you increase it the worse off you are.

The factual arguments presented by the gentleman from Missouri, I stated yesterday and I repeat today, have not been answered on this floor by a single speaker. All the evidence in this case is to the effect that $875,000,000 is the least that should be appropriated for this purpose. The case of the opposition rests upon one supposition, that by cutting off people first business will reabsorb them afterward. I am convinced they have the cart before the horse. If you get real resumption of business, if you get substantial increase in national wealth production, the $150,000,000 here under consideration will not be a consequential item in comparison, as every sensible person knows. If we fail to provide for sustaining the recovery of business, if you prevent the circulation of this money at the bottom of the economic scale, and take away the consuming power of these people, then I am convinced we will destroy the hope some of us have of balancing the Budget by an increase in production instead of by a tragic decrease in consumption. I think it is penny-wise and pound-foolish to do this thing. I think, for the sake of the stable recovery of business as well as out of concern for human need, we should appropriate what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] has asked for in his amendment.

The fact that all the people who should have had work have not been on W. P. A. is certainly no argument for making the matter worse by forcing out of employment additional people. Such an argument is ridiculous. Our problem has been and is to keep our people at work, instead of idle on some kind of charitable relief. There are, I think, other ways of doing this than by W. P. A., one of which is suggested in an extension of my remarks in this RECORD. But as I have said over and over, they would be opposed even more bitterly, for they would be more fundamental. Until some of those other measures are taken, W. P. A. jobs represent a minimum of justice to the unemployed. It is little enough for us to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that names have been called. There ought to have been none of any such regrettable practice, but when the gentleman from New York refers to the men who are conducting the W. P. A. as "a gang," he insults the American people, because the men who are carrying on this work are just good, plain Americans like all the rest of us, as patriotic as any, as honest as any, as proud of their achievements and as dissatisfied when they are wasted by idleness and enforced inefficiency as any. They are as good men as the gentleman from New York, as good as I am, or as good as any other man here. It is unworthy of this House to be compelled to listen to any such expressions. Those men are American men who are simply out of work, not through any fault of their own but from the failure of this Government to do what it ought to do, and can do, and ultimately will do. That is the fact in the case.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. To what gentleman from New York is the gentleman from Illinois referring?

Mr. KELLER. I mean the gentleman from New York, Mr. TABER, of course. He is the only one who referred to the W. P. A. workers as "a gang."

We seem to be enjoying a lot of ignorant, ill-considered misstatement of fact-the unlimited abuse of everything in sight. What we need most is a reversion to truth telling and common sense.

The truth is that for an emergency operation on a national scale, such as we had to face, the setting up of the W. P. A. is a brilliant success. Of all those who are criticising Harry Hopkins not one could have done as well as he did. There was no precedent to guide us. There had been no national planning. The terrible panic which precipitated this unprecedented loss of employment, marked finally the end of free land in the United States. The going to this wonderful area of free, tillable land-a billion four hundred million acres at the end of the Civil War-had furnished the safety valve for men out of jobs for all of the panics since that period up to and including the panic of 1907. The passing of the panic of 1921 was possible through the accrued building requirements of the World War period. When the terrible panic of 1929 came, the free land was all gone, the necessary buildings were all built, so that for the first time in our history when a man lost his job, he was out with no place to go and nothing to do. For the first time, America faced the problem of unemployment with millions out of work. That we have done as well as we have is proof positive that the job has been well done under all the difficulties which faced us. No less has it proven the patient patriotic devotion of those millions of unwillingly idle workers. Surely such American steadfastness and faith in our Government ought not to be rewarded by cutting anyone off from subsistence until government has seen to it that a job is provided for every man and woman who wants to work.

Yet, that is exactly what we are doing if we cut the appropriation below $875,000,000. Some of my colleagues are saying it will not throw out a million men but only 600,000. Well, suppose it will starve the families of only 600,000!

What a mass crime that is to contemplate!

Most especially has the setting up of the W. P. A. been a brilliant success because there was also an ever-present desire for political sniping, the ever-present actual effort to create trouble for political advantage.

In the consideration of the appropriation for $875,000,000 for the continuance of the W. P. A. is the first time I have ever known a committee of this House to constitute itself witness, jury, and judge at the same time, presenting no testimony contrary to that which was presented to it, but making up its own mind without any testimony, and entirely contrary to all the testimony that was presented to it. That is a true statement of exactly what has been done. The men who are assuming this responsibility ought to know something about the subject if they are going to take that much responsibility.

I want to call your attention to this fact, that in the Thirtysixth District of New York, which is represented by Mr. TABER, there are 1,200 men on relief, on W. P. A.; yes; the whole of 1,200. Yet Mr. TABER stands there and dictates to this House what we are to do. What does he know about it? He knows nothing of the suffering of it. He knows nothing at all about it, yet he stands here and tells you and me what we shall and shall not do.

What can he know about it? With so small a numberonly 1,200-needy unemployed? Were that the average in each congressional district the whole number in the United States on work relief would be only half a million: the problem would be simple and the solution in sight. But what sort of song would the gentleman sing if he had 12 times or 20 times that many on W. P. A. rolls, as some of us have, with no possible help for them that we are not already using to the fullest extent? He would ask, as I am asking, that the districts which are so fortunate as to have so few shall not on that account starve the great mass who are less fortunate. This is one country under one flag. We must, in all justice and common sense, act nationally in this national question of unemployment.

I want to call attention to the fact that our good friend from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum], while not quite so far removed from the necessity of W. P. A., has only 2,600 on relief in his district. What can these men know about this subject when they have no more of a relief problem than that to contend with? When they have never had an opportunity to feel the need of thousands of men who only ask a chance to work for an honest living? Yet the judgment of the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York, taken together, are the two judgments that are controlling this House in relation to this subject.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees] said that 30 percent of the entire amount appropriated for W. P. A. is being spent upon administration. That is as near the truth as most of the statements made here today by those who are opposing the $875,000,000 appropriation. The fact is that somewhat less than 5 percent is being expended by the W. P. A. for administration. I am glad that the gentleman from Kansas did not exaggerate more than sixfold. His statement comes nearer the truth than most we have been having.

Now we are being told by Mr. Taber that if we appropriate sufficient funds to carry on the W. P. A. for 2 months, we can solve the whole problem of unemployment within that time. That suggestion would have to come from the Republican side. One hundred and fifty-four Republicans voted for that 2-month idea and only six on that side voted against it. Yet for all the 8 years I have been here I have not heard a single, solitary word come from that side which proposed to solve this problem of unemployment. Yet, Mr. Taber now proposes to do it in 2 months.

If we cut this appropriation, we deny help before we provide the solution for unemployment. I am as anxious as any man on the floor of this House to reduce expenses, but to reduce appropriations upon which men, women, and children are at least subsisting, before we provide other means for making a living, is to force misery upon innocent people—a crime against humanity in the name of economy.

Why do we not announce honestly and frankly that, of necessity, in a republic every governmental policy is decided by political action? Then accept responsibility for what happens and make the other fellow shoulder his responsibility as it ought to be. All of this talk about taking W. P. A. out of politics is being made by those who profited most by the W. P. A. vote that went against the Democrats in the last election. If the W. P. A. had voted with the Democratic Party, on a Nation-wide scale, there would have been no new Republican faces in this House. And anyone who studies the vote cast in the recent election will be compelled to admit this fact. The facts are, the W. P. A. workers are just good plain Americans like all the rest of us, as patriotic as any, as honest as any, as dissatisfied with their lot. They reviewed the W. P. A. in their own way and arrived at their one conclusion and voted their own sentiments, as they had a right to do.

Those who think the W. P. A. worker has no option except to do politically what the party in power asks him to do, do not know what they are talking about. The "Iron Men of Egypt" are a complete and perfect refutation of that un-American idea of American citizens. I am here saying that if the Republicans should come into power they would be welcome to any advantage they think they would get from their political control of the W. P. A. All I should ask of them would be that they vote sufficient appropriations to keep men who need it at work until we find and apply a method of providing a job for every man and woman who wants to work.

We cannot at the same time preach party responsibility and dodge party responsibility. No more can we justify aiding and abetting another party in dodging its responsibility.

In fact, I see no reason why the people who send us here shall not have full knowledge of all our acts, especially our actual voting record. Nor can I see any reason why a courageous man should not willingly assist in providing such a record.

The result of the recent elections should by no means be misunderstood, and need not be, by anyone who wants to look the matter squarely in the face.

It was in no sense a Republican victory or a victory founded upon the desire of the people for political reaction. This is clearly proven by the policies advocated in nearly, if not all, the districts in which Democrats were replaced by Republicans. Did these successful Republican candidates advocate going back to former Republican policies? Did a single one refer to the glories of Harding, Coolidge, or Hoover? Not a one! What did they harp on?

They assured the W. P. A. workers that the workers would be paid higher wages, and that more men and women would be put to work on W. P. A.

They advocated increased benefits under the old-age assistance provisions. They stood for a reduction of the age limit. A large number came out openly or clandestinely and tied themselves to the Townsend plan of $200 a month.

Likewise the farmers voted against Democratic Congressmen because the price of farm products had not been established and maintained at a fair price. They protested against low prices and voted for Republican candidates who promised higher farm prices—more money.

The whole Republican campaign in every district was planned and executed on the specific promise of doing more for the W. P. A. workers, of doing more for the aged, of doing more for the farmers of the Nation; that is, to pay all of them more money. In short, all the Republican candidates for the purpose of getting more votes promised to "out deal" the New Deal. Their campaign was one of criticism of the Democratic Party for not helping the underprivileged more, a campaign of assurance that, if elected, the Republican candidates would correct all this by lending their influence to increase the pay and the number of workers under W. P. A.; to increase old-age benefits; and to increase farm prices. Republican candidates, almost without exception, promised faithfully a better, more liberal deal than the New Deal had given. They were enthusiastic for more money for W. P. A., the aged, and the farmers. They were the most promising candidates who ever ran for office.

Such were the promises that are responsible for the appearance of the 70 new faces on the Republican side. In my State the Republicans gained four with these vacuous promises, and these four, with their first opportunity to vote on the matter, along with the whole Republican phalanx, are voting curtailment. They are voting to reduce the pay of the W. P. A. workers and to throw out of their present jobs 90,000 W. P. A. workers now on the pay rolls in Illinois; voting to throw out of their jobs a million W. P. A. workers now on the pay rolls in the United States. And every Republican Representative in this House, except six, are in this line up, are voting the same way, voting to cut the President's recommendation of $875,000,000 down to $725,000,000; and they talk about political rubber stamps.

Not once did the Republican candidates offer any new or constructive policy of their own. The reason is plain. They have nothing to offer. During the 9 years since the coming of the great panic of 1929, not once has the Republican leadership offered a single constructive idea for reemployment of those whom their policies alone threw out of their jobs. Why don't they make some suggestions? They have not had the courage to go back to the old Republican scrapheap and try to salvage anything from the wreckage which 12 years of solid Republican rule brought about. None of those sad memories were set to campaign music. How many of you good, sure-enough, honest-to-goodness Republican Members bent the knee to old Doctor Townsend to save your precious political hides? A lot! Plenty, in fact! One of these days I am going to submit a list of these and then watch how they vote when the Townsend plan bill comes up on its passage. Then there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth and an all-awakening to the political facts involved in the recent election.

Let us speak plainly. The political turn-over was a protest of the voters of the country against the Democrats for not doing more for them economically than they had done, not for not doing less.

It must be noted that in too many instances the Democratic Representatives from purely agricultural sections are voting with the Republican Party to cut the appropriation which the President asked for.

The men here who represent purely agricultural districts must learn that they cannot hope to secure a full measure of justice for the farmer in increased prices without at the same time granting equal justice to the laboring man and the white collar men of this country.

On the other hand, the man who represents a labor district must learn that if labor is to receive its fair reward he must see to it that the farmer is to be granted his equal

This constant and unjustified scramble here in this body as between the city and the country dweller is a disgrace to our intelligence. If we longer fail to get a full understanding of the interdependence of all producers of wealth, it will continue to result in the inequalities which we are compelled to observe and recognize as existing at the present time.

In fact, the Committees on Labor and Agriculture should meet for mutual study of this very important matter. They could, in my judgment, arrive at such mutual understanding between the two great branches of wealth producers as to formulate fair conditions between the two. Some such arrangement ought to be worked out, because every time a bill comes up here that represents the apparent special interests of men who live from their labor alone, and the vote of this House turns on that apparent point, we find the farmer Representatives either seeking an amendment to limit the idea of the bill or vote against. Every time this occurs we hear our very human labor Representatives say, "Just wait until those farmers want something, and see me kick their dog around."

Exactly the same thing, except to a smaller extent, results when some bill is proposed for the apparent special benefit of the farmers, and the farmer Representatives, when their bill is limited or gets by with a squeak, make the same remarks—"what they will do to that labor group."

I am quite purposely somewhat exaggerating this matter, although not largely so, to bring out the basic facts in this case. Go back to the time when the farmer was taught that he was a capitalist and had, of necessity, to stand with the capitalists. Only after many, many years are the men who labor long and arduously on the land beginning to learn that they, too, are laboring men and cannot be prosperous while laboring men are poverty stricken. The laboring man has been taught that the farmer is a capitalist and therefore "agin" the laboring man. All of which is not true. The prejudice of the farmer and the laborer against one another is handicapping both, limiting both, preventing either from having what both have a right to, and I call upon William Green; John L. Lewis; John Vesecky, of the Farmers' Union; Louis J. Taber, of the National Grange; and Edward O'Neal, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, to work out and announce to the world the interdependence of all labor-the necessity for all wealth producers developing their community of interest to the advantage of all. It does not make sense for a laboring man to make his average of $4 a day while the farmer is making 50 cents. No more does it make sense for the farmer to kick the union labor man because, through unions, he is getting more than the farmer, who has no effective union. The two must get together and work out across the table what is fair to both.

The W. P. A. boys are having a hard time getting by on their $40 to $44 a month in the smaller counties. They had waited for a solution of the unemployment problem. It had not come. They felt that if they had to continue as W. P. A. workers the wages should largely be increased and that is true, if these men must remain as W. P. A. workers.

They knew in their own minds that Congress had not solved the unemployment problem. They were naturally anxious to have it solved, because no man wants to have an uncertain existence. No man wants to work for one-half of what he is worth and quite often for a third of what he did get in industry,

They resented the idea that work was being "made" for them. They resented the idea that they were on "charity." The fact is they were not on charity. All that the W. P. A. boys wanted was a man's pay for a man's work. They wanted that and they had a right to it.

Such is somewhat the manner in which they reasoned. They knew that there was an abundance of work in sight for all of the idle men in America for all of the years to come. They knew that the generations ahead of them had piled it up, ready to be done. They resented the charge that they were inefficient. They were not, and are not, except as Congress had compelled them to be. Some wise man in one body or the other here inserted the provision for an allowance on the appropriation of only $5 per man-month for materials and equipment, because he did not know anything about the doing of work. He did not know what efficiency meant.

If the Congress had refused his interposition and allowed the $17 per man-month which industry uses for material and equipment we would be getting as great efficiency out of W. P. A. as the P. W. A. workers got when they were given the proper materials and equipment.

In the present appropriation, an allowance of $17 per man-month for material and equipment would double the efficiency of the entire W. P. A. in the doing of permanent work. That is real economy. It is a good deal to expect of Congressmen who know all about parsimony but very little about economy.

The W. P. A. workers are just plain Americans like you and I. There are a few lazy ones among them—about the same as there are among the Members of this House. Surely they lean on their shovels sometimes, even as you and I. The days of necessary drudgery are over; the days when we can compel men to do drudgery ought also to be over.

A thousand men in Williamson County, in the district I represent, built several miles of road through fairly heavy country with only picks, shovels, mattox, and wheelbarrows. These same men accomplished five times as much—man for man—when they were given the proper and ordinary equipment for such work. Before any Congressman has a right to charge inefficiency he ought to square himself by saying that the lack of efficiency in the W. P. A. is entirely the fault of the Congress itself, and nobody else, and that is the truth.

The Twenty-fifth District of Illinois had 20,116 W. P. A. workers on the pay rolls on the 1st of December, and 3,500 certified for work who had not yet been put to work.

In proportion to its population, we have the largest number of unemployed employables in the United States. It has therefore been not only my opportunity but my duty to study and observe carefully the results of the W. P. A. I say, without hesitation, that working the same length of time under the same conditions and handicaps, and with the same limitations in material and equipment, the accomplishment of these men could not have been surpassed by any industrial organization. Everyone who has observed carefully during the continuation of this W. P. A. work must have noted the excellent increase in efficiency, notwithstanding all their handicaps.

It is so easy to criticize, so easy to misrepresent, that I confess I have often been indignant over the absolute misrepresentation in relation to these men and their work. Such criticism is the expression of men who have had no training or experience in industry, of whom our Congress has a large number.

The great opportunity that has faced and now faces the Congress is to convert this enormous idleness into permanently valuable improvements. We are failing to do this because, in my judgment, we have mistaken parsimony for economy.

How much we have lost by our lack of understanding is appalling when we take a look at the facts. The loss from idleness in wages and salaries in the nonagricultural industries during the period from January 1, 1930, to January 1, 1939—9 years—amounted to $119,354,000,000, as reported by the Department of Labor.

If we want a true picture, we must add to that the loss of farm income during the same period of $38,600,000,000.

These losses from enforced idleness represent more than four times the total national debt. In the presence of these tremendous losses I am astonished to find the Congress piffling over whether we shall throw out of work into enforced idleness another million men who are at the present time employed, the ability to create wealth sacrificed, the lives of men wasted irretrievably.

I have no desire to lecture my colleagues nor criticize their opinions, but the plain facts as herein stated are worthy of any man's consideration.

Let us understand that, if we had been willing, we could have saved most of this unbelievable loss—saved it in the making of permanent national improvements. That is the problem we are facing at the present time—to save these terrible losses from enforced idleness.

The question of unemployment is the most ominous one that has ever faced civilization. The solution of it is up to the American Congress.

In all good spirit I challenge my colleagues to enter into the solution of that problem instead of piffling over pennies and calling it economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] for 4 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, if ever there was an amendment that deserved the approval of this House, it is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. Not only do considerations of economic conditions and justice demand our support of this proposition but considerations for the ordinary needs of humanity demand that we should vote in favor of this amendment.

Who are the people opposed to the amount asked for by the administration? They are the same people who brought about the tragic economic conditions of 1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932. They are the same men who are notorious to us and to the country as tax dodgers. They are fearful they will be called upon to bear a portion of this burden through some form of additional taxation. These reactionaries are trying to make you and the Nation believe that our tax burden is oppressive. If they stated the truth, however, they would be obliged to admit that the taxes in this country are lower than the taxes in any other country in the world, especially on large incomes.

I say to the Members of the House that it is their duty to look back to 1932, when, under Hoover's administration, relief and aid were denied. You know what transpired. When the people asked for bread and employment they were fed gas bombs and lead. You know that the great victory of Franklin D. Roosevelt was brought about because people lost confidence in the Republican Party, and because Hoover and the Republican Party failed to do anything to help the millions of unfortunate people who lived in dugouts, who lived in want and misery.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, sit down, sit down! No; I will not yield to the gentleman.

We know what the conditions were in 1932, when between 18,000,000 and 20,000,000 men were out of employment. I know what the situation was way out in the West when people started to take the law into their own hands. There was fear in the minds of many that we were on the verge of revolt.

I say, Mr. Chairman, we must act advisedly. I say that it is our duty to the country to support and vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to make it possible for Federal agencies to take care of those whom it is impossible for the mayors of cities and the Governors of States to help because of the exhaustion of local treasuries. I have resolutions here in my hand, I have wires from the mayors, and a long telegram from the great mayor of the city of Chicago, Mayor Kelly, who says:

Chicago has endeavored to do its duty in providing for its unfortunate citizens who found themselves in need through no fault of their own, both in contributing to Federal works programs and in supplying direct relief. Chicago is not in position to underwrite additional costs at this time which a curtailment of W. P. A. operation quite definitely forecasts.

Chicago urgently needs employment. That is imperative if we are to avoid threatening difficulties. Admittedly, private employment has been increasing in recent months, but not fast enough to care for local conditions.

I am appealing to this committee and to you gentlemen to help us take care of the 100,000 people who will be thrown off the relief rolls, or W. P. A. work. We will not be able to provide for them unless you approve this reasonable amount. The American people voted in favor of relief in 1932, 1934, 1936, and 1938. The same profiteers and tax dodgers who were responsible for the worst depression in history were opposing us then as they are today. If we listen to them, thousands will go hungry again; but if we listen to our conscience and the American people, we will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri and approve the amount the administration asks for.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including therein the telegram from Mayor Kelly, of Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot grant that request. Under the rule the gentleman will have to submit that request in the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Am I not one of the 14 seeking recognition at the time debate on this amendment was limited?

The CHAIRMAN. All but 5 minutes of the time has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] for 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, as debate and difference of opinion has proceeded for the last couple of days so emphatically, and when everyone has kept smiling and in good humor, I have been reminded of the biblical observation:

How pleasant it is for the brethren to dwell together in peace and harmony.

I really apologize for taking the floor again, and would not have done so except for the remarks of my very dear friend on the committee from Missouri about the parliamentary situation. I think too much of him to get offended at anything he says, but the gentleman has revealed somewhat intimately the proceedings of the subcommittee and the full committee.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not now, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. When the gentleman makes statements about me—

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly in fairness the gentleman ought to yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I cannot yield to my friend now.

The gentleman has referred in most inferential terms to my conduct in handling this bill as being most unusual and most different from anything that has ever happened. He has stated that applause came from a certain side of the House, and things are very mysterious and very strange. Well, Mr. Chairman, what I have done in connection with this bill was approved by 7 of the 8 Democrats on the subcommittee [applause] and it was approved by 11 of the 12 members of the subcommittee.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. And by 20 to 12 of the full committee. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Not now.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is to be regretted that the gentleman will not yield on the facts in the case.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman from Virginia thinks he is stating the facts, I may say to my friend.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing mysterious about it. The suggestion was made that the bill should have been introduced for $875,000,000 in order that Members might be put on the spot and made to register their position. I am not interested in putting anybody on the spot on either side of the aisle. I am interested in trying to accomplish something constructive with this bill. [Applause.] There is no difficulty about any Member of this House letting his constituents know how he stands if he wishes to, and if he does not wish to have it done, that is his business and not mine.

Our friends over here have taken a very emphatic position. There is no question of doubt as to where they have stood on this matter. There is no denial of that, and there is no difficulty about any Member letting his constituents know, and I fancy there is not a Member of this House who is going to be frightened by the threat that gentlemen in the newspaper gallery are going to record how he marched when he went down the aisle through the tellers. [Applause.]

So much for the parliamentary situation. Reference has been made time and time again to the question, What evidence does the committee present for the action that it has taken? Well, gentlemen, the full committee of this House is not to be placed in the position of having to bear the burden of disproving all questions that come to it. When a department, or an agency of the Government, or the Budget comes to a committee of this House and asks for an appropriation, the burden is upon the bureau or the department to prove its case. There were no budgetary hearings on this relief item. The hearings show that. There was nothing but an ex parte conference. The Budget of the President only had the statement of the W. P. A. The committee has that, and you have that.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question recurs to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on that question I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Cannon of Missouri and Mr. Woodrum of Virginia to act as tellers.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 137, noes 226.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Tarver: At the end of the resolution, as amended, strike the period, insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That the appropriations herein made shall not be available unless and until rates of pay of employees of the Works Progress Administration are so fixed by appropriate administrative order as to eliminate differentials in rates of pay of workers of the same general class exceeding 25 percent of the maximum rates as between workers employed in different States or different areas of the same general type in the several States."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the indulgence of the Committee to proceed for 5 minutes in addition to the time allowed me under the rules?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCormack). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to try the patience of the House unduly. I realize that you are tired and anxious to complete the consideration of the pending bill. I discussed the subject matter to which this amendment relates fully on yesterday and it would be of no benefit to undertake now to recapitulate the arguments which I then sought to advance.

I pointed out, in accordance with information which had been furnished me by the Works Progress Administration itself, that in the four different general classes of W. P. A. employees there are differentials existing under present regulations amounting in some cases, in the matter of unskilled labor, to between 500 and 600 percent; from a low of Tennessee's 18 cents per hour to a high of $1.02½ per hour sometimes paid in the State of Illinois, and that similar differentials exist in the rates of pay of others of the four classes to be considered.

The greatest differential exists in the rates of pay of the professional and technical workers, which varies from a low of 34 cents an hour in some States to a high of $3.03 per hour in Pennsylvania. This means a variation of between 800 and 900 percent.

I pointed out from statistics likewise furnished by the Works Progress Administration that these differentials are not in any way in accord with the differences in the cost of living in the various sections of the country, as illustrated by a survey made under the direction of the Commissioner of Labor Statistics as of December 15, 1938, showing the cost of maintenance of the average family of four in 31 different cities scattered throughout the United States.

I pointed out a very slight variation existed in the cost of living in the city of Atlanta and the city of New York; yet a very great difference amounting in the case of the maxima allowed to more than 300 percent existed in the pay of unskilled laborers employed by the W. P. A. in the city of Atlanta and in the city of New York.

Mr. Chairman, I mention these matters merely as examples of instances which might be found in the statistics which I placed in the Record throughout the entire United States and which are not confined to a comparison of rates in the South, in the North, and in the East alone, but pointed out that similar discriminations existed between States and localities within States in other parts of the country.

I am seeking by this amendment not to permit differentials within the same class of laborers to a greater extent than 25 percent of the maximum wages paid within that class. This percentage of differentials which my amendment proposes to allow is greater than the difference in the cost of living between any two sections of the United States, and that fact is disclosed by the statistics which I have placed in the RECORD. I consider the amendment to be exceedingly fair. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] in charge of the bill, I am informed, in the course of his remarks stated that in his opinion the amendment is meritorious; yet he stated he thought it would be better to defer its consideration until the House begins consideration of a W. P. A. bill for the next fiscal year. I do not know whether the House is going to have for consideration a W. P. A. bill for the entire fiscal year 1940 or not. Our last W. P. A. bill took care only of the situation until the 1st of February approximately of the fiscal year, or for a period of 7 months. The present bill takes care of the situation for approximately 5 months. It is about as permanent a measure, or a measure which covers as long a period, as the average W. P. A. bill seems to cover.

I have no disposition to try to interfere with the proper administration of the W. P. A. Far from it. I am anxious to cooperate with the W. P. A. in every way I can as a Member of Congress in trying to make its work efficient and successful. I am not here for the purpose of making any attack upon the Works Progress Administration. On the contrary, I concede to the officials who are in charge of the work of the Works Progress Administration an honest and conscientious desire to do a good job, although it is a difficult job; but I do not think it is improper that the Congress should suggest to them by legislation of this sort that they ought not to permit discrimination between members of the same class of workers who are receiving aid from the Government to an extent certainly of more than 25 percent.

May I point out to you I have said and I say now that I am not wedded to the language of this amendment. It is the best I have been able to devise in an effort to correct what is undoubtedly a bad situation. If this amendment is adopted by the House, it will go to the Senate; and the Senate committee and the Senate itself will study this question in the light of whatever the officials of the Works Progress Administration may desire to say. It is possible that the Works Progress Administration itself may be able to suggest better language than I have suggested in this amendment which will meet the problem which we now have under consideration. I hope they may be able to do so. Certainly the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum], who will be chairman of the House conferees, will be in position to exercise a great influence in the formulation of whatever proviso might finally remain in the bill.

I cannot understand that the adoption of this amendment would in any way hamper the work of the Works Progress Administration. I do believe, on the other hand, that it would result eventually in the correction of very grave injustices to a great many of the millions of unfortunates who are now seeking a livelihood through the activities of the W. P. A.

Mr. CARLSON and Mr. SIROVICH rose.

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia if he has any figures or can give the Committee any figures on whether if his amendment is adopted the amount carried in the joint resolution will take care of more people with an average rate of pay throughout the United States than the rates that are presently applied?

Mr. TARVER. I do not have definite figures on that subject. The natural effect of the amendment must be to take care of more people than are being taken care of under the present program. The effect will be to prevent the continuance of the payment to professional and technical workers, for example, of an extremely high rate of pay, such as $3.03 per hour, amounting for an 8-hour day to over $24 per day. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is recognized.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, there is undoubtedly a great deal of merit in the proposition involved in the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, but our colleague the gentleman from Kansas struck the keynote when he said that no one had any figures on the possible effect of the amendment. No one knows the effect it will have. It would seem the effect of it will be to raise the lower man but not to lower the higher man. If that should occur, people will be taken off the rolls.

At any rate, Mr. Chairman, I wish to reiterate what I said before, at the risk of boring you. Please do not write into this temporary measure restrictive administrative provisions that may tie up the whole program. To undertake to equalize rates of pay in this program without studied consideration might cause embarrassment to the entire program. Let us reserve action upon this matter and other like meritorious efforts until we come to consider the whole problem, which I hope very much we shall do during this session of Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 119, noes 131.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. Woodrum of Virginia and Mr. Tarver.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 171, noes 138.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cole of New York: On page 3, line 3, after the committee amendment, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no money herein appropriated shall be available to pay salaries, remuneration, or benefit to any person who shall hereafter in any way attempt to influence the vote of any person or persons receiving any salary, remuneration, or benefits hereunder."

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I realize the hour is getting late and I will not require the indulgence of the committee for more than a minute or so.

This amendment is very simple. It is not nearly as drastic as I personally would like to have made it. However, I realize that for it to be in order it is necessary to do it in this fashion.

You will notice the amendment does not carry any penalty and does not require anyone to go to prison. It is still possible for the beneficiaries of the Works Progress Administration to solicit funds and contribute to political parties and to exercise all their rights of citizenship except that they shall not engage in any attempt to influence the vote of another W. P. A. worker. He is still permitted to campaign among all other citizens.

Interested as I am in clearing the W. P. A. of political corruption, as I know most of you are, I am more interested in having the country know that Congress does not approve or countenance some of the practices the W. P. A. has been charged with in the past. I realize this amendment will not affect the elections next November, since it will die on June 30 of this year with the resolution we are now considering. It is offered by me more for the purpose of declaring the policy of the Congress, especially of the House, in this matter.

As far as I can see, there are but two types of Representatives who would vote against this amendment. The first type is that Representative who believes the W. P. A. has never committed any corrupt practice in the political use of relief funds. The second type is that Representative who believes the W. P. A. should be used for political purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Starnes of Alabama as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. Cole of New York: On page 3, line 3, after the committee amendment, insert "Provided further, That no part of the funds made available by this joint resolution shall be available for the compensation or relief of any person who is a contributor to any person, organization, alliance, or association engaging in lobbying or political activities."

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of seeing that money appropriated by the Federal Government for relief is used for that purpose and that purpose only. No part of the relief funds voted by the Congress of the United States and made available for relief should be used for contributions to or for political activities. This is the sole purpose of offering the amendment.

It will be effective, it will stop the solicitation of funds from poor men and women who are striving to keep body and soul together and will insure the feeding and the clothing of those on relief and their families, and for that purpose I offer this as a substitute amendment.

I may say there are no penalties provided.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, so far as the objective of each of the amendments is concerned—

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does the gentleman realize that the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes] would prevent a union man from using the money he got working on W. P. A. for paying dues to his union?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That may be. When amendments are offered on the floor in this way it is difficult to determine definitely how far-reaching and sweeping their effect may be. Everybody here wants to take politics out of relief. I hope when we finally get to the question of enacting something in the nature of a permanent policy we may do that. I could join in the sentiments expressed in both of these amendments, and I do not wish personally to place myself in the position of objecting to these things, but, administratively, I do not see how you can expect the Works Progress Administration, before it issues a check to a W. P. A. employee, to make such a finding of facts as would be required under these two amendments. It seems to me they present an administrative problem that to be reached in this way is almost beyond comprehension.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If we, who are Members of Congress, want to try to eliminate politics from W. P. A., and if, as the gentleman says, we are all for that, why not adopt these two amendments, inasmuch as they are sound and ought to be adopted?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I quite agree with the statement which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has just made. No one wants any money taken away from a relief worker for any political purpose whatsoever; but the question asked by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], with respect to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes], shows conclusively how dangerous it is to offer and adopt far-reaching amendments without having them carefully considered by the appropriate committee of the House. There is certainly no political campaign coming on within the next 5 months, and I do trust that the suggestion of the gentleman from Virgina [Mr. WOODRUM] will be followed and that the substitute amendment, as well as the amendment itself, will be voted down. I hope that sometime in the quiet of the committee room these matters may be considered and an amendment brought out that will do what we all want done instead of doing a great many things here now that may be dangerous and unnecessary. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COX. As I interpret the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Starnes], it is directed at these communistic organizations that have allegedly been using the W. P. A. to finance their campaigns against constitutional government. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DINGELL. Will not that amendment apply in the same way to all organizations?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The amendment on the face of it makes it unlawful for a W. P. A. official to issue a check to a person who belongs to any organization of that kind. So he will have to determine the matter and make a finding of facts with respect to each enrollee about his political and social affiliations.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I know the gentleman from Virginia wants to be fair. The effect of the amendment is simply to prohibit the solicitation of funds, insofar as we can, from people on relief for the purpose of carrying on political activities. There is no intention to restrict the membership of anybody in anything, but we want the money appropriated to go for relief and not for political purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, there is nobody more interested in keeping politics out of the W. P. A. than I am, but, as the gentleman from Virginia has well pointed out, we sometimes in our zeal overlook the far-reaching consequences of language not carefully considered.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] I am sure has the right purpose, but the gentleman's amendment provides as follows:

Provided further, That no part of the funds made available by this joint resolution—

That is, not a dollar of this money-shall be available for the compensation or relief of any person who is a contributor to any person, organization, alliance, or association engaged in lobbying or political activity.

Any member of the American Federation of Labor who might be so unfortunate as to be on relief would be unable to draw his compensation under the terms of this amendment, and it is for that reason that I take the floor in epposition to it. I would like to see all of the supervisory employees of the W. P. A. put under civil service, where they would be prohibited by law from participating in politics and where they could be tried by the Civil Service Commission and dismissed if they did engage in politics. I would also vote for an amendment to this law to make it a crime for anybody to undertake to use the project workers of W. P. A. in politics, but I am not going to vote to take away from a workingman the right to belong to a union of his choice simply because he is unfortunate enough to be on relief. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] that this is no time to consider such an amendment. I think when amendments of this kind are to be considered, they should go a little bit further. They should go to the extent that any money appropriated under this act that is used for the purpose of purchasing materials could not be used by concerns producing those materials to contribute to a political campaign. What happens? Those who receive money through the purchase of materials contribute to political parties. Further they use that money to go onto the W. P. A. projects and pay W. P. A. workers to spread literature on those projects. Is it any worse for a W. P. A. worker to contribute to a political campaign than it is to have the opposite political party pay outside workers and some of the W. P. A. workers not with money that they receive from work relief, but with money they receive from economic royalists, to be used for political purposes? Therefore I say that these amendments are such as should be studied further, and when they are studied, then we should reach out and stop all political pressure on relief clients, and when we will have done that we will have done justice to both sides. I do not believe in putting pressure on W. P. A. workers and allowing those who have money to use in political campaigns, money which does not come from relief, to use it to hound W. P. A. workers into political subservience.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As a matter of fact, under this provision if a W. P. A. worker bought a newspaper which is of a partisan nature he would be considered guilty, would he not?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from South Dakota for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. We have not had an opportunity to read this amendment, and I wonder if the Chair could tell us whether in his opinion this would prevent the payment of any relief funds to farmers who are members of the Farmers Union or the Grange or such an organization as have lobbyists here in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the Chair does not attempt to construe the meaning of amendments.

Mr. HOOK. I think that the gentleman is correct—that it does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by myself be again reported from the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Cole amendment will be again reported.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the Cole amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Martin of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 126, noes 131.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Cole of New York and Mr. Woodrum of Virginia to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 164 and noes 156.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Jones of Texas: On page 2, in line 3, after the semicolon, insert the following: "Provided further, That any grants of money paid from these additional funds under such limitation 3 shall be conditioned on an equivalent amount of work being done either on projects or on land in connection with soil or water conservation."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, most of the Members will recall that at the last session provision was made that would permit farmers to work on projects in rural areas. A number of them were certified in accordance with that provision when the officials found that the general relief load was so great and the funds were so limited that they needed to use other methods of accomplishing the same purpose. An agreement was arranged with the Farm Security Administration that out of the $175,000,000 transferred to that organization under the original bill, the Farm Security would endeavor to take care of farmers who needed work, who could qualify, and who had land, or who had access to land, which included nearly all of the farmers who could qualify at all. Here is where the trouble arose: Under the terms of the bill, they could make those farmers loans or grants but could not permit them to work for the grants that were made. Many worthy farmers who were greatly in need of funds preferred to work for such funds, and many refused to accept grants. They did not want to be given money without being permitted to work for it. The only effect that this amendment would have would be to permit farmers to work for these grants of money. They could then work on projects or upon private or public lands in soil or water conservation. A great many of them do not want to be given the money, and I glory in that attitude. If any of you have heard, as I have, many of them say that this little work they were permitted to do had saved them from having to go on relief and have seen their eyes sparkle as they made that statement, you know that that spirit is worth preserving in America.

I believe the Committee should agree to this, as it only applies to that proportion of the fund which is allotted to the Farm Security under the terms of proration provided in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, I cannot speak for the entire committee, but as far as I am concerned, I think the amendment is a good one and should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the House understands this amendment. Paragraph 3 is an item providing funds of $175,000,000 to the Farm Security Administration, yet this bill only provides funds, under paragraph 1, to the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the gentleman will read on the second page of the pending bill—Shall proportionately increase the amounts specified in limitations (1), (2), and (3), of (d) of subsection (1) of section 1 of such act.

Now, if you will turn to the act of last year, page 2, subsection 1, subdivision 3—

To the Secretary of Agriculture $175,000,000, together with balances of allocations heretofore made—

Mr. TABER. The "3" which is referred to in the bill is down at the bottom of page 1—

Educational, professional, clerical, cultural, recreational, and production service, including training for domestic servants and miscellaneous nonconstruction projects.

That is the one you are referring to in your amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No. If the gentleman will take the original act on the first page, you will see 1, 2, 3, (a), (b), and (c), and then take (d), the following types of public projects, subject to the approval, and so forth, and then it enumerates them. "(1) Highway roads; (2) public buildings," and then on page 2, "(3)."

Mr. TABER. No. Page 1, down at the third line from the bottom, "educational, professional, clerical," and so forth.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I believe the gentleman is correct about that. I think under the circumstances that it should be withdrawn and corrected before it would fully accomplish the purposes intended.

Mr. TABER. I think it should be withdrawn.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw the amendment for the present, and I will submit it later in a different form so that it may cover the funds available to the Farm Security Administration for the current fiscal year. I believe everyone will agree that its purposes are correct and I hope that no one will object to the amendment in its final form.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Faddis: On page 3, after line 3, and after the amendments previously adopted, strike out the period at the end thereof and insert a comma and the following proviso: "Provided further, That the funds herein appropriated shall not become available unless and until provision is made by proper administrative order to the elimination of wage differentials as between the several general classes of workers coming from the relief rolls exceeding 25 percent in degree."

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment logically follows the Tarver amendment which was passed wiping out sectional differentials. This amendment is designed to wipe out the differentials existing within grades.

In sections of the State of Pennsylvania it is now possible for one man on relief to be drawing 50 cents an hour and another man on relief, because of these differentials, to be drawing as high as $3.03 an hour. In the State of Illinois it is possible for an unskilled laborer on relief to draw $1.025 an hour or to draw 31 cents an hour. Bear in mind that this is unskilled labor on relief, and these rates are hourly rates. It is possible in the State of New York for an unskilled laborer to draw 62½ cents per hour or 26 cents per hour. Any Member wishing to learn about this will find it set forth on page 167 of the Congressional Record of Tuesday, January 10, this year, in a table inserted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver].

The existence of this differential is responsible for a great deal of chiseling. W. P. A. should not be a career service, and is not intended to be a career service. It is relief. Why should one man on relief draw 31 cents an hour and another man on relief draw $3.03 an hour?

We cannot, in administering relief, attempt to maintain any standard of living or set up any class distinctions of those on relief. One man on relief gets as hungry as another man on relief. The family of one requires as much to care for it as the family of another.

I hope the members of the committee will look upon this amendment favorably and wipe out this differential existing among skilled and the unskilled, or existing within the unskilled or within the skilled itself and do away with the opportunities for chiseling on relief.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am confident that our distinguished friend from Pennsylvania is prompted by high and patriotic motives in offering this perfecting amendment, but I challenge any man on the floor of the House to tell me what it will do to the relief program. All I can do in charge of the bill is to reiterate what I have said many times today, that it is impossible here for us to undertake in a few hours to rewrite the whole relief program and to throw so many restrictions and obstructions in the way of the administration of this relief that we will not do just what everybody here is anxious to do—take care of people in need.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I accept his challenge.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I said except the gentleman. I excepted the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am confident the gentleman has splendid motives. Undoubtedly it may be a very fine thing to do, but in logic and reason should we not sit down with the people who have to administer relief and find out something about the problems involved, go into it in a logical and orderly way? Some of the actions that have been taken here today would seem to indicate that that is not desired. That, however, is your prerogative.

The CHARMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hare: At the end of line 3, page 3, following the committee and other amendments, add the following: "Provided further, That $150,000,000 of the amount appropriated herein shall be used in the erection of public buildings for the accommodation of second- and third-class post offices in various States, and towns, cities, or municipalities wherein such buildings are to be located shall first furnish the Government with an approved site or place therefor."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. While there is a provision in the general relief bill for certain funds to be used for public-works projects, I do not believe it is sufficiently broad to make this germane to the original bill. I think this would refer to the public-buildings program under the Procurement Division of the Treasury, which is not carried on by relief labor at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I call the Chair's attention to the provisions of section 1, subsection 1, of the original act, which provides as follows:

The following types of public projects, Federal and non-Federal, subject to the approval of the President, and the amounts to be used for each class shall not, except as hereinafter provided, exceed the respective amounts stated, namely: (1) Highways, roads, and streets, * * * (2) public buildings; parks and other recreational facilities, * * and miscellaneous construction projects, $655,500,000.

That contemplated the construction of public buildings. Section 5 provides:

No Federal construction project, except flood control and water conservation projects authorized under other law, shall be undertaken or prosecuted under the appropriations in this title unless and until there shall have been allocated and irrevocably set aside Federal funds sufficient for its completion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Section 1 of the Public Works Appropriation Act of 1938 provides, among other things, for public buildings, parks, and other recreational facilities, and so forth.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina merely seeks to allocate part of the funds herein appropriated for that purpose.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order and holds the amendment to be germane.

The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the limited time allotted me, I will not be able to discuss this amendment in any detail and will, therefore, say at the outset that the purpose of the amendment to the pending bill is to set in motion some definite, positive, and permanent governmental policy for taking care of the unemployed, because I gather from the speeches made here in the last 2 days that the W. P. A. is going to be a permanent governmental activity for the next decade. If that is to be a fact, then it is the duty of the Congress to outline some definite, sound, constructive program for carrying on this work.

My theory is there could be no better undertaking than to construct in the various towns, villages, and cities in the country post-office buildings to accommodate the postal facilities, to accommodate county agents at county seats, to accommodate home demonstration agents at county seats, and to accommodate other governmental activities. This will not only furnish work to the unemployed but the Government taxpayers will get something worth while in return. In many instances the W. P. A. workers have worked but have not created wealth. Of course, they have obtained a scanty living for themselves, but under the existing program the Government has gotten but very little.

This country is in need of post-office buildings. We are in need of accommodations for other governmental activities. Why not begin now so that for the next few months we may have an opportunity to gain some experience and when the next relief bill is brought up for consideration we will be able to outline definitely and clearly just what the program for the Public Works Administration shall be next year, for the following year, and for succeeding years.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. As I interpret the gentleman's amendment, the gentleman wants $150,000,000 spent for something constructive?

Mr. HARE. That is exactly what I am aiming at. The $150,000,000 is to be applied to the construction of public buildings to accommodate second- and third-class offices in the various cities. It is to be done under the direction of the W. P. A. Administrator, and instead of a man carrying a pick today and doing nothing but cleaning a ditch, or cleaning off a little grass here and there, he will, at the end of a year, be able to point with some pride to a structure or building he has helped to erect—a building that is worth $10,000, $50,000, or $100,000. It will be a credit to his efforts, a benefit to the public, and a great saving to the taxpayers.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not a fact that a great amount of that money will have to be used for the purchase of materials?

Mr. HARE. No; not necessarily a great amount, but possibly some of it.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is simply cutting down the amount of money that would go to these unfortunate people who need the work by buying materials to go into public buildings.

Mr. HARE. No. I fear the gentleman from Missouri fails to catch the full import of this amendment; I shall, therefore, repeat it:

Provided further, That $150,000,000 of the amount appropriated herein shall be used in the erection of public buildings for the accommodation of second- and third-class post offices in the various States where the town, city, or municipality wherein such buildings are to be located shall first furnish the Government with an approved site or place therefor.

Certainly some of this amount will be used for the purchase of materials, but it will not materially interfere with the work of the W. P. A. It will certainly mean increased employment in private industry and it may be that such increase will be supplied by men now on the relief rolls, for somebody must fell the trees and saw the lumber that will go into the structure of these buildings, somebody must make the brick, manufacture the cement, nails, and other building materials, and I see no reason why the W. P. A. worker may not be able to get some of these positions. Furthermore, the erection of these buildings will furnish added opportunity for work by those who may be already on relief rolls. In addition, it will give those who may be eligible an opportunity to be placed on the rolls for work. That is, instead of decreasing employment it will increase the opportunity for relief workers to be employed in private industry as well as on W. P. A. Of course, the amount allocated in this amendment is not sufficient to erect buildings to accommodate all second- and third-class offices, but experience obtained from the operation of this amendment would enable us to determine the advisability of providing in the next relief bill funds sufficient to erect buildings to accommodate all these offices, including space for county agents, homedemonstration agents, and representatives employed in other Government activities. My theory is that if the W. P. A. is to continue, and I believe it will for a good while yet, the Government should utilize this labor for the benefit of the public and save the taxpayer as much as possible.

It is common information that under the present set-up the Government is getting very little constructive returns from the money being expended. The man who is working on W. P. A. knows this, and he knows that he would much rather work where he feels that the Government will sooner or later get some return for his labor. Of course, there will be some cost attached to the upkeep of these buildings, but such cost will be less than the rental charges now paid. I have discussed this amendment with some of my colleagues, and the only opposition I have found comes from those who live in large cities and those who already have post offices in the towns of their districts. One objection advanced is that the buildings would be erected largely from skilled labor. I doubt if this is true, for my observation has been that it generally takes about twice as many men to carry the brick, sand, and cement as it does to place the brick and plastering, the former being done by unskilled and the latter by skilled labor. But suppose it does take some skilled labor; that is no valid reason for opposition, because the relief rolls are made up to a considerable extent with skilled labor, which must be taken into consideration in planning a program for relief. However, I shall have more to say on this subject, for if this amendment should fail to pass it shall be my purpose to introduce a bill and appear before the subcommittee at later hearings to see if it is possible to inaugurate the plan suggested and have it embodied in the next regular appropriation bill for relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. Chairman, of course the major part of this $150,000,000 would be used for heavy construction, in which skilled labor would be employed. Probably one-half of 1 percent of it would come from the relief roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Hare].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: Page 2, line 19, after the word "Act", insert a period in place of the colon, strike out the remainder of line 19 and all of lines 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, on page 2, and lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 3, to and including the figures "1939."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, an amendment to this particular paragraph has already been offered and adopted. The amendment was offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] to the fact the amendment now offered proposes to actually strike out that language; therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, it is clearly in order.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I discussed this question earlier in the day and I do not want to repeat what I said then. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, which was adopted as a committee amendment, will dure about 50 percent of the objections I have to the language I am now attempting to strike out altogether.

It leaves us in this situation: We are saying to certain non-civil-service employees in the various departments of the Government, 25,000 of them who are paid out of this money we are to appropriate here, "Now, you are the sheep. We are going to let you in the civil service." But we are saying at the same time to twenty-five or thirty thousand who are actually working in the W. P. A. offices on the administrative staff, and paid out of the same money, "You are the goats and we won't let you in."

Now, that is the effect of what is being done if the amendment which I have just offered is not agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, we have adopted an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York which makes it illegal to pay to any of these people any money if they attempt to influence the votes of any other persons getting any of the money. Who is the judge and who is the jury under that amendment? The judge and jury are the officials of the Works Progress Administration, and if they have been guilty of playing politics, no matter who they are playing politics with, whether for or against, of course they are going to decide the case as they see fit. I want to fix it so that these employees will be put under a law that gives the Civil Service Commission the right to try any of them who are politically active. May I call the attention of gentlemen on my side of the aisle to the political situation in which we are being placed today? Both parties are pledged to civil service. An indictment has been drawn of the W. P. A. that it is engaged in politics. That indictment has been made both by the Republican Party on my left and by a committee of our own party at the other end of this Capitol.

The President of the United States has answered that indictment by attempting to put these employees under the civil-service law. Are we as Democrats going to say to the President, "We deny you the right to answer that indictment and we refuse to do anything in reference to the indictment made by the Republicans in this House, throughout the country, and by our own party at the other end of the Capitol"?

I am not going to be a party to that sort of procedure. I am not going to say to the public of this country that I am unwilling to do anything about the political charges that have been made with reference to the W. P. A. As far as my efforts can accomplish, I want to put these employees under a law that will stop political activity no matter by whom it was engaged in or for whose benefit it was engaged in.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Does not the gentleman from Georgia believe the better thing for the President or whoever is responsible to have done would have been to fire the people who have been guilty of political activity, rather than condone their activity by placing them under civil service and giving them protection? [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman from Alabama may be correct. If I were running this country, I would fire those who have been found guilty of engaging in political activity no matter for whom or under whose instructions, because there ought not to be any politics in relieving human misery. Anyone who undertakes to inject politics into relief is doing a disservice to humanity. However, that course has not been followed, and the only thing we can do about it since we cannot fire them is to put them under a law that will have them fired. This is what I should like to see done. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I suggest the gentleman modify his request and make it 10 minutes?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It seems to me the matter has been fully debated. I hope the gentleman will not just hold us here at this late hour. There has been long debate on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the proposal of our distinguished and very able friend the gentleman from Georgia is to cover approximately 27,500 administrative employees of the W. P. A. into the civil service. Well, our job, of course, is to examine into the advisability of doing that and carrying out the provisions of the original Executive order.

You will recall from a reading of the press of this week that when Mr. Hopkins was before the senatorial committee, and the weather got rather rough and the going rather stormy. he stated there, where all the world might hear, that the people in question in Kentucky who injected politics into relief ought to have been fired from the rolls. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Ramspeck] would give these men civil-service status.

I have here the report of the senatorial investigating committee. On page 11 there is a statement that W. P. A. officials-and mind you, this is senatorial language by four Democrats and one Republican-were engaging in solicitation of funds for political purposes. If you vote for this amendment you indicate that you want to cover such men into the classified service.

Go into the situation in the State of Kentucky a little further. This is a disclosure by the committee, not mere evidence, but a finding by the committee that the entire supervisory force in district No. 1 in Kentucky managed to get the lists into the hands of 32 county chairman in behalf of Senator Barkley during the campaign. Vote for this amendment and you will freeze every one of those men into the civil service and give them civil-service status.

There were 9 supervising timekeepers in charge of 340 project timekeepers who actually appeared to be in a kind of collusion, as it were, with J. B. Boddie, director of district No. 1 of Kentucky, to carry out a political plan. Vote for this amendment and you will give them all civil-service

This report shows that W. P. A. Federal funds were used for the construction of private driveways in the State of Tennessee in order to influence the election results. Who ordered that kind of job? It must have been a W. P. A. official in Tennessee, and he would be entitled to civil-service status under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, even though he must have had knowledge that the use of Federal funds for private purposes was wrong.

You can examine this entire indictment, and when you get all through you must come to the conclusion, no matter how devoted you are to the civil service-and I am, and have voted for every civil-service proposal in the last 6 yearsthat it is unfair to the country, unfair to the taxpayers, and unfair to the people as a whole to cover in men who are now under suspicion, and who, in the language of the Administrator himself in the confirmation proceeding before the Senate, should have been fired from the rolls.

Vote for the amendment and freeze them on the rolls. Defeat the amendment and we will have a chance to look into it before we let this Executive order blanket in approximately 27,000 people. That is the case. [Applause.]

There are good men in W. P. A. There are able and conscientious men in W. P. A. There are men who are deserving of a civil-service status. But is it fair to adopt a provision that would cover into the civil service, administrative employees who have been guilty of misconduct that in many cases appears to have been willful? That would be going pretty far, and, surely, no one in possession of the facts and information relative to this matter could defend that position. The amendment should be defeated and the matter reserved for further study.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to carry out the intent of the amendment I offered a while ago. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Jones of Texas: On page 2, line 8, after the semicolon, insert the following: "Provided further, That no further grants of money made from funds made available under subsection 3 of section 1 of the Emergency Relief Act of 1938 shall be conditioned on an equivalent amount of work being done either on projects or on land in connection with soil or water conserva-

Mr. SABATH. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. It aims to legislate in regard to appropriations heretofore made. Consequently, I believe it is not in

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion it does not apply to any other appropriations, and therefore holds the amendment to be germane to this particular bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that it applies not only to the present appropriation but applies to appropriations heretofore made and to appropriations that are to be made in the future. Consequently, I say, it is not

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment applies only to the current relief act to which this is an amendment, and which carries the $1,450,000,000, the only available funds under this amendment. The Chair is clearly right.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon further investigation the Chair does find that the amendment not only applies to the Emergency Relief Act of 1938, but, of course, likewise applies to this bill to which it is now being offered.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There are no funds available under this bill for this purpose, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that he change the language of the amendment.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Boren: On page 3, after line 3, add "Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to anyone who is not a citizen of the United States of America."

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I do not choose to make a speech on this subject. It has been very ably discussed heretofore numerous times, particularly by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Lanham]. I only want to say that this amendment is offered in the interest of the many thousands of deserving people who are denied portions of this fund who think enough of America to be citizens of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I simply want to make this observation. In dealing with the so-called aliens we must bear in mind the innumerable difficulties that are placed before them in becoming citizens. In almost every instance it is not the fault of the alien that he is not a citizen. Courts ask him questions that even Supreme Court judges cannot answer. In many district courts papers are denied him because he is on relief and W. P. A. Right here in this House you have consistently refused to make the process of naturalization easier and less costly. Therefore, why punish the so-called alien? Furthermore, in persecuting these so-called aliens, you also punish their native-born children. They are good Americans. They were born here. Take their parents off the W. P. A. rolls because they are not citizens and you hit at these innocent native-born citizens of the United States. This discrimination is cruel, inhuman, and contrary to the best American traditions.

It is not fair play to first make it almost impossible for the immigrant to become naturalized and then starve him because he is not naturalized. This is not patriotism, it is just plain rotten.

At this time, when the world is filled with racial, religious, and political persecution, we should not indulge in it. To the contrary, America must stand out as a tolerant and humane The proposed amendment has the earmarks of nation. Nazi edicts against so-called non-Aryans. Let us not imitate the Nazis. Let us continue to be Americans.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Boren].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Marcantonio) there were-ayes 144, noes 41.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire: On page 3, after the previous amendments that have been adopted, insert "Provided further, That all employees under the Works Progress Administration shall hereafter be paid weekly."

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very plain and needs very little explanation from me. There may be some Members here who cannot quite comprehend the significance of this amendment. There may be some Members here who at some time in their lives have worked for as small an amount of wage as $10 per week and supported or tried to support a family on that amount. There is nobody on the W. P. A., or not many at least from choice. They are there through sheer necessity, and there have been brought to my attention many, many cases of workers on W. P. A. who have been greatly handicapped and who have really suffered by being obliged to wait 2 weeks for their pay. There is one State where they pay W. P. A. workers every week, and if they are doing this in one State I do not know why it should not be done in all of the States.

I sincerely hope that the Members of this House will realize the position in which these poor people are placed and what it would mean to them to receive their pay weekly instead of semimonthly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. JENKS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Poage: On page 3, after the last amendment adopted, insert "Provided further, That the Works Progress Administration shall undertake soil-conservation work on private property when (1) such work is sponsored by the Soil Conservation Service and (2) a local governmental agency shall undertake to provide without cost to the Federal Government the machinery and equipment required for the work.'

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer is one that has been worked out in cooperation with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Boren] and other Members of the House. It seeks to put the W. P. A. to doing vitally important and much-needed conservation work in those communities where the local people are willing to cooperate.

Mr. Chairman, there have been two outstanding works programs going on in the United States, the Works Progress Administration and the C. C. C. camps. The junior works program of the C. C. C. camps has met with almost universal approval. Those boys have been engaged very largely in building up the soil of this Nation; in forests, on public and private lands, in constructing terraces and drainways on the farm lands of this Nation, and protecting our soil from depletion in the years to come. These C. C. C. boys have done a work which we all recognize as of value to this Nation now and in the years to come. On the other hand, the Works Progress Administration has heretofore felt that it could not engage in this kind of constructive work and has instead, in many instances, engaged in projects of doubtful value. This amendment simply seeks to place the Works Progress Administration in a position to carry on the same kind of soilconservation work that is now being carried on by our Civilian Conservation Corps.

It allows the Works Progress Administration to enter and do soil-conserving work on private land where the Soil Conservation Service sponsors the work-and Soil Conservation will only sponsor such work where they get contracts binding the owners to cooperate in carrying out their prescribed practices-and, second, before W. P. A. can carry on soil-conservation work under this program, the local community must show its intense interest in the work to the extent of providing the machinery and equipment necessary to do the work. In other words, your W. P. A. with its reservoir of manual labor, provides that labor for doing soil-conserving work.

Why, my friends, should we not allow our W. P. A. to engage in the most important work of conserving the soil of this Nation? Why not allow it? We only ask you to allow it in communities that want it. We do not ask that urban communities or other uninterested communities join.

say there is nothing in the law now to prevent it. I agree that there is not, and in my State of Texas the W. P. A. approved such a project and sent it to Washington, and was told here that there is nothing in the law to prevent the approval of such projects at this time, but that the W. P. A. officials here did not want to undertake any soil-conservation work on privately owned lands until Congress affirmatively directed them. Congressman Boren, of Oklahoma, tells me that he had a like experience with a similar project that came up from his State. It is, therefore, that we may give this affirmative direction to the W. P. A. that we would rather see it engaged in enduring work than to see it engaged in temporary activities, that I offer this amendment. I do it that there may be congressional direction to the W. P. A. officials, telling them that we want them to furnish labor where the people are interested sufficiently to furnish material and machinery, and where the Soil Conservation Service approves the project as being worthy. In short, that we want the W. P. A. to make available to all parts of the Nation the aid that the C. C. C. camps have made available to a few fortunate localities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected. Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCormack: Page 3, after line 3, insert the following: "Provided, That no requirement of eligibility for emploment under such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, as amended, shall be effective which prohibits the employment of persons 65 years of age or over or women with dependent children."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple amendment, one that should appeal to the heart of each and every one of us, and one at the same time that is predicated upon simple justice. It is an amendment which transcends any party feeling. It is an amendment which we should vote in justice to all of our deserving men and women employed on projects who are 65 years of age or over, and to mothers with dependent children. This amendment is necessary to meet a regulation promulgated several weeks ago, and that was to go into effect December 31, but the effective date has been withheld until January 31. Certainly you and I do not want to say that men and women 65 years of age and over are incapable of any usefulness or of any ability with reference to productivity. Certainly we do not want to say that the passage of an old-age pension act automatically means that needy persons 65 years of age or over must apply for welfare assistance and that their years of usefulness are over. We might just as well say that the passage of a workmen's compensation act is a justification for the establishment of a dead line that men and women 40 years of age and over shall not be employed in private industry. The application for an old-age pension is a voluntary act. What about the men and women who do not want to accept it? We appreciate the fact that many must, but there are countless persons who do not want to ask public assistance, and we cannot help but respect their state of mind.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. To say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that that ruling has already gone into effect in the State of New Jersey. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does the gentleman in talking of a dependent mother and children, think of a widowed mother?

Mr. McCORMACK. It covers all mothers with dependent children. It does not apply to a widower with dependent children and, of course it should not, but why should we distinguish between the sexes? Are they not human beings? Why should we apply it to the mother with dependent children and not to the widower? The simple answer is we should not apply it to either, and my amendment attempts to obtain an objective giving simple justice where justice belongs.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. In my remarks this morning I called the attention of the House to the fact that 1,100 women with dependent children have been furloughed in the last 2 weeks in St. Louis and were told to apply to the Social Security.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; forced to go to public assistance, and it only affects about 1½ percent, according to reliable information that I have received.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows also that many of these women who have dependent children have dependent husbands as well—husbands who cannot work

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly. You are absolutely right. Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is an added reason for it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thoroughly agree, and I appreciate the gentlewoman's contribution.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is difficult for the women to secure it, anyway.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The rule has already gone into effect in Arizona, and numerous women and men over 65 have been displaced. I am with the gentleman on his amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank my friend.

I would like to have seen the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Jenks] adopted. Personally, I voted for the weekly pay. The fact that the gentleman has made his amendment will undoubtedly contribute greatly to weekly payments everywhere in the future.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. From the gentleman's own experience, he has no doubt had a great many of these people who have stated to him that they did not want to accept benefits but wanted work.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. Those classes are not the chiselers. These are the ones who work. It is simple justice that this amendment be adopted.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. O'Day: Page 2, line 3, after the colon, insert "Provided, That at least $22,000,000 of the increase appropriated for limitation (3) of (d) of subsection (1) of section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 shall be allocated to Federal project No. 1."

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to safeguard the Federal arts projects, including the theater, music, art, and writers' projects from being destroyed.

Even before this deficiency appropriation is voted, dismissals of 7,000 employees on these projects have been ordered to take effect tomorrow. This amendment would prevent still another cut beginning in February.

Federal project No. 1, employs only 33,000 persons, about 1 percent of the entire W. P. A. program. A further reduction in personnel would make it impossible for this program to function.

The criticisms which have been leveled against the artists on these projects is unjust. They are professional people who should not be discriminated against because they are musicians or actors instead of carpenters or bricklayers or day laborers.

Millions of people in our country who have never before been given an opportunity to come in contact with the theater, the symphony, or the other arts have been benefited by this program, among them millions of children who have been taken off the streets and given music and art lessons, and that world has been opened up to them.

Over 120,000,000 people have attended Federal music concerts in over 300 cities, towns, or counties in 44 States.

Of the more than 40,000,000 who have witnessed Federal theaters, circuses, opera, and children's theaters, 65 percent had never been to the theater before, or any place of amusement other than the movies.

Whenever our country is in danger the artists are called upon and have always given their services gladly and generously. I speak in behalf of the writers and musicians, actors, sculptors, and painters who have been so generous in giving their services to their country whenever they were called upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York undertakes to definitely earmark $22,000,000 of these funds for the arts projects, in order to prevent any curtailment whatever of those projects, if in the wisdom of the Works Progress Administration they should be curtailed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does the gentlewoman's amendment include the theater projects of New York City, mentioned here yesterday, where W. P. A. workers are alleged to have written and dramatized un-American plays?

Mrs. O'DAY. Yes. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am told by the gentlewoman from New York that it does include that. I do not think we should undertake to single out any one project and say that it should not be reduced. The W. P. A. has to reduce its whole program. That is an administrative function that the Congress should leave to the W. P. A.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schaffer of Wisconsin: On page 3, after the last amendment adopted, strike out the period and insert "Provided further, That no funds appropriated in this joint resolution shall be paid for relief or work relief to any person who voluntarily relinquishes private employment to go out on strike."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations indicated that at the peak only 3,000,000 of our unemployed were on the W. P. A. rolls. There are more than 12,000,000 unemployed in America today according to his statement. Therefore, more than 9,000,000 of our unemployed have been unable to obtain work in private fields or on W. P. A. We have observed many strikes throughout the land, led by aliens and others, which have destroyed hundreds of thousands of jobs. Thousands of the strikers have left their employment in private industry to go on the relief rolls and W. P. A. jobs, although 9,000,000 of our unemployed, most of whom want jobs, have been unable to get them either in private industry or on the W. P. A.

With the serious unemployment problem which we have and the precarious financial condition of the Federal Treasury as well as the treasuries of the States and their subdivisions it is highly proper to pass this amendment and in the future prevent alien and other labor-union leaders from leading employed men from their jobs in private industry to the relief jobs on the W. P. A. rolls. [Applause.]

offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Schafer of Wisconsin) there were-ayes 30, noes 193.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Voorhis of California: On page 3, after the last amendment adopted, strike out the period and insert "Provided further, That no money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the compensation of any supervisor, foreman, or other official who attempts to influence the political opinions of workers under his direction or supervision.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to give the House a chance to do a decent job of the thing which perhaps some Members thought they did when they adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cole]. The Cole amendment is so broad, saying, as it does, that if any person attempts to influence the political opinion of any other person he shall not be granted any pay for his work under this bill. The gentleman's amendment will render a worker on W. P. A. liable to forfeiture of his wage if he merely speaks to a fellow worker and says that he favors so and so, or thinks such and such about a political question. I do not think the Members of the House want to do that. I have therefore offered this amendment, which provides that if an official attempts to use his position as boss over other men to influence their political opinions, then he cannot draw his pay; in other words, the money shall not be used to pay the salary of such an official who exerts political pressure upon those who are working under him.

I realize my amendment covers a portion of the same ground covered by the Cole amendment, but the reason for that is that if the Cole amendment is voted down on a roll call vote tomorrow, as I sincerely hope it will be, you will still have this amendment which is a workable amendment, I believe, and which will accomplish every fair purpose in connection with this matter.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Would not the Cole amendment which the Committee adopted infringe upon constitutional rights?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think the Cole amendment will deprive men working on W. P. A. projects of the most elemental rights of citizenship.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think, if we are to put such an amendment in this bill, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is preferable to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman from Virginia. Does not the gentleman agree with me that the best available thing we can do under the circumstances is to adopt this amendment at this time in order that we may have it to vote on tomorrow?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think so.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not the gentleman's purpose to eradicate politics from relief by his amendment? Some of us are just as anxious as our Republican friends to accomplish that object.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Exactly. I said that was my purpose, but in so doing I do not want to subject a W. P. A. worker to the possibility of losing his basic civil

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman used the words "vote tomorrow." I fear that if that statement stands some Members may leave. We intend to vote this evening.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman for the correction, and I am sorry I said "tomorrow." I meant this evening.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Does the gentleman mean to imply that under the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and adopted, a worker on a W. P. A. project cannot say what preference he or she may have about a candidate or about a party in which they have an interest? It would be unfair in our democracy to discriminate or discharge such individuals. That would be un-American.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am compelled so to interpret that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEGER: Page 3, line 3, after the amendment last adopted, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated shall be used by the Farm Security Administration or any other Federal agency to establish hosiery mills on homestead or other projects in competition with existing industries."

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, during the last 15 hours I have listened to reasons advanced why a smaller appropriation than the appropriation recommended by the committee should be adopted without creating any hardship on the relief rolls. The principal reason advanced therefor was that business was going to take up the slack.

Mr. Chairman, if business is going to take up the slack, we must let business alone, and I say this for the reason that in New England, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania there are great hosiery mills. Last summer and fall close to 10,000 men and women were walking the streets in these States or working only 2 days a week, because the hosiery mills were so slack and the imports of hosiery were coming into this country in such quantities the mills could not provide work for these people.

Despite the fact that these industries throughout New England were not working, the Government had started the erection of five hosiery mills in the South at an expenditure of four to five million dollars. You gentlemen may not realize that this is only one industry that the Government might go into. The erection of these five mills in the South is going to add to the tragedy of the hosiery worker in the North. It is being done, as I understand it, contrary to any power that the Department of Agriculture has.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEGER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. By what act of Congress is the Government undertaking to erect these hosiery mills?

Mr. SEGER. There is no act of Congress at the present time which gives them the right to do this.

Mr. COOLEY. The point I wanted to make is that Congress has never authorized the thing about which the gentleman is complaining, is that not a fact?

Mr. SEGER. That is the fact. Congress has never authorized such projects and I will read a portion of the Comptroller General's opinion for not authorizing payment for this illegal enterprise. The Comptroller General says:

The appropriation of $175,000,000 made to the Secretary of Agriculture in the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1938 for "administration, loans, relief, and rural rehabilitation for needy persons" tration, loans, relief, and rural rehabilitation for needy persons" must be construed as authorized for use only for the specific purpose for which made available. There is nothing in the appropriation either in specific terms or by necessary implication which may be construed as authorizing its use for loans for industrial enterprises in competition with private industry. Subsidizing the manufacture of silk hosiery on subsistence homestead projects does not appear to come within such contemplated field of agricultural relief or rural rehabilitation. There are indications that the undertaking tends to defeat the whole purpose and intent of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 to supplement private employment and provide rural rehabilitation by throwing industrial workers out of employment and giving rise to increased competition with cotton, the chief agricultural product of the South. with cotton, the chief agricultural product of the South.

Mr. Chairman, I think that some steps should be taken whereby the funds that we provide for a specific purpose shall be carried for that purpose and that purpose alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Allen of Pennsylvania: Page 1, line 8, strike out "$725,000,000" and insert "$525,000,000."
Page 2, line 7, after the word "prescribe", strike out "June 30, 1939" and insert "April 30, 1939."
Page 2, line 13, after the word "until", strike out "June 30, 1939" and insert "April 30, 1939."
Page 2, line 17, strike out "$83,000,000" and insert "$75,000,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virgina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is obviously a compromise amendment with which I am appealing to those who are anxious to see the administrative malpractices in W. P. A. in some sections cleared up before a 5-month period, and at the same time appeal to those who like myself believe that any strict curtailment of funds beneath the estimate submitted by the President would inflict a real hardship on those who are unemployed.

I have prorated the $875,000,000 recommended by the President over a period of 3 months instead of 5 months, and the amount I am suggesting is $525,000,000, to last until April 30, 1939. I am as anxious to clean up the administrative difficulties, inefficiencies, and political corruption in W. P. A. as anyone here today, but in doing so I do not want to inflict, and I know that many of my colleagues do not want to inflict, a hardship on the unemployed, who are not responsible for this situation.

My amendment I believe strikes a compromise which will accomplish those two purposes and I earnestly solicit your support for this amendment.

I desire through this amendment to help the unemployed themselves. Millions of dollars have been lost in past years, and are still being wasted because of top-heavy management in W. P. A. I know of cases right now in my own district where the forces are overmanned with foremen; where there is one supervisor to every four or five workers. It is this sort of thing we can eliminate, and it is up to us to take the first step today. It must be taken sometime, and in my opinion it would be an encouraging note to the people of this country who are discouraged and disgusted with the manner in which W. P. A. has been administered in the past if this Congress would take action now. I believe the amendment which has just been offered will be that first step. We will be subscribing to the feelings of many who want to see the W. P. A. cleaned up but at the same time do not want to inflict hardship upon the unemployed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Indiana: Beginning after the word "act", on page 2, line 19, add the following: "Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the employment of persons not in need of relief."

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take much time to discuss this amendment. It is plain. It is worded so everyone can understand it, and it needs no explanation. Members on both sides of the aisle have been saying they want the money appropriated for relief to go to those who need relief. Adopt this amendment, and that will be done. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Johnson].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALEXANDER: At the end of the bill add the following: "Provided further, That a joint committee consisting of nine Members of the House and nine Members of the Senate be appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, respectively, to forthwith investigate the relief prob-lem and report out within 90 days a sound program of Federal relief and reemployment."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the pending joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the gentleman's point of order that the amendment is somewhat similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman's amendment is not germane to the pending joint resolution. It undertakes to set up a special committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It seems to me that while we are discussing the measure we should discuss not only the amount and the type of relief we are going to offer but what we shall do in the future. This is the object of the amendment.

The regular order was demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

The Chair is ready to rule.

Obviously, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is not in order, as it deals with a subject over which another committee of the House would have entire jurisdiction. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the joint resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the joint resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit. The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from New York opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. TABER. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendments:

On page 1, line 8, strike out "$725,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$350,000,000."

On page 2, line 13, strike out "June 30, 1939" and insert in lieu thereof "April 7, 1939."

On page 2, line 17, strike out "$83,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 397, nays 16, not voting 19, as follows:

SENATE

Monday, January 16, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the fountain of life and light, whose herald star gives promise of another dawn wherein Thy children may rejoice: sanctify to each one the opportunities awaiting him for serving Thee in quiet calm and confidence and in the courage born of goodness, that through us may be mediated the influences of dignity of soul and purity of heart to the uplift of our fellow citizens.

Bring under Thy loving sway the leaders of all the nations of the world, that true victory may be achieved in the arena of thought, that prejudice, error, and ignorance may be destroyed—not men—that light may be shed—not blood—till fear dies, joy deepens, and love and life with God are enthroned upon the earth.

We ask it in our Saviour's name. Amen.

PROPOSED AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATION-PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BULOW. Mr. President, on page 223 of the Congressional Record of January 12, 1939, reference is made to the introduction of Senate bill 570 as being sponsored by 18-Members of the Senate, including myself.

I desire to say that I had no opportunity to participate in the preparation of this bill, and it is not my habit to sponsor any measure to which I have not given consideration. This bill affects agriculture, a subject of intense interest to the people of my State. The bill may be a good agricultural measure, and I may support it—in fact, I may earnestly support it—but I do not care to pledge that support in advance, as I have had no opportunity to read the bill and give it consideration. Therefore, at this my first opportunity in open session of the Senate since the introduction of the measure, I desire to disclaim any responsibility as one of the proponents of Senate bill 570.

EXPANSION OF CREDIT AND CURRENCY—LETTER FROM EUGENE E.
GREESON

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, early in the present session I introduced a bill to amend the Federal Reserve Act. A few days later the Wall Street Journal published an editorial criticizing the bill. A gentleman by the name of Eugene E. Greeson wrote a letter to the Wall Street Journal criticizing the editorial. I ask unanimous consent to have a copy of that letter inserted in the Record as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1939.

WALL STREET JOURNAL, New York, N. Y. (Attention Mr. Woodlock)

(Attention Mr. Woodlock)

Dear Mr. Woodlock: In the Wall Street Journal's editorial The Cart and the Horse of January 7 appears a criticism of a bill introduced by Senator M. M. Logan, former attorney general of Kentucky and chief justice of the Kentucky Court of Appeals. The editorial suggests that he is putting the cart before the horse in advocating an annual expansion of 4 percent of credit and currency over the amount outstanding the preceding year to supply the country with an amount of money equal to the normal expansion of the capacity of the country to produce. You assert that bank credit (demand bank deposits) follows production and does not precede it.

The tables of the Department of Labor repeatedly put in the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives demonstrate that within from 30 to 60 days factory employment and factory wages rise as the volume of money rises and fall as the volume of money falls. In these tables the volume of money is indicated by the all-commodity index, sometimes called the price level. This all-commodity index is based upon a fixed volume of 784 commodities multiplied by the average price, severally, of each commodity, giving a total volume of money so employed in 1926 of $54,700,000,000 as a basis of comparison with later years. The present all-commodity index of 77, approximately, means that the total amount of money required to buy the same volume of commodities as in 1926 at the prices of 1938 was 77 percent of $54,700,000,000. The price level merely represents the volume of money actually employed in the manner described in any one year as compared to the standards of 1926.

It is obvious that you do not understand this and do not know the facts; otherwise you could not conscientiously make the statement that the Logan proposal puts the cart before the horse, when your editorial does just that your editorial does just that.

Your statement that the banks do not create credit is contradicted by Marriner Eccles, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. All informed bankers now know this, and it is too late to attempt to contradict it.

For your information I call your attention to page 126 of the hearings before the House Committee on Banking and Currency on H. R. 7230, where the facts to which I refer are established from the evidence of the Department of Labor and from the files of the Federal Reserve Board. I am sending you a copy of the hearings under separate cover.

It has been a lack of the general knowledge of these facts that accounts for the disaster which has taken place in America in the depressions which have invariably followed the contraction of the money supply by the banks contracting loans to industry and commerce. Loans were contracted from $41,600,000,000 in June 1929 to $21,200,000,000 by December 31, 1932, a contraction of over $20,-000,000,000. This contraction of $20,000,000,000 resulted in the depression which has afflicted us and the suspension of all the banks in March 1933.

Yours respectfully,

EUGENE E. GREESON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair ask the Senator from Texas if he will yield for the purpose of concluding the morning-hour business, such as the presentation of petitions and memorials and introduction of bills, and so forth?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have announced that I would be glad to do so.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS FROM JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. LOGAN, as in executive session, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Frank Murphy, of Michigan, to be Attorney General, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Homer S. Cummings, resigned.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to present a favorable report on the nomination of Dr. Felix Frankfurter, of Massachusetts, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, and also a favorable report on the nomination of Mr. Lemuel R. Via, of West Virginia, to be United States district attorney for the southern district of West Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague [Mr. Logan] if the nominations reported from the Judiciary Committee are the nominations of the Attorney General of the United States and of Associate Justice of the Supreme Court?

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct. I reported the nomination of the Attorney General, and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] reported the nomination of the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky and also the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, whether they will be ready to proceed with these nominations tomorrow?

Mr. LOGAN. So far as the Senator from Kentucky is concerned, he will be ready to proceed at that time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course that is conditioned upon the reports being submitted today, as I shall insist that all nominations shall go to the calendar before action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. These nominations, the Chair understands, have been reported by unanimous consent, and will go to the calendar, and on tomorrow, as the Chair understands, under the rule, they may be considered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no intention of asking that they be considered today. I wanted to know from the members of the committee if they would be ready to proceed tomorrow, so that I might advise the Senate that on tomorrow we might dispose of these two nominations.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, as the chairman of the subcommittee that conducted the hearings in relation to Dr. Frankfurter's nomination, may I not inform the leader of the majority that the printed record of the evidence taken will not be available before next Friday or Saturday.

Mr. BARKLEY. The reason I inquired is that there is no business before the Senate, and unless these nominations can be taken up tomorrow there is no need for the Senate then to meet. I was trying to find out whether the members of the committee would be ready, and I was assured by both the chairmen of the subcommittees that they would be ready tomorrow. If the nominations cannot be taken up tomorrow, there is no need for the Senate to reassemble merely to adjourn again. I am going to assume, therefore, that the nominations will be taken up tomorrow.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas the sovereign State of Vermont, through its board of public works, acting upon the written authorization of its Governor, George D. Alken, did on its part enter into a contract with the United States of America, acting through the Secretary of War, entitled "Agreement between the State of Vermont and the United States of America for land acquisition for the dam site and reservoir basins of the Union Village Dam in Vermont"; and Whereas the operation of the aforesaid contract was prevented

Aiken, under date of October 15, 1938, did inform the Secretary of War that Vermont did not recognize the right of the United States of America to purchase or acquire land within the State without the consent of the State, affirming at the same time the readiness of the State of Vermont to cooperate with the United States of America in the acquisition of land for the dam site and reservoir basin in the town of Thetford, in accordance with the laws of the State of Vermont and pledging his willingness to necolaws of the State of Vermont, and pledging his willingness to negotiate an agreement; and

S. C. Whereas the sad plight of other sections of our world, as well as the history of our own land before the formation of these United States of America, warns us that liberty itself withers when arbitrary power, heedless of respect for negotiation, consent, and respect for the rights and obligations of others, gathers unto himself powers which are unrestrained by law: Be it therefore

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, proclaiming sympathy for those communities which have suffered and may again suffer from catastrophies caused by disastrous flood waters; declaring its readiness to cooperate with the United States of America and the several States in measures designed to prevent such floods and their human and economic tragedies; insisting that the internal sovereignty of the State of Vermont cannot be invaded or compromised without its consent; warning the several sister States of the Union that the program of an arbitrary, ambitious, and unscrupulous minority must now be prevented from usurping the rights and powers reserved to the people and to the States; and reiterating the question which Thomas Chittenden placed be-fore the Congress of the United States of America when, in 1779, under similar circumstances and in a similar memorial, he wrote:

under similar circumstances and in a similar memorial, he wrote:

"The general assembly will be pleased to learn over what part of

That the honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America be respectfully requested to direct the Secretary of War to execute in behalf of the United States of America the aforesaid "agreement between the State of Vermont," already executed in good faith by the Board of Public Works and the Governor of the State of Vermont; and be it further Resolved, That the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America be respectfully requested to uphold the sacred faith and tradition of the American people by repealing forthwith such enactments as may allow the United States of America to invade the internal sovereignty of a sovereign State over its land and natural resources without its consent thereto; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to the Vice President of the United States, as the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative who represents the State and people of Vermont in the Congress of the United States of America.

OSCAR L. SHEPARD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WM. H. WILLS,
President of the Senate.

POLITICAL FRANCHISE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter from Mr. Theodore W. Noyes, president of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia, together with a plea to Congress from the association for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to provide national representation in both Houses of Congress and in the electoral college for the Nation's Capital.

I find myself in hearty sympathy with the sentiments expressed in this plea. It has always seemed to me a rank injustice that the people of this, the Capital of the greatest nation on earth, who are subject to all the responsibilities and obligations of citizenship, the same as citizens of the several States, should be denied what I consider the outstanding function of citizenship—the right of suffrage; the right to vote for President and Vice President; the right to be represented in both branches of Congress by Members of their own choosing.

I think the plea presents a powerful argument for the enfranchisement of the people of the District of Columbia. I commend it to the thoughtful consideration of the Congress and interested citizens everywhere, and hope that it may be productive of favorable action at an early date.

There being no objection, the letter and plea were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

> ASSOCIATION OLDEST INHABITANTS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA Washington, D. C., January 12, 1939.

To the Senate of the United States:

By direction of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia, passed by a unanimous vote at its meeting on January 1, 1939, there is transmitted the attached plea to Congress.

We respectfully request that this document be laid before the Senate, published in the Congressional Record, and referred to the appropriate committees. Very respectfully,

THEODORE W. NOVES, President.

A PLEA TO CONGRESS (By Fred A. Emery)

Delivered to and officially adopted by the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia

As the old year fades into history and a new year is ushered in, the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, in the spirit of organized citizenship of Washington, presents its sincerest felicitations to the new Congress. It is a meed of tribute that we pay as a symbol of respect that the people of Washington have for orderly Government. It also is the occasion for a city of 627,000 people to remind Congress that it is within the power and duty of Congress to adopt a constitutional amendment to provide national representation in both Houses of Congress and in the Electoral College for the American tayparers of the greatest municipality College for the American taxpayers of the greatest municipality on earth.

The taxpayers of Washington have the same sublime faith in Government, the same pure patriotism, the same home-loving spirit that Americans everywhere else have. And they, in the only national capital in the world whose people are denied the elective franchise, are of the same type of Americanism as the people back in the States. Washingtonians pay not only their way, but they do more than their part in the upkeep of the Federal Government. They pay in taxes more than each of 24 States and more than 9 of the States combined.

States and more than 9 of the States combined.

The responsible taxpayers of Washington trace their citizenship back through the provincial and colonial days, and they have the pride of a people whose civic activities hark back in history for 138 years through which the city of Washington, the District of Columbia, has been in process of development. We have surpassed the record of many States in patriotic response to every great emergency of the Nation. And today we are sublimely proud of the genius of our own people through whose activities there has been built up the great city of Washington, whose wondrous dignity and graceful lines are today the joy of the world.

SYMBOL OF AMERICA

Today Washington, save for the disfranchisement of its tax-payers, is the symbol of America. And let no one gain the impression that Washingtonians live by the grace or indulgence of a paternalistic Federal Government. Washingtonians are self-sustaining. They pay for what they get as time marches on. They are bona fide Americans in all but the vote, which a tardy Congress still withholds. The taxpayers of Washington built up and made and maintain the city of Washington, save for those Federal areas whose every encroachment means less District revenue and more District taxation for the responsible taxpayers of Washington. of Washington.

Washington citizens maintain their metropolis on a magnificent scale in keeping with the dignity and prestige of a world capital.

They pay their own taxes and the taxes for the maintenance of the Government in every State in the Union. They pay their part toward the upkeep of the Federal Government for the benefit of the constituents of Congress in every community where flies the American flag. They pay not only their own taxes but the same Federal taxes that Americans everywhere else pay. They carry on with both local and Federal obligations in the fiscal burdens of a great National Government and the fiscal burdens of a great community which is their home and Washington is not merely a Federal capital. It is a local municipality, a metropolis of Americans like Americans everywhere in the States. To every Federal pay roll, Washingtonians pay their share of the expense; to every branch of the Federal Government, they help pay the costs; they pay part and parcel of the costs wherever the American flag flies.

ALL OTHERS HAVE VOTE Congress makes the laws of the District of Columbia and properly so under the greatest national Constitution in all history. The Treasury collects from the Washington taxpayers for every State and village in the United States; the Washingtonians pay their share of upkeep of every Federal department and agency on the same basis of levy as applies to everybody else in this broad land. But every other taxpayer has a vote and a voice in the halls of Congress. Washington taxpayers, doing more than their part in the upkeep of the Government, have no representation in the Federal Government. A constitutional amendment, which Congress could pass at this session if it would adopt the broadmindedness of our forefathers, would correct this Un-American disability. It is the old story of taxation without representation which was denounced by the elder statesmen of the greatest Republic on earth. The unfranchised taxpayers of Washington carry on, bearing the fiscal burdens of every Federal office in every State and their own community's, too.

Washington is not merely a Federal capital. It is a local municipality where vast areas are occupied by Federal buildings that are exempt from the taxable resources of the local government. Hundreds of thousands of people from every State and from every land come to Washington annually. They go through the magnificent buildings which a Federal Government generous to other people than Washingtonians has built here. I would remind these vast armies of visitors and Congress that we, too, here in Washington, the voteless taxpayers of the District of Columbia, help pay for these buildings and their upkeep and their personnel just as other taxpayers do.

DUTY TO TAKE ACTION Congress makes the laws of the District of Columbia and prop-

DUTY TO TAKE ACTION

We are glad this is the Nation's Capital. It enhances our pride but not our taxable resources. We are glad the forefathers provided that Congress meet here. We are proud of Congress and present our felicitations to its Members in both branches. But we would like to remind Congress that Washington is a city hewn by the taxpayers of Washington, who are denied a vote which the constituents of Congress have and that everybody in the land has, to the injustice of our own people here.

Washington taxpayers play their part and pay their part. They pay their way and more, Federally as well as locally. It is the duty, and ought to be the patriotic privilege of every Member of both Houses of Congress, to take substantive action to provide a constitutional amendment for representation of the District in both Houses of Congress.

a constitutional amendment for representation of the District in both Houses of Congress.

We are proud of the acclaim of Washington as the greatest of all world capitals. We are proud of our metropolis as a dream city unparalleled anywhere. We are proud of being in a great city largely produced by the brain, the brawn, the patriotism, the genius, and the skill and the broad vision of our own people. We share some of this credit with the Congresses that have been with us ever since 1800. But, remember this, Washington is a city built up and maintained by Washington taxpayers. It is of and by the citizens of Washington.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT—REAPPORTION-MENT OF COTTON ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, last year the Senate adopted an amendment to the Agricultural Act called the "frozen acres" amendment. It was for only 1 year's time. It has expired. The purpose of the amendment was to release certain acres to be reallotted. For instance, in my State of Oklahoma some 300,000 acres have been allotted for cotton, and the cotton farmer who did not want to use his allotment could not turn it back. This amendment gave them permission, and gave the Administration power, to reallot that acreage. It meant 235,000 acres in my State of Oklahoma, 100,000 acres in Texas, and 50,000 acres in Arkansas. It applied chiefly to that section of the country.

The amendment has expired by limitation, and I am at this time introducing an amendment in the form of a bill to extend its operation. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and hope that we may secure early action on it. Last year the amendment was adopted so late that many persons were not able to take advantage of its provisions. If we could expedite its adoption this year, it would be helpful to that section of the country. There is no objection to it from any source that I can find.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The bill (S. 660) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the reapportionment of cotton acreage allotments not planted by farmers entitled thereto was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

DISPOSITION OF FALLEN TIMBER IN NEW ENGLAND

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in behalf of myself and my colleagues from the New England States, I present a bill with reference to the disposition of the timber which has fallen in the New England region as a result of the recent hurricane, and I ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

I also request that a letter addressed by myself and in behalf of the New England delegation to E. W. Tinker, of the Forest Service, be printed in the RECORD in connection with

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD, and the letter presented by the Senator from Massachusetts will also be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 680) to authorize payment for certain timber products, and for other purposes (introduced by Mr. Walsh, Mr. Lodge, Mr. Maloney, Mr. Danaher, Mr. Austin, Mr. Gib-SON, Mr. GERRY, Mr. GREEN, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. HALE, and Mr. White), was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000,000 for paying 10 percent of the approved schedules of prices for salvaged timber products purchased or to be purchased from the owners thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration and for necessary administrative expenses in connection with the timber salvaging operations conducted by the Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration; said 10 percent being in addition to a payment of 90 percent of such schedules of prices made or to be made from funds loaned by the Disaster Loan Corporation to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage The letter presented by Mr. Walsh is as follows:

THE HURRICANE TIMBER PROBLEM IN NEW ENGLAND

JANUARY 13, 1939.

Mr. E. W. TINKER.

United States Forest Service,

209 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR MR. TINKER: I am writing you again concerning some of the difficulties in connection with the down-timber situation in Massachusetts as a result of the hurricane.

Since the original program of the Government was announced providing for payment by the Government, at scheduled prices, of timber, after grading, and delivered at designated points, certain modifications, as you know, have been made. The agitation among many of the fallen-timber owners requesting the Government to pay 100 percent of scheduled prices instead of 80 percent has led to a new and recent regulation providing for the payment of 90 percent. percent.

It is now my purpose and that of other Members of the New England delegation to the Congress to ask for legislation appropriating the sum of $5,000,000 for payment of the balance of 10 percent of approved scheduled prices for salvaged timber to be purchased from the owners thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. This, we hope, will induce more of the owners of fallen timber to undertake clearance of their woodland and conversion of the follow timber in a lower.

owners of fallen timber to undertake clearance of their woodland and conversion of the fallen timber into logs.

The President, as you also know, has requested, through the Budget, $5,000,000 to be expended in removing fire hazards. I assume this money will be spent for clearing along highways, open spaces, and other localities where there is danger of fire. I do not understand this money, when appropriated, will in any way be used for salvaging the losses of the owners.

We, representing New England in the Congress, are still troubled, however, about the plight of a considerable number of owners of

We, representing New England in the Congress, are still troubled, however, about the plight of a considerable number of owners of down timber. It has been the practice in many parts of Massachusetts for the owners of timber to sell it on the stump either in the lump or by the thousand, and for the buyer to do the actual logging. Many owners are not in a position either to log themselves or to secure services to operate their lots and thereby take advantage of the Government's offer. They either have had no experience in such matters or are elderly people quite incapable of supervising the logging operations or their lots are so located as to make some operations very expensive. In many instances there seems to be a lack of contractors, and the owners do not know how to secure contractors from outside the State or other area. These seems to be a lack of contractors, and the owners do not know how to secure contractors from outside the State or other areas. These people are in a paralyzed state as far as hiring, contracting, and supervising the logging operations are concerned. They are not asking that the losses entailed by the hurricane be made up by the Government. They are, however, asking the Government to help them secure stumpage value for their fallen timber.

I understand you have authority to either buy the logs as announced or you may purchase the fallen timber of the stump. I am now writing to urge that you take advantage of this discretionary power and arrange, if possible, to give a fair stumpage value to the owners of small woodlands—those owners (you might restrict to those possessing a definite small acreage) who have not restrict to those possessing a definite small acreage) who have not the facilities nor the money to clear their lots and convert the timber into logs without an expense that would result in some loss, in addition to the loss they have already sustained by reason

To those who are accustomed to logging operations and who have large holdings, the payment of 100 percent of scheduled prices by the Government would be reasonably satisfactory, but this does not meet all the requirements of the situation and, in the instance of the small-lot owners, is no encouragement to go to additional expense to clear their lots. In fact, they are financially unable to do it. Failure to do so means, beside the fire hazard, a reversion of much of the land to the towns for taxes.

Let me add my appreciation of your efforts to be helpful in this situation, for I can well understand that the problem of this kind situation, for I can well understand that the problem of this kind was entirely new to the agencies of the Federal Government and that the New England problem—New England not being a natural logging center—is especially difficult to handle as the problem here relates to a system of logging that has been largely on the basis of buying logs on the stump. If we had a few large timber com-panies with which to deal, the problem would be easy of solution, but with thousands of small, scattered, and unorganized owners, the problem is unusual and unlike any heretofore confronted in compensating for loss of timber.

May I have your views with respect to the suggestions about the exercise of your discretion as outlined above?

Sincerely yours,

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

DAVID I. WALSH.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF—AMENDMENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ENACTMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE LAW

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this week marks the fiftysixth anniversary of the signing of the National Civil Service Act. Several Members of the Congress have been asked to state their views with respect to the merit system in the public service, which commenced with the original law and has been expanded and extended to the present time.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement issued by me, at the request of the American Federation of Government Employees, on the subject of the merit system.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On the occasion of the celebration of Civil Service Week I am pleased to comply with your request to submit my opinion respecting the merit system.

The alternative to the selection of Government officials according The alternative to the selection of Government officials according to definite standards after examination and on strict merit is to choose them according to the methods of the old spoils system, so-called because it enunciated and carried into practice the doctrine "to the victor belongs the spoils." Under this system, generally in vogue during the early life of the Republic and at the present time in some States and Federal bureaus, persons were appointed to positions for no other reason than that they happened to be members of a victorious political party or had worked for the success of its leaders. Important Government offices and positions filled on this basis alone without reference to the training, character, and capacity of appointees was certain to produce unfavorable results in the operation of Government machinery. Misfits, castoffs, and hopeless incompetents, persons without a semblance of aptitude for their jobs, could not be expected to make for efficient functioning of government. To the contrary, their incompetence and inaptitude frequently led to serious blunders and, in the case of departments requiring more technical skill, a complete breakof departments requiring more technical skill, a complete break-down and administrative failure.

Discerning and altruistic spirits, who believed in honest and Discerning and altruistic spirits, who believed in honest and efficient government and who realized the inequities of the spoils system, early began a campaign to establish the merit principle as a substitute for "spoils" in public appointments. Contending against them were alined the powerful forces of greedy political organizations and leaders, who were reluctant to give up patronage enabling them to appoint incompetent satellites to fruitful positions in the Government agencies and who scoffed at civil service as the aim of misguided reformers. Whenever in the Federal or State service a particular political party has been overwhelmingly in control, opposition to the merit system usually prevails.

To the everlasting credit, the good sense, and judgment of our American citizenry, however, the merit system gained a firm foothold in this country because of the appeal it made to believers in intelligent, well-conducted, honest government. It has been continually broadened, especially where political control has not been tinually broadened, especially where political control has not been one-sided, so that now it embraces a substantial field of Government employment—Federal, State, and local.

ment employment—Federal, State, and local.

Though the opposition to the merit principle is strong and powerful, even at present among some in elective public office and their henchmen who cannot use it for their own ends, public sentiment is insistent not only upon the fullest measure of protection for the civil service but also is intent upon extending its scope to cover a larger part of public employment. The British have given us a striking example of the beneficial results which flow from a broadly applied, honestly administered merit system, where neither favoritism, bias, nor corruntion can intervene to thwart the high purposes applied, nonestly administered ment system, where neither favoritism, bias, nor corruption can intervene to thwart the high purpose of honest and efficient government. It is unquestioned that recognition by the British of education, character, and fitness in the selection of public employees is responsible for the remarkably impartial and successful discharge of Government business which has redounded the world over to the benefit of the British Empire.

In our own country, unfortunetly, the experience and treatment.

redounded the world over to the benefit of the British Empire.

In our own country, unfortunately, the experience and treatment of civil service has frequently been most discouraging. Political manipulation has been too often permitted to nullify the spirit and intention of these commendable laws. This has been made possible in various ways—reposing too much discretion in administrative officials to alter regulations, thereby enabling discrimination against the highest on the register; noncompetitive examinations and provisional appointments and other exemptions, the use of which results in the appointment of the less qualified or the downright incompetent, simply because they have rendered political assistance to the appointing powers. Failure to extend the scope of civilservice laws to cover a larger proportion of public positions is another grave shortcoming which ought to be remedied forthwith. Of reassuring and hopeful import, however, is the strong tide of public opinion running with impartial application of the merit system. Our people have apparently concluded that within this principle lies the hope for weeding out inefficiency, incompetency, and dishonesty in the public service and insuring to every man and woman an equal opportunity to enter the field of governmental employment upon a basis of qualification, aptitude, and capacity for the position they seek.

for the position they seek.

Notwithstanding the progress that has been made, there is much room for improvement. Many political hacks still hold positions to which duly qualified persons on civil-service registers are entitled. The task for sincere friends of the merit system is to continue the battle in National and State legislatures until we succeed not only in ousting the incumbent unfit where it is possible but in prevent-ing the appointment to the Government service of such persons in the future.

Equality of opportunity, reward of capacity, work, and qualifications are inherent to democracy. By insistent advocacy of an enlarged and impartially administered civil service, we can do much to render our Government impregnable against inefficiency, waste, and corruption.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Four years ago I sent to the newly convened Congress a message transmitting a report of the Committee on Economic Security. In that message I urged that Congress consider the enactment into law of the program of protection for our people outlined in that report. The Congress acted upon that recommendation and today we have the Social Security Act in effect throughout the length and breadth of our country.

This act has amply proved its essential soundness.

More than two and one-half million needy old people, needy blind persons, and dependent children are now receiving systematic and humane assistance to the extent of a half billion dollars a year.

Three and a half million unemployed persons have received out-of-work benefits amounting to $400,000,000 during the last year.

A Federal old-age insurance system, the largest undertaking of its kind ever attempted, has been organized and under it there have been set up individual accounts covering 42,-500,000 persons who may be likened to the policyholders of a private insurance company.

In addition there are the splendid accomplishments in the field of public health, vocational rehabilitation, maternal and child welfare and related services, made possible by the Social Security 'Act.

We have a right to be proud of the progress we have made in the short time the Social Security Act has been in operation. However, we would be derelict in our responsibility if we did not take advantage of the experience we have accumulated to strengthen and extend its provisions.

I submit for your consideration a report of the Social Security Board, which, at my direction and in accordance with the congressional mandate contained in the Social Security Act itself, has been assembling data, and developing ways and means of improving the operation of the Social Security Act.

I particularly call attention to the desirability of affording greater old-age security. The report suggests a two-fold approach which I believe to be sound. One way is to begin the payment of monthly old-age insurance benefits sooner, and to liberalize the benefits to be paid in the early years. The other way is to make proportionately larger Federal grants-in-aid to those States with limited fiscal capacities, so that they may provide more adequate assistance to those in need. This result can and should be accomplished in such a way as to involve little, if any, additional cost to the Federal Government. Such a method embodies a principle that may well be applied to other Federal grants-in-aid.

I also call attention to the desirability of affording greater protection to dependent children. Here again the report suggests a two-fold approach which I believe to be sound. One way is to extend our Federal old-age insurance system so as to provide regular monthly benefits not only to the aged but also to the dependent children of workers dying before reaching retirement age. The other way is to liberalize the Federal grants-in-aid to the States to help finance assistance to dependent children.

As regards both the Federal old-age insurance system and the Federal-State unemployment compensation system. equity and sound social policy require that the benefits be extended to all of our people as rapidly as administrative experience and public understanding permit. Such an extension is particularly important in the case of the Federal old-age insurance system. Even without amendment the old-age insurance benefits payable in the early years are very liberal in comparison with the taxes paid. This is necessarily so in order that these benefits may accomplish their purpose of forestalling dependency. But this very fact creates the necessity of extending this protection to as large a proportion as possible of our employed population in order to avoid unfair discrimination.

Much of the success of the Social Security Act is due to the fact that all of the programs contained in this act-with one necessary exception-are administered by the States themselves, but coordinated and partially financed by the Federal Government. This method has given us flexible administration and has enabled us to put these programs into operation quickly. However, in some States incompetent and politically dominated personnel has been distinctly harmful. Therefore, I recommend that the States be required, as a condition for the receipt of Federal funds, to establish and maintain a merit system for the selection of personnel. Such a requirement would represent a protection to the States and citizens thereof rather than an encroachment by the Federal Government, since it would automatically promote efficiency and eliminate the necessity for minute Federal scrutiny of State operations.

I cannot too strongly urge the wisdom of building upon the principles contained in the present Social Security Act in affording greater protection to our people, rather than turning to untried and demonstrably unsound panaceas. As I stated in my message 4 years ago: "It is overwhelmingly important to avoid any danger of permanently discrediting the sound and necessary policy of Federal legislation for economic security by attempting to apply it on too ambitious a scale before actual experience has provided guidance for the permanently safe direction of such efforts. The place of such a fundamental in our future civilization is too precious to be jeopardized now by extravagant action."

We shall make the most orderly progress if we look upon social security as a development toward a goal rather than a finished product. We shall make the most lasting progress if we recognize that social security can furnish only a base upon which each one of our citizens may build his individual security through his own individual efforts.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1939.

[Note: Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT-ADDRESSES BY SENATORS WAGNER AND VANDENBERG

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the first of the messages submitted by the President today deals with proposed amendments to the Social Security Act. The able senior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] and I engaged in a joint public discussion last evening of several of the controversial points contemplated in the program for amendment of the Social Security Act. I think it would throw some additional light on these controversies if both of these addresses might be printed in the body of the RECORD in connection with the President's message, and I ask that they be so printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FUTURE OF SOCIAL SECURITY (By Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER)

(By Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER)

Ever since the dawn of civilization the quest for security has been a driving force in the life of man. The factory era brought countless blessings, but in its wake came problems of insecurity more serious than we had ever known. More and more the individual wage earner found himself the victim of economic forces beyond his control; more and more he sought protection against the major hazards of industrial life—accidents, unemployment, industrial and control to the control of the beyond his control; more and more he sought protection against the major hazards of industrial life—accidents, unemployment, sickness, and old-age destitution.

Social security took root in America over a quarter of a century ago, when my pioneer workmen's compensation law in New York laid the basis for all that has since developed. The World War put a temporary stop to further extensions of the social insurance principle, and for many years thereafter reactionary national leadership dashed all hope of progress.

In 1933, saddled with a legacy of economic and social neglect, we took up the task of reconstruction. My proposal for an effective system of public employment offices was finally adopted. The soup kitchen and the breadline gave way to self-respecting work for the needy unemployed. And in 1935, under the inspiring leadership of President Roosevelt, the Social Security Act, which I had sponsored, was written upon the statute books. Never before in a single statute has America made such enormous gains in social justice and human rights.

The law was never put forward as the final and complete answer to the challenge of insecurity; it was never claimed to be more than a substantial beginning. In the light of the riper wisdom of today, we ask ourselves this question: What can be done now to make social security more liberal, more extensive, and more complete?

To meet the urgent needs of those unable to help themselves, we have provided substantial grants for old-age pensions, maternal and child welfare, and the care of the crippled and the blind. These grants should now be liberalized, and the combined resources of State and Nation made more effective. We cannot allow privation to frustrate the development of our youth. We cannot shirk responsibility for the millions of our people now in the winter of their lives.

In building for the long future, we have established old-age insurance accounts for 42,000,000 citizens. Detailed suggestions for improvement are now available in a recent report by the advisory council, representing employers, employees, and the public.

we must extend the law to millions now outside its terms, thus hastening the day when all groups of the population will enjoy the protection of insurance as a matter of earned right. We must adjust old-age benefits to family needs, by providing for the dependent wives, widows, and children of insured workers. We must include within the old-age benefit system workers who become totally and permanently disabled before the age of retirement. We must begin benefit payments in 1940, and increase the average benefits for insured workers now in middle age.

These changes can and should be put into effect now. They would take us a long way toward our goal of adequate old-age security for every American family.

By increasing the flow of benefits in the early years of the program, we will greatly simplify our problem of handling the old-age insurance reserve. Eventually, the advisory council recommends, the reserve may be still further reduced and pay-roll taxes readjusted, by substantial Government contributions derived from general revenues.

from general revenues.

This recommendation, going to the long-range financing of the program, seems to me eminently sound from the standpoint of social policy and fiscal management. But whatever the outcome of further study and experience may be, none of our previous steps need to be retraced.

The financing of the old-age-insurance system raises problems which stagger the imagination. It cannot be guided by the loose fiscal policies of competing old-age panaceas. In the words of the advisory council: "No benefits should be promised or implied which cannot safely be financed, not only in the early years of the program, but when workers now young will be old."

The investment of old-age reserve funds has long been a controversial issue. The council's report settles that controversy. It finds that "the present provisions regarding the investment of the moneys in the old-age reserve account do not involve any misuse of these moneys or endanger the safety of these funds." That judgment is a complete answer to those who have sought to undermine the public confidence in the fundamental honesty of the Congress and the Treasury of the United States. Although the council now suggests that a special trust be established, the funds will continue to be invested in United States Government bonds—the safest investment in the whole world.

will continue to be invested in United States Government bonds—the safest investment in the whole world.
Adequate provision for the aged is of major importance, but it is only one of several vital social services. None of these services should be expanded at the expense of the others; none of them can be neglected without creating an added drain upon the rest.
Their development should be the product, not of the expediencies of the moment, but of their respective roles in our social system.
That is the way to ultimate economy of material and human resources. It presents a challenge to statecraft which cannot be ignored. ignored.

More than 25,000,000 wage earners are now protected by unemployment insurance. Our original choice of administration through the States still seems to me a wise one, but it is only fair to recognize the problems which remain unsolved. The launching of such a vast new system, difficult under all favorable circumstances, has been complicated by the economic stress of the past few years. Many of these administrative problems will be resolved by further experience, by improved personnel, and by simplifying amendments as to coverage and taxation. But I believe that basic improvement must come through basic revision of our concepts for determining and paying benefits.

Unemployment, equally with old age, is a matter of national concern. We cannot wash our hands of the responsibility for the proper functioning within the States of our first line of defense against unemployment. The time seems at hand for defining a few fundamental standards to which State laws shall conform. Given reasonable latitude for local conditions, such standards will contribute to smoother administration, to a better understanding by workers of their benefit rights, and to a socially sounder distribution of benefit payments.

I have spoken thus far of improvements in what has already been achieved. There are two fields in which we need to begin at the beginning. The first is a workmen's compensation law for our great interstate transportation systems, a reform which I have our great interstate transportation systems, a reform which I have been advocating for many years.

The second is a national health program. Historically, health protection came first in the development of social security abroad; for us, it remains a wholly unsolved problem in social legislation. At the National Health Conference recently held in Washington, a scommittee of experts presented a comprehensive and unchallenged statement of our national health needs, and a blueprint for congressional action. In the near future, I propose to introduce a bill to carry out their recommendations. The health needs of our can no longer be ignored.

In all that we do, we must maintain the nonpartisanship that governed the consideration of the social security law in Congress and controls its administration today. By requiring State personnel handling social-security funds to be selected under the merit system, we can remove the last possibility of partisan misuse.

The American people are united in their determination to complete the structure of social security. They are united in seeking their objective through the orderly methods of democracy. So long as that spirit of unity prevails, the future of social security is bright, and bright is the future of America.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT (By Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG)

(By Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg)

The Social Security Act is a great adventure in humanity. I am entitled to speak of it in a spirit of sympathetic interest because I voted for its passage, despite its manifest infirmities. But the fact that I did vote for it entitles me—aye, challenges me—to be wholly frank about these infirmities. The best friend of social security is he who seeks realistically to cure these infirmities. Otherwise, they are bad enough finally to be fatal to the whole enterprise.

Some critics of the Social Security Act like Abraham Epstein, the veteran executive of the American Association for Social Security, think the act has been a failure so far as social security is concerned and a border-line fraud so far as taxation is concerned. Epstein bluntly says: "Only a national demand for constructive revision bluntly says: "Only a national demand for constructive revision may alleviate the dangers and convert the act into a measure which will not only adequately meet the pressing needs of those for whom it was devised, but also promote the welfare of the Nation as a whole."

I prefer to content myself with saying that so tremendous an enterprise could not possibly be launched in completely sound and efficient form; that its inauguration has been an enormously difficult job, relatively well done under the circumstances; but that the infirmities are now so obvious and so menacing as to make the postponement of their correction rationally indefensible. It is no longer reasonable to plead the glory of the objective as an excuse to ignore the importance of frank admission that some dangerous ignore the importance of frank admission that some dangerous mistakes have been made in some basic sections of the law.

Social security should be ultimately expanded to great employee groups not now covered. There is an element of undemocratic discrimination in the existing limitations which virtually create specially privileged groups. But the existing system should be overhauled, shorn of palpable infirmities, and put on firm foundation before any new expansions are considered. Let us perfect what we have before we enlarge the jurisdiction of an unperfected system. No one could remotely hope to deal with the whole Social Security Act in 15 minutes. Its ramifying details would require nearer 15 hours. But the act finally stands or falls on its old-age benefits and its unemployment insurance. Therefore I confine this discussion to the former—old-age benefit payments under title II for which some 40,000,000 employees are now paying 1 percent of their wages, which their employers match with another 1 percent. Under the existing law, this tax increases to 1½ percent on each in 1940, or a total of 3 percent; to 4 percent in 1943; to 5 percent in 1946; and to 6 percent in 1949 and thereafter. It ultimately involves the accumulation of the famous—infamous will be a better adjective—full reserve of $47,000,000,000.

volves the accumulation of the lamous—infamous will be a better adjective—full reserve of $47,000,000.00.

I challenge this section of the law on the following grounds:

(1) A full reserve is unnecessary in a public, tax-supported pension system which ought to operate essentially on a pay-as-yougo basis with only a contingent reserve for emergencies. Therefore most of this $47,000,000,000 is needlessly mulcted from the pay envelopes of the country during the next 4 decades. It is a colossal envelopes of the country during the heat a decades.

(2) This full reserve is not necessary to the safety of the oldage pension system. It did not enter the law primarily for social-service purposes. It was and is a Treasury device to cushion general deficits. It results in the diversion of vast trust funds to pay for general Federal spending so long as we have an unbalanced Budget.

(3) Because the full reserve costs so much, social security itself does not have money enough left to pay adequate, or even reasonable, old-age pensions to workers now in middle age, and it restrones too long the beginning of even these relatively meager postpones too long the beginning of even these relatively meager payments. If the full reserve be abandoned larger benefits can start at an earlier date; and yet the pay-roll taxes on 4,000,000 workers and their employers can be frozen at existing levels and saved from the impending increase of 50 percent in 1940 and

If this challenge is substantially justified, then the primary congressional duty in respect to the Social Security Act is to promptly launder it as indicated. This is due the middle-age workers who otherwise will receive only a pittance at age 65; for example, the average benefit payment in 1942 will be only about $18 a month as compared with $46 a month in 1980. It is due the 40,000,000 workers upon whom the pay-roll tax falls in the nature of a gross-income tax; and this tax should not be one penny more than necessary to social security itself. It is due the employers of the country, many of whom, in smaller business, are already desperately harassed by their share of the existing 2-percent tax, and who may easily be forced to the wall by their share of the increased burden as the tax graduates upward to 6 percent. of the increased burden as the tax graduates upward to 6 percent. It is due to candor and conscience in the conduct of public finance. It is due the long-range success and stability of social security itself.

It is due the long-range success and stability of social security itself.

The present theory of the law is that as this full reserve is developed and invested in special 3-percent United States bonds, the interest on it will ultimately supplement current pay-roll tax revenues sufficiently to pay the contemplated benefits. All right, now let's project ourselves to 1980 when the full reserve climaxes at $47,000,000,000 (an utterly astronomical figure). Let's call it fifty billions for easy figuring (for what difference does three billions one way or the other make in this present dispensation). That year, the general taxpayer has to dig up $1,500,000,000 to pay the 3-percent interest on the fifty billion full reserve. Social security thereupon gets $1,500,000,000 to disburse, along with payroll taxes, in old-age benefits. In other words, the general taxpayer actually has contributed $1,500,000,000 to old-age benefit payments that particular year. He has contributed it in the form of interest on bonds in the full reserve. It would cost the general taxpayer no more, and the social-security fund would be equally well off, if this $1,500,000,000 were a direct contribution to social security. But in that event—and here is the vital point of it—it would never have been necessary to collect the fifty billions of taxes of a substantial particular of it worth. reserve at all reserve at all.

Is fifty billions of taxes, or a substantial portion of it, worth saving during the next four decades? Yes. Is the Government justified, in the name of social security, in needlessly taking fifty billions, or a substantial portion of it, out of the pocket of the employers and employees of the Nation? No. Should the fundamental structure of the Social Security Act be accordingly immediately changed? Yes.

Now let's we what would be the immediate effects of eliminating.

Now let's see what would be the immediate effects of eliminating the full reserve and substituting a real contingent reserve of, say, five instead of fifty billions.

In the first place, much more of current pay-roll-tax revenues would be available to pay old-age benefits. Note that tax collections through to last new year's were $966,000,000, while benefit payments were only $11,000,000. Out of every dollar collected only a little more than 1 cent went to old-age benefits. The rest went into this full reserve. Of course, the percentage paid in benefits will sharply increase after 1942, when the benefit payments are in full swing. But this demonstrates, even though in exaggerated form, the awful appetite of this full reserve. Obviously, if we were aiming only at a contingent emergency reserve, we could legitimately and prudently use more of the $966,000,000 for earlier and more adequate benefit payments for the present generation. That is what equity demands if social security for the present generation is to be more than an oratorical aspiration; and that is what must be done constructively and within reason if we are not to be swept into some wholly fantastic formula which will be destructive and without reason.

But there is even more to the story. If we abandon the full destructive and without reason.

But there is even more to the story. If we abandon the full reserve monster, we can keep pay-roll taxes where they are for a considerable time to come. We can avoid the 50-percent increase next year and the 200-percent increase next decade. Indeed, the Social Security Board's own chief actuary declared in October 1935:

"Were the reserve plan abandoned, without immediate increase in the present scale of benefits, initial contribution rates of one-half percent from employer and employee (instead of 1 percent) advancing slowly to a maximum of 2½ percent (instead of 3 percent) after 20 years (instead of 10) would meet apparent benefit requirements for a long time."

There can be no doubt the soundness of these conclusions.

requirements for a long time."

There can be no doubt the soundness of these conclusions. Seventy of the leading life-insurance executives of the country have declared that the full reserve is unnecessary—and they ought to know. The splendid advisory council, which evolved from a Senate resolution which I introduced 2 years ago, and which has just filed a brilliant report, declares that "with the introduction of a definite program of governmental contributions, * * the size of the old-age insurance fund will be kept within much lower limits"; and several members of the council specifically agree that pay-roll taxes should stop where they are until we know more definitely what the system ultimately will require.

The truth of the matter is that this full reserve got into the law for an ulterior reason. The actuarial advisers of the President's Committee on Economic Security were a unit against it. But the President insisted and the House Ways and Means Committee yielded when Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau frankly told it on February 5, 1935, that the device was advisable not for social security but to "retire a large part of the public debt." In other words, it was, and is, frankly, a device to help a hard-pressed Treasury. The money collected in pension taxes goes into I O U's so far as the books are concerned, but it goes into paying the general bills of a spendthrift government so far as the cash itself is concerned. This is a perfectly legal subterfuge, but it is a travesty upon intellectual honesty in dealing with what the advisory council says should be "specifically made a trust fund." Furthermore, a continuation of the existing law with its full reserve automatically requires a permanent national bonded debt of $47,000,000,000,000 at cally requires a permanent national bonded debt of $47,000,000,000 at a minimum, and thus it is a convenient recourse for the boot-strap lifters who think that a perpetual spending spree is the way to solvency and sound prosperity.

To sum up this specific fundamental, the Social Security Actshould be sharply amended to put old-age pensions on a pay-asyou-go basis; to eliminate the full reserve which is a leech particularly upon the present generation and a menace to sound public finance; to stop the increase in pay-roll taxes scheduled to start in 1940; and yet to permit, within reason, an equitable readjustment of old-age benefits so that the beneficiaries in this generation shall not be penalized in favor of future generations.

We must keep old-age pensions within the fiscal ability of the Government to support them. It does no good to create new social benefits if we destroy a solvent society in which to enjoy them. There can be no golden eggs from a dead goose. On the other hand, benefits if we destroy a solvent society in which to enjoy them. There can be no golden eggs from a dead goose. On the other hand, it is equally indefensible to impound pension revenues, gained from needlessly high pay-roll taxes, for the purpose of creating a needless reserve which, in its very nature, robs today's generation of a fair and decent pension schedule—and that is precisely the state of things under the Social Security Act as it exists today.

In this limited period I have been able to discuss but one typical phase of the Social Security Act. I submit that it demonstrates, upon the basis of incontrovertible authority, that what the great ideal of social security requires is less enthusiasm over a notable objective and more serious and practical consideration to constructive details. It is not enough to dream. The important thing is to make these dreams dependably come true. They are not coming true—so far as today's generation is concerned—under title II of the existing Social Security Act. But they can come true, in more realistic degree, if the act is changed as I have indicated, and this method of dealing realistically with title II is the process which must be pursued in connection with the whole act. It was not born perfect: and the quicker we frankly recognize this fact, the better off social security in the United States will be.

FEDERAL REAL ESTATE BOARD-STATE AND LOCAL TAXATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

At a meeting of the National Emergency held December 17. 1935, I designated the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney General, and the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget to serve as a committee to make a study of Federal ownership of real estate and of its bearing on State and local taxation. This study has been completed, and I am transmitting herewith for your information and such further use as you may deem desirable the report of the committee and the accompanying tables and charts.

It will be noted that the report concludes with the following recommendations:

(1) That all branches of the Federal service be directed to declare completely, accurately, and promptly their surplus land and improvements, in order that a prudent use for such properties may be found or that they may be offered for sale.

(2) That the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department continue to maintain a current permanent record of all Federal real estate in order that there may be constantly on file available and dependable information with respect thereto.

property, a representative from the Procurement Division, and a representative from the Bureau of the Budget. The duty of this Board should be to study and make recommendations regarding the situation existing in individual communities adversely affected by the purchase of substantial amounts of land and their consequent removal from the regular tax rolls of the county or other taxing district; to advise with Federal agencies contemplating the acquisition of additional real estate; and to submit recommendations regarding the disposition of lands that are essentially in the nature of surplus property.

I have approved of the recommendations of the committee; and in order to put them into effect, I have issued an appropriate Executive order establishing the Federal Real Estate Board and providing for the maintenance by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, of a current record of all Federal real estate. I am enclosing herewith a copy of this Executive order.

NINETEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this day marks the nineteenth anniversary of the advent of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

By that amendment the American people for 13 years made an outlaw of beverage alcohol.

That amendment was repealed 5 years ago.

As we observe the gathering concern over conditions now surrounding the consumption of alcoholic liquors it becomes apparent that the so-called control laws following repeal have failed either to control the traffic or to promote temperance.

Recently the American Association for the Advancement of Science announced the appointment of a research council composed of distinguished scientists to deal with the problems of alcohol, declaring that the alcohol problem has become one of the major perplexities of our civilization.

Whatever may be our individual views on liquor, we cannot avoid the admission that when so eminent a scientific body as this considers it necessary to conduct special research in the problems of alcohol, the liquor question is still far from an adequate solution.

It is not alone the scientific research worker who is disturbed by present conditions.

It was said by the present Federal Alcohol Administrator in an address before the National Alcoholic Beverage Control Association at Portland, Oreg., in August 1938 that during a recent visit to his native State he was told everywhere he went that the on-premises retail establishments were being operated so much in defiance of public opinion that they were fast creating conditions that promised severe rebuke at the hands of the people, that these complaints and protests were not aimed at the State officials whose duty it was to enforce the law and regulate the retail sale of beer, but at the operators of these places-that what struck him so forcibly was that it was not the traditional "drys" who were complaining, but the "liberals" who had "no taint of fanaticism" and no affiliation with the prohibition element—that for some time those in Washington constituting the Federal Alcohol Administration had been receiving numerous complaints from other States about similar conditions, and that a prominent judge in a western State advised them that the beer parlors in his State were breeding places for all the vices and minor crimes that had aroused the resentment of the Nation some score of years ago.

In his annual reports to Congress for each of the last 3 years the Federal Alcohol Administrator has made recommendations growing out of his experience for the better administration of the Federal laws relating to intoxicating liquor. These recommendations have included such legislation to protect the States against unlawful importation as is called for by the twenty-first amendment to the United States Constitution. These recommendations have also included a proposal to subject brewers committing offenses in interstate commerce to the same penalties as are now provided against distillers, as well as the enactment of measures against the use of certain interstate facilities, such as the radio and the press for the transmission of liquor advertising across State lines. In his report to the Seventy-fifth Congress on January 5, 1938, the Administrator said that it was his opinion that the social aspects of the beer and ale industry demand as much regulation as do distilled spirits or wines.

Although these recommendations have been made annually for 3 years, no action by Congress has as yet been taken.

In one of our largest cities the municipal authorities were faced with an increase of 354 percent in arrests for drunkenness since repeal, while the total of arrests for all causes increased only 41 percent, and with a demand for a thousand additional police to enforce the law. The council directed the bureau of the budget and efficiency of that city to prepare a report pertaining to police activities and costs in connection with the handling of drunken persons and to municipal revenue from liquor taxes with a view to securing a larger share of the liquor revenue to meet the mounting expense. The bureau reported that the work incident to alcoholic liquor presented a tremendous problem to the police department, that the immense burden occasioned by the liquor traffic for the past few years with no appreciable increase in revenues available for additional police officers had resulted in a substantial weakening of other types of police protection, and that the work of the police in connection with drunkenness since intoxicating liquor had been legalized and police costs incident thereto were more than twice what they were before

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Smith in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder if the Senator from Texas would be willing to give us the name of the municipality to which he has just referred.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; it is Los Angeles.

Churches continue to denounce the liquor situation. Many of them during 1938 made pronouncements of most vigorous character.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States at Philadelphia in May 1938 declared its belief that the country had taken a long backward step in repealing the eighteenth amendment and pledged that church to unite with other Christian bodies in working and praying for a return of national prohibition.

The Universalist Church General Convention at Chicago in October 1938 adopted a resolution deploring the almost unrestricted advertising and sale of intoxicating liquors, the marked increase of drinking, especially among youth and women, the virtual partnership of the Government with the liquor traffic through the revenues it derives from it, and called upon the churches to renew a campaign of education with reference to the evils which the whole hideous business involves.

The Southern Baptist Convention at Richmond, Va., in May 1938 expressed its hope and belief that an aroused public sentiment, outraged by the increasing crimes and highway fatalities brought about by the liquor traffic, and the increasing disregard of law and decency by the traffic, would soon again, and permanently, place upon the liquor traffic the brand of the outlaw which it so richly deserves.

The Northern Baptist Convention at Milwaukee, Wis., in May 1938 declared that since the repeal of the eighteenth amendment there had been a vast increase in drinking, with all its attendant evils—personal, social, and economic—and urged all the pastors and the people of that church to seek by personal example, temperance education, and legislation, to abolish the liquor traffic from the Nation.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church General Assembly at Russellville, Ark., in June 1938 announced a firm stand against anything that tended to lower the morals of men and women, boys and girls.

The General Synod of the Reformed Church in America in June 1938 declared that with the repeal of prohibition conditions had not improved, that bootlegging and rumrunning continued, and, what was worse, women were drinking at the public bars, a thing unheard of in years gone by; that despite promises to the contrary, American youth indulge in liquor and women are employed as barmaids; that consumption in the United States of all kinds of alcoholic beverages is rapidly increasing; that through the radio, newspapers, and public advertising the people were being told of the so-called benefits and joys that come from the drinking of beer, wine, and liquor, and urged more stringent regulation of the liquor traffic, as well as education on the subject of the drink evil.

The General Conference of the Methodist Church South at Birmingham, Ala., in May 1938 declared that the repeal advocates had promised that the saloon would never return, and that drinking and drunkenness would decline if John Barleycorn should be stripped of his stripes and be allowed to dress in the honest garb of respectable citizenship. This conference declared further that it was all too evident that the advocates of legalized liquor never intended to keep a single promise of sobriety or protection or decency, but wanted only the chance to vend their wares and to satisfy the thirst of those who already were trained in the drink habit, and to allure to their trade a vast army of young men and women, boys and girls who would pour into their coffers the millions they craved.

The bishops of the Methodist Church South, in session at Birmingham, Ala., in May 1938, declared that the results of repeal were apparent on every hand, that alcoholic liquor was being released in an unrestrained flood, and that nearly every barrier that society had built by the struggle of a hundred years against the conscienceless liquor traffic had gone down in disastrous overthrow.

The United Presbyterian Church General Assembly at Cleveland, Ohio, in May 1938 declared that repeal had failed, that it had proved itself an economic, a social, a moral, and spiritual curse and scourge of the American people, particularly of youth.

The foregoing declarations are cited as but a few of recent expressions from leading religious sources.

At a national meeting of liquor dealers on the subject of liquor advertising at Washington, D. C., in October 1933, Mr. Gene Tunney, chairman of the American Distilling Co., and formerly connected with the Distilled Spirits Institute, asserted that the industry's trade association was without social consciousness or soul, that the distilling industry had made a mess of the advertising situation, that stern regulation was needed for the industry in advertising as well as in other fields. He deprecated the color spreads in the national magazines because they went into millions of homes and were difficult to explain to children.

Under national prohibition the beverage liquor traffic was an outlaw. Wherever it existed it did so furtively or because some official had not discharged his constitutional duty. Those who drank did so either by searching out the purveyor of the illicit commodity or by establishing a contact with someone who was engaged in an illicit enterprise.

Today the brand of the outlaw has been removed from the beverage liquor traffic. It exists everywhere either as a trade licensed by the Government or in some jurisdictions operated directly as a function of the State. Instead of the customer seeking the drink, the drink trade now seeks the customer. Every facility known to modern publicity methods has been seized upon by the trade to stimulate the sale and consumption of that which always has been productive of social abuses of the most serious nature.

Those abuses are now legion. We find intoxicating liquors confronting men, women, and children with the drink temptation in almost every place where the business of life is conducted. Women and children were denied admission to the old-time saloon. At present three times as many women and girls are working in liquor-selling places as there are women students in the public universities, colleges, and teacher normals of the country. Women customers of such places are becoming so constant and so numerous that to the old problem of the drinking father has been added the new problem of the drinking mother.

To the natural lure of beverage alcohol for the convivial the modern liquor vendor adds new enticements. After sundown neon signs in vivid colors publicizing beer and liquors make the streets and highways hideous.

There are now three times as many retail liquor establishments in the United States as there were before national prohibition. They are to be found in department stores, drug stores, hardware stores, food stores, shoe stores, and restaurants. They are scattered everywhere—in residential sections, in rural areas, and in regions inadequately policed.

Inventive genius has supplied the supersalesman for liquor with new mediums for solicitation. He now invades our homes and firesides. Anglo-Saxons were taught that a man's home is his castle, the threshold of which could not be crossed except the keeper extended a welcome. Today the voice of the radio announcer calls unexpectedly into the family circle with the unsought advice to drink somebody's beer, somebody's wine, or somebody's whisky. By advertising in streetcars, on billboards, in newspapers, periodicals, and by other means the trade attempts to cultivate the drink habit. It pictures everything except the finished product—the drunkard.

Under national prohibition one could travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Canadian to the Mexican border without seeing a billboard advertising somebody's liquor establishment or a particular brand of alcoholic drink. During the 13 years of national prohibition not one of the millions of copies of magazines and newspapers which came into the American home contained a liquor advertisement. Not once during that 13 years was the voice of the radio announcer heard in the privacy of an American fireside proclaiming the alleged merit of some liquor dispensary. If national prohibition had made no greater contribution to the cause of temperance than to banish the advertising of liquors, by that fact alone it made a monumental contribution to the cause of national sobriety.

Mr. President, we are in an era of transition. Our Nation is being tested in one of those tragic moments which from time to time have tried the souls of men. We are in an age in which the inventive genius of man has made of life a drama of such swift motion, in so dangerous a mechanical environment, that physical tragedy perpetually threatens us—an age in which, with the speed of lightning, the institutions of civilization may be imperiled and the destinies of men and nations determined. If ever there existed need for sobriety, for calm and sane deliberation, for self-possession for the full exercise of human faculties, for the employment of skill and judgment, for keen perceptiveness, for balance and mental poise, that need exists at this time.

We have extended the frontiers of all our sciences, including the social sciences. Vast concentrations of machine power are making necessary human activities that impose a growing strain on brain and heart and nerve.

We refuse to observe the limits of space; we are impatient of time; ours is a furious pace, physical as well as mental. We are living in an era that requires and demands the quickest readjustment and readaptation. We cannot maintain the speed demanded by this machine epoch with increasing millions of our people victims of the liquor habit.

Prohibition will return because alcohol as a beverage cannot justify itself. Alcohol is destructive of economic as well as moral values when used as a beverage. It dissolves away too much of economic as well as human tissue. In the end the Nation will be unwilling to condone so great a waste.

Alcohol as an ingredient in manufacture has a vital place in the industrial life of the Nation; its value in this regard is increasing constantly. We are dependent upon it now for great advances in our industrial progress, and we will become constantly more dependent upon it as we develop the chemical industries that are founded in part upon its use. However, as a beverage its use represents a rare paradox.

As a nation we are developing the most efficient public health service in history. Our national medical concern begins not merely with the child at birth, but with the prenatal child.

The provisions in our Social Security Act for maternal aid are designed not merely to assure the lives of our mothers so far as is possible through proper maternal care during childbirth, but to assure the birth of children unafflicted by blindness, or by deformities, so far as the latter can be prevented or corrected.

We are conquering infantile paralysis, that dreaded enemy of child as well as adult. We have penetrated the secret of certain forms of insanity. We have moved definitely toward a conquest of social disease. Patient scientists have devoted their lives to the perfection of methods and chemicals for the eradication of this social blight. Childbed fever, that devastator of motherhood, is conquered. We not only know the secret of malaria but we have the cure for it. Smallpox long has been controlled; newer methods have conquered it.

We have conquered rabies. Pellagra yielded to the simplest remedy in the world, once we knew its cause. We have pursued yellow fever to the jungles of Africa, and heroic physicians are destroying it there. Diphtheria has been captured and conquered. Tuberculosis is easily on the way out. Pneumonia cannot resist much longer, and cancer cannot always evade us. Yet men seriously handicap these efforts for their physical redemption and salvation by drinking alcohol, which undermines resistance to all forms of disease, and makes their bodies carriers of infection even for the mother and for the child while yet unborn.

Medical science is engaged in the task of prolonging our lives, of reducing infant mortality, mitigating the ills of childhood, youth, and middle age, and prolonging those years now about to be made economically secure by beneficent old-age legislation. But apparently millions are unwilling to grow old without the afflictions of alcohol. If ever there was a paradox, the liquor drinker presents it.

It never will be possible to drink alcohol with physical safety. Alcohol is not by nature intended for beverage use. Its chemical properties and attributes are destructive of living tissues; and you cannot change human tissue to give it immunity from such destruction.

Mankind strangely has tolerated many evils. Lack of knowledge, lack of courage, and the inability to overcome inertia have contributed to that tolerance. But the age in which we live is no longer willing to tolerate removable sources of suffering, waste, disease, and inefficiency.

One of such sources is beverage alcohol.

In the interest of a higher and more efficient civilization beverage alcohol, like Carthage, must be destroyed. PROHIBITION, IMMIGRATION, AND OTHER ISSUES

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have provided eager ears for every single word which has fallen this morning from the lips of my distinguished and beloved colleague, the senior Senator from the great Lone Star State of Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I have listened with unusual interest, because I recall that in 1932 I was nominated as the representative of the Democrats of North Carolina to be their candidate for the United States Senate. I recall very vividly that during that campaign I made a personal appearance and delivered an address in every single one of the 100 counties in North Carolina. I recall that I traveled from the towering peaks that constitute a part and portion of the Great Smoky Mountain National Park of western North Carolina for 700 miles eastward to the limpid blue waters of the Atlantic, which waters are not far distant from the most historic spot in all the North American continent; that is to say, Roanoke Island, where, 350 years ago, the first white child of Englishspeaking parentage opened her eyes to the blue skies of the Western Hemisphere. During that campaign I preached the gospel of temperance. During that campaign I endeavored to impress my audiences with the fact that the greatest enemy that God has in all the world is liquor. Liquor is God's worst enemy. Liquor is the devil's best friend. No Member of this great deliberative body of American representatives will dare to take the floor and deny the statement I have just made, because every man and every woman, and particularly every father and every mother, agrees with the Senator from Texas and with me, that liquor is the devil's best friend; liquor is the devil's constant companion, and liquor is God's worst enemy.

In that campaign I not only preached temperance day in and day out but I said if ever the open saloon should return to my State of North Carolina that I would be the first to ask the Congress to reconsider the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. I make that statement here and now without the slightest hesitation, and I trust sincerely that the people of North Carolina—3,500,000 of them—will recall every statement and every pledge that I have made in reference to liquor, for, if I may be pardoned a personal reference, I have my first time to violate a pledge made by me to the people of North Carolina.

I was struck with the force of the suggestion by the Senator from Texas today that, through the instrumentality of legislation which he has proposed, the act which repealed the eighteenth amendment be itself repealed. I shall be perfectly frank and most honest with the Senator from Texas, the champion of temperance and prohibition, in saying to him that I am giving to his proposed legislation a great deal of thought, for I have been keeping my ears to the ground, and I have been keeping my eyes open, with a view to ascertaining whether or not we have more temperance now than we had prior to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

I make that statement here today on the floor of the Senate because, like the Senator from Texas, and like every other Member of this body, I stand in honest recognition of the fact that there is nothing so thoroughly detrimental to the physical being as is liquor itself, recognizing, as I do, that liquor eats into the tissues of the stomach and destroys the cells of the brain. Now, above all other times in the history of our Nation, we must insist upon physical development and active minds and strong bodies, for the American people, within the next 5 or 10 years, will be called upon to meet problems never before encountered in the highway of time. We are interested now in the preservation of the bodies of our youths because we are interested in the development of a great national defense program for adequate protection.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will be delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague the very able representative from the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in this body to which he has but recently been reelected.

Mr. DAVIS. I thank the Senator. Did I understand the Senator correctly a moment ago to say that there was more temperance prior to prohibition than there is now?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I did not make that statement. I said that I was endeavoring to ascertain whether or not we have more temperance now than we had before the repeal of the eighteenth amendment or whether we had more then than we have now. That is a big question in my mind; it should be a question in the mind of every Member of the Congress of both Houses, because, after all, there is nothing more important than saving, protecting, and throwing safeguards around the American youth, for when you, Mr. President, and I shall have passed to the Great Beyond the youngsters of this hour will be called upon to fill the shoes made vacant by our passing. So we as representatives of the American people in these legislative halls are interested in protecting the youth of America; and, as I have said, more so now particularly than ever before, because we will be called upon within 5 or 10 years to meet the greatest problems that we have ever been confronted with in the history-economic, social, or political-of America.

Mr. President, I recall that there was an expression in the Democratic national platform of 1932 in reference to the question which has been so ably presented here today by my distinguished colleague from Texas. In this little booklet [exhibiting], upon the cover of which appear the words "Platforms of the two great political parties, 1932 and 1936," on page 338, the Democratic platform speaking, is found this statement:

We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

I was one who joined in advocating that repeal then. If I am wrong, I want to know it; if I am wrong, I want to be told about it; if I am wrong, I want the Senator from Texas and others to prove to me that I am wrong; and if I am convinced that I am wrong, I thank God that I have the courage unhesitatingly to admit to the world that I am wrong. What did we say?—

We advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. To effect such repeal we demand that the Congress immediately propose a constitutional amendment to truly representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal. We urge the enactment of such measures by the several States as will actually promote temperance—

And I emphasize the word "temperance," because that is what you, Mr. President, and I, and all the others of us are interested in now—effectively prevent the return of the saloon, and bring the liquor traffic into the open under complete supervision and control by the

In connection with that printed phrase I wish to say that I am happy to be able to report that, insofar as I have been able to observe, there are no open saloons in North Carolina; but I happen to have observed in the past few years, during my frequent tours over the United States, which have carried me into every State of the Union, that there are now many States where one can find without difficulty the open saloon. I am not going to mention those States, because it would be unnecessary, for the reason that those who reside in those respective States, and whose eyesight has not failed, can, without any difficulty whatsoever, find the open saloons to which I have referred.

I recalled a moment ago when I was listening most profoundly to the eloquent address of the Senator from Texas that he mentioned the fact that our saloonkeepers had been supplanted by barmaids. That is true.

Whereas in Europe they have been dispensing with barmaids and substituting bartenders for barmaids, the situation has been reversed in the United States, for here we are supplanting bartenders with barmaids. Nobody is going to deny that statement. If anyone should undertake to deny it, I will take him by the arm and conduct him downtown here in the District of Columbia and show him hundreds of barmaids. I know where they are [laughter]; certainly I know where they are, and I venture to say that of the 619,000 constituting the population of the District of Columbia, according to the latest estimate, 500,000 know where they are. [Laughter.]

I hope it will not be inferred that I drink. [Laughter.] I have indulged in drink in the past; I am not bragging about it, but I do not drink now. I have learned better. I know that a drink will probably give one a little excess energy for the minute, but that it is very destructive of the physical cells; that it may provide some activity for the mind for the moment, but that in the end it stupefies and dulls the mind. I am speaking frankly and candidly. I am not standing here today in an attempt by words to place myself upon a pedestal of ivory, or to clothe myself in raiment of white. I am merely standing here speaking in terms of questions, asking myself and my fellow citizens and colleagues what is best for the boys and girls, the sons and daughters, the children of America's fathers and mothers. Thank God, I am not a hypocrite. I would not hesitate to answer any question as to whether or not I have ever indulged in drink. I have, and everybody knows I have, and knows that I would be delighted if the state of affairs were otherwise. I have reached the point in life where I want to do what is best for the people I represent, and I have no other ambition during my service in the Senate than the ambition to serve my people of North Carolina and the 135,000,000 people of America.

I say to you, Mr. President, and I say particularly to my colleague from the State of Texas, to whom I have listened with so much interest, that I have but recently returned from Europe, the British Isles, continental and eastern Europe, and all through the Balkans. While over there I made observations relative to this subject in Ireland, in England, in France, in Spain, in Italy, in Albania, in Greece, in Bulgaria, in Yugoslavia, in Rumania, in Hungary, in old Austria, in Czechoslovakia, in Germany, and what did I find? I found the facts to be just as they have been related by the Senator from Texas. What are the facts?

They sustain the statement I make that in Europe the bartender is being substituted for the barmaid, whereas in the United States of America, where we pledged ourselves against the return of the saloon, the barmaid is being substituted for the bartender. I say as a warning to the liquor interests of this country that if they do not watch their step they are going to have upon their hands here within the continental United States the hardest fight they ever had. Give them an inch and they will take a mile. Over the radio and in every magazine and in every newspaper that will accept their advertisements they are advertising their liquor-God's worst enemy and the devil's best friend-to the children of America. But that is the way they are. You, Mr. President, remember their actions before the prohibition wave came on. They were drunk with power. Right now the liquor interests of this country, the great distillers, are becoming drunk with power. We Democrats have pledged temperance to the American people; and it is up to us to warn the liquor men and let them know that the eyes of the American fathers and the American mothers are focused on them. The liquor interests are drunk with power; and I now suggest to the able Senator from the State of Texas, in view of the intemperance we observe everywhere, that a resolution be introduced in this body-perhaps a joint resolution, to be introduced in the other body alsoto investigate this subject. It is one worthy of investigation, and, as I have stated, should be investigated now above all

Mr. President, in conclusion, in reference to the particular subject upon which I have just addressed the Chair, I desire to express publicly to the Senator from Texas my thanks for the very enlightening and inspiring address which he has been so good as to deliver here today.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to bring to the attention of this body a subject which I believe should command the attention of every Member of the body. The American people are going to demand of you, and of you, and of every Member of this body, complete focusing of the mind upon that subject. It relates to the boys and girls, the young men and young women of America, whose parents have denied themselves almost the necessities of life in order that they might provide their sons and daughters with professional educations. The subject, which I approach with enthusiasm, is one relating to the more than 10,000,000 unemployed persons in the United States today. Initially, I am desirous of bringing to the attention of those who do me the honor to listen a clipping which I have received from one who enthusiastically supports my various and sundry bills to restrict immigration and to deport the alien criminals in America.

I say to everyone who does me the honor to listen, and to all the American representatives who sit or stand within the hearing of my voice, that the restriction of immigration and the deportation of alien criminals is a subject in which the American people are more thoroughly interested at this hour than any other subject that I could possibly bring to your attention, because it unquestionably has a relation to the mammoth subject of adequate national defense; because, in addition thereto, it is a matter close to the hearts of the mothers and fathers, the parents of this country, who have denied themselves of the necessities of life in order to educate their daughters or sons for professions.

Let us see. Always, Mr. President, I stand back of any statement I ever make. I never make a statement I cannot back up. I never make a statement that I cannot prove to a reasonable man.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator has just stated, as I understood him, that there are now more than 10,000,000 unemployed persons in America. I do not question the statement; but on just what authority does the Senator make the statement?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I make the statement upon information I have derived, as a matter of fact, principally through the columns of the press. I believe it is stated that we have in this country today on W. P. A. about 3,000,000 persons. I have made inquiry in virtually every State in the Union over a period of 2 years, during which time I visited virtually every State, as to the unemployment situation. I believe it is generally conceded by those who-if the Senator will pardon a vulgarism—are "in the know," that in the country today at least 10,000,000 persons are out of employment. I am very happy that the Senator from Minnesota directed that inquiry to me, because I myself should like to have some definite information as to the matter; and with a view to providing my honorable colleague with the information he desires I shall today call upon those who should be in possession of the figures to provide me with that information. I shall hope to have it on my desk in the morning, at which time it will be a pleasure for me to convey it to my colleague.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator will permit me, I think there is good authority for stating that there are 12,000,000 or more unemployed in this country. Based on figures of the recent unemployment census and other sources, there are some estimates which go as high as 15,000,000, but I do not know how reliable they may be. However, the figure 12,000,000 is used by conservative authority, and this at the end of 6 years. I think it is well that Senators direct their attention to real remedies and to getting down to real fundamentals, instead of skimming along on the surface of things.

If the Senator will permit me further—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to receive the Senator's valuable contribution.

Mr. LUNDEEN. There are in this country approximately 70 percent of the earth's recorded unemployed, according to the figures of the International Labor Office in Geneva, Switzerland, which statement does not include, of course, such countries as India and China.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator mean there is that percentage of unemployed in the United States?

Mr. LUNDEEN. No; of the world's unemployed, as recorded by the International Labor Office in Geneva, Switzerland. That presents a very serious picture. If there ever was a time when we should get down to fundamentals, it is today, and I hope we will remember that when we come to vote on the appropriation for the W. P. A. a few days from now; I hope we will remember that when these men come to the Senate of the United States and ask for an opportunity to work, because the opportunity to work is the greatest opportunity a citizen can have, for thereby he contributes to the public welfare.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to thank the Senator for his very able contribution. A moment ago I stated that, in my opinion, there were 10,000,000 people out of employment in the United States. I employed the words "10,000,000 people," because I always endeavor to find myself ultra conservative, particularly when extending my remarks before this splendid body of men. But I shall be perfectly frank and honest with the Senator, and state that, in my humble opinion, there are in this country 12,000,000 people whole-time unemployed, and I am told that, in addition, there are many additional millions who are employed only part time.

Referring to the statement the Senator made a moment ago in reference to figures that were released by the international labor statistical organization in Geneva, Switzerland, did the Senator say that they issued statistics to the effect that 70 percent of the unemployed of the entire world were out of employment in the United States, or was it 70 percent of the people of the United States?

Mr. LUNDEEN. The statement I made was that where statistics of unemployment are available, where they are recorded, they show approximately 70 percent of the unemployed of the earth are to be found here in the United States. These figures were given in a speech which I delivered at the last session of Congress. I gave them in detail at that time, quoted the figures, and brought attention to the huge number of unemployed.

In asking my questions I have somewhat in mind the relief appropriation which will be asked in a few days. We should have these astounding figures in mind when there is brought before us the appropriation bill designed to provide the unemployed people in this country some really useful work to do whereby they can contribute to the upbuilding of the Republic.

I agree with the Senator in his conclusion that there are 12,000,000 or more unemployed in this country, according to the best authority we can find. I think the Senator is correct in that statement.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, that is a distressful situation. It is difficult for me to believe, if the Senator will pardon me, that there are 70 percent of the people of the earth's surface out of employment.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Oh, that was not the statement.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Or was it that 70 percent of the unemployed of the earth are in the United States?

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is the statement.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I had a misunderstanding about it. I was thinking it would be terrible if we found the other to be the fact, because my recollection is, just offnand—and it is difficult to keep the figures in mind precisely—that the population of the world is 2,139,000,000. I imagine that in the United States there are about 139,000,000 people. So that leaves 2,000,000,000 outside of the United States.

I am worried about the 139,000,000 in the United States. My thoughts are going to be concentrated upon the citizens of the United States. My interests and sympathies and heartbeats are for the unemployed in the United States. I am interested in putting the 10,000,000 unemployed in the United States into remunerative employment. After we have done that, then I am going to permit my heart to beat for and my sympathies to be focused upon peoples of other countries of the world; but until we provide employment for the 10,000,000 in the United States, I am going to keep my nose out of other countries-except that I may do a little traveling to see what is going on.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly; I am delighted to yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I agree with the position the Senator has just taken. I presume he is not in favor, then, of going out to save the world.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, by heavens, no. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator will agree, then, that we have done enough saving of the world?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I want first to see the United States saved. I want us to see to it that the United States does not get into another war, because our brief participation in the World War from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, has cost the taxpayers of the United States to date more than $69,000,000,000, and I believe as that great President, Calvin Coolidge, once predicted, that before the American taxpayer liquidates the indebtedness incurred as a result of our participation in the World War, we will have paid out more than $100,000,000,000.

I say that we of the United States, constituting only 139,-000,000 people of the population of the world of more than 2,139,000,000, should not be called upon to shoulder the responsibility of once again saving democracy, the democracy of France and Great Britain, neither of which will admit that we saved their hides, neither of which will admit that they owe us any money, because they have virtually repudiated their debts.

And now, from Great Britain, its handsome, broadshouldered, fine-voiced Anthony Eden is sent to the United States to curry favor with full-blooded Americans, to blaze the way and to carpet the path that will be traversed by the King and Queen of England when they come to America to curry favor with the United States, all of them on bended knees, if not literally so, figuratively so, for the purpose of asking the United States, the people of America, again to save them.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another interruption?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly. Mr. LUNDEEN. I am glad the Senator has made this statement about our obligation to look after our own unemployed first, and our own America first, before there is any world-saving business engaged in. Would the Senator wish to extend that also to the question of the refugees? It is now proposed that refugees shall be poured in upon this country while there are 12,000,000 unemployed here?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad the able Senator from Minnesota directed that inquiry to me. I wish to say to the Senator, and I wish to say to the other able representatives of the respective States of the Union in the Senate-and I make the statement unhesitatingly, as I do not wish my position misunderstood—I do not condone the conduct of any country in the world which is shown to be persecuting minorities within its borders. If there are minorities in Germany being persecuted by Hitler and the German Government, I do not condone that action; I look upon it with horror and with regret, and with sympathy for the minorities of Germany.

If those of a certain religion in what was once upon a time lovely Spain, and even now is historic Spain, are being persecuted and murdered, and if their temples of faith are being destroyed and razed, I am in sympathy with them. If the people of Abyssinia, the Ethiopians, should be considered as a nation of minorities, and are being persecuted and murdered by a stronger nation, I am sorry. I have sympathy for them. If millions of innocent children, unprotected women, elderly men, are being murdered in China by Japan, my heart likewise reaches them in sympathy. Every one knows that between 1933 and 1934 between four and seven million Ukrainian farmers were murdered by the Russians through starvation. If minorities in Russia are being persecuted, I feel sorry for those minorities. Minorities are also being persecuted in Poland, in Hungary, in Rumania, and certainly in old Austria, perhaps in some parts of Yugoslavia. Wherever such persecutions of minorities are taking place, my heart goes out in sympathy for those persecuted minorities.

If the Hindus of India, a country having a population of 375,000,000, are being persecuted, and if they are murdered by the British when they see fit to revolt, I am sorry for those who are murdered. My sympathy always goes to the underdog

Mr. President, I will say, however, in answer to the Senator from Minnesota that my sympathies are first with the 10,000,000 unemployed people in the United States. I shall be happy to be provided the opportunity of bringing to the attention of the Senator from Minnesota one of the many thousands upon thousands of letters and telegrams which I have received from American fathers and mothers who agree with my attitude, and are standing by me 100 percent upon the subject which the Senator from Minnesota has so kindly brought to my attention.

Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the refugees from all countries in the world. I am in sympathy with the refugees from Germany, Poland, Russia, Rumania, Hungary, old Austria, Spain, Ethiopia, India, or China, or any other country in the world where minorities are being persecuted, but my sympathies do not go to the extent of permitting all the refugees of the world to set foot upon the virgin shores of the United States of America, because our first duty to our constituents is to give our attention to those whom we represent. The American people are sick and tired of their representatives everywhere in the United States, State and National, pussyfooting upon the subject that the Senator from Minnesota has so ably brought to our attention. The American people are now demanding to know where we stand. Are we for the Americans, or are we for those who live beyond the lucid blue waters of the Atlantic or the briny waves of the Pacific?

I hope my statement provides the Senator with an answer which satisfies his inquiry. I hope he will not have to spend too much time in ascertaining what my position is.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator again vield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator for his statement. I have just received a copy of the volume of the Congres-SIONAL RECORD containing the figures of which I spoke. I made reference to the statement of the International Labor Office, Geneva, Switzerland. The statement is found on page 7840, in the proceedings of the Senate of June 1, 1938. third session, Seventy-fifth Congress. The figures on unemployment, to which the Senator has called the country's attention, are there given. With the Senator's permission, it might be well to have those figures placed in the RECORD

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be very grateful to the Senator if he will be good enough to ask to have them embodied in the RECORD.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Therefore I ask that as a part of the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina unanimous consent be granted to have the figures referred to printed in the RECORD, so as to give the Senate and the country the information respecting the number of unemployed in this country compared to those in other countries. I thank the Senator for calling attention to those figures.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the International Labor Office, Geneva, Switzerland]

Geneva, April 1938.—World unemployment statistics for the first quarter of 1938, which have just been compiled by the Interna-tional Labor Office, show a decline in a majority of countries as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year.

However, increases occurred in Belgium, Bulgaria, Canada, France, Great Britain, Ireland, Norway, and the United States.

Compared with the last quarter of 1937, the statistics show that unemployment rose in all countries except Australia. But officials explain that this trend was for the most part seasonal.

Index numbers of employment, compiled at the same time by the I. L. O. show that, compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, employment increased in all countries except the United States and Belgium.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE UNITED STATES

In the first quarter of 1937 the number of persons in employment in the United States equaled 92.2 percent of the 1929 total, while in the first quarter of 1938 the number declined to 78.8 percent of the 1929 figure. This was a drop of 13.4 percent. The decline in Belgium from the first quarter of 1937 to the first quarter of 1938 was only 0.4 percent.

guarter or 1938 was only 0.4 percent.

Eleven countries, the index numbers disclose, now have more persons in employment than in 1929. These are: Great Britain, with 110.2 of her 1929 figure; Hungary, with 108.1; Latvia, 121.1; Yugoslavia, 117.3; Estonia, 139.2; Finland, 109.2; Italy, 109.3; Japan, 135.3; Norway, 109.0; South Africa, 131.8; and Sweden, 117.3.

Figures for other countries are: Belgium, 87.2; Czechoslovakia, 79.5; the Netherlands, 74.6; Canada, 92.6; France, 81.1; Luxemburg, 13.6; Peland, 24.6; and Switzgeland, 73.6.

75.6; Poland, 84.5; and Switzerland, 78.6.

STATISTICS NOT ALWAYS ACCURATE

In making public the unemployment and employment statistics, officials cautioned that since the method of compiling them as well as the dates for which latest figures are available differ from country to country, they cannot be accepted as accurate measurements but only as showing trends.

The attached table gives a comparison of the volume of unemployment in the various countries during the first quarter of 1938 with the corresponding quarter of 1937 and the last quarter of that year. that year:

Mr. LUNDEEN. And this does not by any means include the part-time unemployed, a vast army which will further add to the sum total of unemployment in America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Minnesota for his valuable contribution. The Senator has spoken of refugees. All our hearts go out in the deepest sympathy for refugees from any section in the world who are being persecuted, but I say that our sympathy should especially be with the American people, those who are here now and who need our sympathy.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to my distinguished colleague from the great Commonwealth of North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am wondering what the Senator from North Carolina thinks about a certain situation concerning which we have been reading in the newspapers. Many sharecroppers from one of the Southern States have gone on a sort of strike, or have been forced off their lands. What will the newspapers in foreign countries, countries the governments of which we have criticized for their action toward their minorities, think and have to say concerning our refugees, concerning people who are being persecuted in this country?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say to the Senator that I have been truly distressed over the situation to which he refers. I have read an article of considerable length published in most American daily newspapers, concerning this matter. I had it at my home and I spent considerable time yesterday in reading it. I could very well picture in my mind those poor, undernourished women, elderly men, underfed children, ragged, without sufficient clothes to keep them warm, endeavoring to protect themselves by means of old pieces of canvas and worn blankets from the wintry winds and the snows which were falling. My heart went out in sympathy to them. I have a big heart, I may say to Members of this body, but all the sympathy of that heart first goes to the sharecroppers, to the unfortunate men and women, boys and girls and little children of this country.

The Senator from North Dakota asks, What will the newspapers of other nations say about it? Mr. President, they will give us perfect hell. That is what they will do about it, and we all know it. We have arrived at a time when we must face the issue. We have arrived at a time when we must withdraw our heads from the sands of oblivion and see what is going on around us. Instead of hating people of other countries and cursing them, we had better begin thinking about how we are going to meet their competition.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator further

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield. Mr. LUNDEEN. Does not the Senator think it a strange way to encourage our trade, that we should indulge in hating half a dozen countries and so lose all their trade? Does the Senator think that our trade is so prosperous that we can lose more trade by hating an additional number of countries?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I answer the Senator's question by saying "no." It is difficult for me to keep the figures in my mind, but it is my recollection that in the past 3 years we have lost about 43 percent in the exportation of our cotton. If I am wrong, I should like to be corrected, because I want to be informed as to that subject. That, however, is my recollection.

Let us now see what is happening. In the first place, I am of the opinion that we have always attached too much importance to what goes on in Europe.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague from the great State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it not true that certain foreign countries have increased their production of cotton, notably Brazil and Egypt, as well as other countries, and is it not true that we have at the present time greater competition for the cotton we produce than we have ever had before in our history?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is true. I will answer that in more detail in just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me.

Before I forget it I wish to continue along the line I was speaking a moment ago, to explain in part why we have such tremendous unemployment in the United States.

Mr. President, the able Senator from Minnesota a moment ago discussed with me the question of unemployment in the United States. I agreed with him, as the result of my studies, that in my humble private opinion we have about 12,-000,000 people unemployed in the United States. But we must consider many things in relation to that unemployment. We have a greater amount of unemployment in the United States than has any other country in the world. When we consider the causes of our unemployment we are not greatly surprised. The United States of America makes utilization of more labor-saving devices than does any other country in all the world. That is point number 1.

I recall that once upon a time I made a trip around the world in an automobile. I had crossed the Italian Alps, and was proceeding southward into Italy towards Milano. In one of the towns in Italy I made a great many motion pictures of some scenes of human interest which I thought might appeal to those in America who like travelogues. I was commercially interested in this matter. While making these photographs my cameraman and I were arrested. We were carried off to the "bastille" or prison. There we were held for several days, and then carried to Turin, where some of our film was destroyed, and where we were held under guard. I recall that while motoring I passed through a great fertile valley, the towering mountains to the right and to the left reaching to the blue heavens of lovely Italy.

To my right and to my left I saw hundreds of Italian farmers plowing as their ancestors did thousands of years before the birth of Christ. There they were, tending their little acreage. I ask Senators to fashion in their minds a hand sufficiently large to pick up those 100,000 acres in that fertile valley of Italy, providing a living for many thousands of small Italian farmers, and set those acres down in our great western plains. If one returned 6 months thereafter, instead of finding many thousands of farmers cultivating the soil, with plows being pulled by milk cows, burros. mules, horses, or combinations of these, he would find only a few hundred farmers, driving the great mechanical instruments of the age, such as the gigantic plows which are used in North Dakota and South Dakota, which plow 40 furrows at once instead of one.

In Turin, which is in one of the northern political subdivisions of Italy, I went into a building two stories high, occupying an entire block. There I saw about 2,000 men and women transcribing records with pen and ink, as was done thousands of years ago. Let us imagine, if possible, a hand sufficiently large to pick up that building and transport it across the Atlantic and set it down on Constitution Avenue in the city of Washington. If we should return within a week, instead of 2,000 men and women transcribing the records with quill pens we should find that 1,500 had been discharged, and the 500 were employed in operating typewriters, mechanically or electrically driven, and duplicating machines of every description.

So it is in every line of industry in the country. We have brought into use more labor-saving devices than has any other country on the face of the earth, which fact largely accounts for unemployment in this country.

Mr. President, I desire to mention something which will be extremely interesting to the honorable Senator who now presides over the Senate (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). I say 'extremely interesting" for the reason that he and his colleague [Mr. Overton] ably represent the State of Louisiana.

Cotton is produced in Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, northern Georgia, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, and southern California. For 15 years the International Harvester Co., which is ably directed by Colonel McAllister, has been working upon the development and perfection of a labor-saving machine for the purpose of picking cotton. Being interested in the people of North Carolina and the other people of the South, I made a trip to Chicago at my own expense for the purpose of talking to the president of the International Harvester Co. about this machine.

What did I learn? I learned that several of these machines have been operating successfully in the delta of Arkansas. I learned that one of those machines, operated by 2 men, will pick as much cotton in 1 day as 40 or 50 men. When that machine comes into general use, we in the South shall have more trouble, because we in the South are more interested in cotton than are the people in any other part of the United States. Five million people in the South are dependent, either directly or indirectly, in whole or in part, upon cotton.

So, Mr. President, I take advantage of the opportunity to state why I think such a tremendous amount of unemployment exists in this country. No other country in the world utilizes labor-saving devices to the extent to which they are utilized in the United States.

Another reason why we have more unemployment than any other country in the world-and I shall have to be perfectly frank about this-is that many other nations of the world have been preparing for war. Those nations have utilized all their surplus manpower for the purpose of making preparations to defend themselves, or to attack somebody else.

The able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] has directed to me an inquiry in regard to the production of cotton. We find competition with American cotton in Russia, in China, in India, and in Egypt. Perhaps the competitor which will cause more trouble than all the other competitors in the world combined is Brazil. In that connection I may add that 52 countries in the world are growing cotton. According to the reports of last year, most of those countries have increased their production. I believe the statistics will show that every one of them, down to the very smallest, little Uganda, has tremendously increased its production of cotton.

Not very long ago I was motoring through the West Indies from Port au Prince to Trujillo, in the Dominican Republic. There I saw and talked to the people, and they told me they had doubled their production of cotton.

I say Brazil will cause trouble for this reason: We must remember that Brazil is one-third larger in area than the United States. It must be remembered that there is hardly a square mile of that tremendous country, a country one-third larger than continental United States, upon which cotton cannot be produced. In addition it must be remembered that to prepare land in Brazil for the production of cotton costs about one-tenth as much as it does in this country. As a result we have competition meeting us on every hand.

Mr. President, if I may be indulged, I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate a clipping from the New York Herald Tribune, which I had intended to exhibit earlier today. It was sent to me by an American who is interested in preserving jobs for Americans. The clipping to which I refer is headed "Refugees Seek Licenses Here. Five Hundred Taking Examinations This Month."

In January 1939, 500 foreigners are taking examinations to become practicing physicians, dentists, nurses, and lawyers, at a time when the professional men of this country are having the worst time they ever had in their lives.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The newly elected Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Tom Stewart, is present in the Chamber and desires to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's credentials were presented on the first day of the session. If the Senatorelect will present himself at the desk, the oath of office will be administered

Mr. Stewart, escorted by Mr. McKellar (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to him by the Vice President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Ten-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my colleague, Mr. Stewart, has just been sworn in and has taken his seat as a Senator in this body. It will be noted from the certificate of the Governor certifying that Mr. Stewart was elected at a general election held on November 8, 1938, in Tennessee. The Governor goes further and states that it is for the unexpired term of Nathan L. Bachman, deceased, beginning on the 3d day of January 1939.

I wish merely to state here and now that the Governor of a State has no right to fix the time at which a Senator elected by the people shall begin his service. This body fixes the time at which his service begins; and the Governor has only the right to certify the fact of election, and whether it is for an unexpired term or a full term.

IMMIGRATION, UNEMPLOYMENT, AND OTHER PROBLEMS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am very glad to have been provided the opportunity of yielding to the Senator from Tennessee. By the way, I wish to take advantage of the opportunity to extend my congratulations to the senior Senator from my sister State of Tennessee, and to extend to him the thanks of the American people for having brought about an investigation as to the number of aliens in the United States and its Territories and insular possessions who are holding jobs which belong to the God-fearing, hungry, employment-seeking men and women of the United States. Thank God for Kenneth McKellar, who so ably represents the great State of Tennessee that once upon a time was a part and portion of the greatest State in the Union, my State of North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator has given much study to the question of immigration, and I should appreciate it greatly if the Senator would give me the latest estimate of the number of aliens who are illegally in this country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator desires to have me tell him how many aliens there are in the United States at the present time, who came here and are here now illegally, in violation of our law. I wish to say to the Senator that I am of the opinion there are 7,000,000 aliens in the United States who came here illegally and are here now in violation of our law. Those who disagree with that statement will say, "Oh, no; you are wrong; there are only 2,000,000 aliens here illegally." I cannot prove that the one who makes such an assertion is wrong, nor can I prove that I am right. Why? Because in this country-I admit it with shame-we have no registration law, and, as a result thereof, we do not know how many aliens there are in this country, illegally remaining here in violation of our law. We are the only country upon the face of the earth that does not keep track of the aliens within its midst.

In that connection, I wish to say to you, Mr. President, and to the Senators who are present, and who are evidently greatly interested, that the thing for us to guard against in America today is the enemies within, and not so much thought should be given to the enemies without.

I recall, Mr. President, the oath that I took on yonder rostrum the other day when I was sworn in for another 6-year term in the Senate. I was impressed by that oath, as were the other 32 Members of this body who were sworn in at the same time, and I hope the Senate will give me its very best attention while I read that oath.

Do you solemnly swear that you will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies—

I did and I do foreign and domestic;

I did and I do-that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that you will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which you are about to enter: So help you God.

I took that oath, and in taking that oath I swore, as did every other Member of this body, that I would defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies. "All enemies" includes both foreign and domestic enemies. The interpretation that I am now pleased to put upon the words "domestic enemies" is enemy aliens within our midst who are endeavoring to overthrow our Government, who are endeavoring to destroy our Constitution.

They are the ones to whom I am referring, and I say that no man can prove that I am in error, for we do not have a registration law in this country. I say that if war were to be declared tomorrow against the United States, if we were to experience an invasion, we would have 7,000,000 potential enemies spying within our midst; and enemies spying within our midst, boring from within like termites, are much more dangerous than enemies from without, because an enemy from without may be observed. So I ask what is the use of our spending billions of dollars for a national-defense program and to provide an adequate defense to protect and safeguard the 135,000,000 people of America when, in truth and in fact, if an enemy from without were firing at us the enemy within, the termites, would be boring? Termites cannot be seen; they bore from within; they cannot be located. So I say that in connection with the national-defense program we should pass bills which I have introduced to expel every alien who is here illegally, to expel every alien criminal or enemy. Without such legislation the national-defense program will not be what the American people want it to be.

I should like to proceed with the reading of this article. In the headline it is further stated:

Five hundred taking examinations this month.

This article is from the New York Herald Tribune, and I am reading it for the inspiration of American fathers and mothers who have spent all the money they could make in educating their sons and daughters, some to be lawyers, some to be physicians, some to be nurses, and some to be dentists. It must be a great source of inspiration to the fathers and mothers of America when they hear that we are permitting doctors and other professional men of every description to come into this country and take away professional work from our own native sons and daughters.

By the way, Mr. President, as you know, the lawyers are having a tough time in this country; but it is their own fault. In the respective legislatures of the country they have legislated themselves out of business. The collection agencies are doing all the collecting; the real-estate men are drawing the deeds; the title companies are examining the titles; and the banks and trust companies are drawing wills and settling estates. So the poor lawyers are out in the cold. I do not care, for they are out there, and I am here; but it is their own fault, because they have legislated themselves out of their business and are getting just what is coming to them. Now listen to this:

Flunked doctors-

Senators will understand the term "flunked"— are suing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky. Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator think it is really a tribute to the unselfishness of the members of the American bar that they have been willing to legislate themselves out of business if by doing so they have helped the general welfare?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not think they have helped the general welfare a great deal. I think there are lawyers in this country, as a whole, who are just as competent to handle all the business they formerly handled as are any lawyers selected by banks, trust companies, insurance companies, or any other corporations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the Senator will yield further, one of the items in the category of legislation which has taken away business from the lawyer is workmen's compensation laws of the various States, statutes designed to benefit thuse who are injured in industry and in other occupations. The lawyers in the legislatures have voted for that kind of legislation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think that is very commendable of them.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is commendable, and I think they ought to be congratulated upon being willing to advance the public welfare even at their own expense.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I quite agree with the Senator that lawyers are very broad-minded and are always sympathetic and thoughtful of their fellow men.

Now, Mr. President, to repeat what I was reading:

Flunked doctors are suing.

That means they have failed.

Launch court fights for right to practice without test.

And then, Mr. President and Members of the Senate. listen to this:

Unsettled conditions in central Europe have caused an unusually large number of foreign professional men to seek to qualify to practice in this State, and some 500 of them are now attempting to qualify for the license examinations which will be given from January 23 to 28. Preliminary examinations in English must be passed; some have taken these already, and others are taking them this week

The applicants are for the most part Germans, with a considerable number of Austrians and several Czechs. The majority are physicians. Lawyers and dentists come next in order, and there are also a few engineers and pharmacists.

About 700 applications to take the examinations were received, and about 500 have registered for the English examinations. Many of the other 200 filed their applications from abread in anticipations from abread in anticipations.

of the other 200 filed their applications from abroad, in anticipa-tion of coming here, but for one reason or another have not carried out their plans. How many will pass the language tests, both oral and written, remains to be seen, and then, of course, will come the examinations as to professional qualifications.

EASIER FOR NEW GRADUATES

One foreign physician who recently did thus obtain a license to practice here, said that these tests were difficult for medical men, and would be difficult for other professional workers also, because of their nature.

They are the same examinations which young American medical graduates just out of school are required to take in order to obtain licenses, and are devised for them.

I say we ought not to permit a single person from foreign shores to set foot upon the shores of America for the next 10 years or longer, until such time as every unemployed American has been provided with remunerative employment.

The immigrants are in large part men who have spent considerable time in practice, and often they find difficulty in going back to the rudiments, especially when, even though they may pass the examinations in English, they must write their answers in an unaccustomed language.

They are in just the same situation as any college graduate might find himself 10 or 20 years after graduation if he had to pass a precise examination in a subject with which he had lost his full schooltime familiarity.

Now. listen to this:

They sue to upset regulations.

Who sues? The alien sues to upset the American regulations. Listen to this:

There is a possibility, however, that most, if not all, of these professional men, and others who have applied before them and have been rejected, may get the right to practice without passing examinations.

Can you beat that? Listen to this:

A group of German refugee physicians who failed to pass examinations—

Lord have mercy-has taken to court the measure passed on September 21, 1936, by the board of regents, setting up this requirement for licensure. A decision on the matter from the appellate division is awaited, and it may eventually go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Can you equal it? German refugee physicians say they will not abide by our decisions and by our laws. In order to practice without passing the required examination, they are trying to upset the laws of the country, and threaten to take the matter to the United States Supreme Court, and we permit them to do it, with all our young professional doctors and nurses and dentists and lawyers out of work.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota

Mr. LUNDEEN. After the Senator finishes reading the article I should like to ask him some questions about it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Very well.

The point at issue is whether they may not obtain licenses in the way in which they were granted to foreign physicians prior to the regents' ruling. Then a graduate of a university abroad, on proving that he had practiced medicine for 5 years, received a license without any other examination.

The aliens are going to carry the matter to the Supreme Court of the United States.

New York doctors fearful.

This is the first time I have read this article.

Many local physicians have been viewing with increasing alarm the situation created by the growing influx of foreign competitors in recent refugee times. Until recent years, few such doctors came here except for special reasons, and the courtesy of permitting them to practice did no harm to American physicians.

The latter—

That is, the New York doctors-

now feel that inroads on their practices are being made, and are growing greater, because of the sudden appearance of so many

This is especially true in New York City for several reasons. It is a principal port of entry, where those who are admitted are likely

The city of New York used to be the melting pot of the world; but it is no longer the melting pot of the world, as all of us know.

There is, furthermore, a large foreign population here, among which the newly arrived medicos could build up clienteles. In addition a number of States have put restrictions even more drastic than the challenged one of the board of regents on licensure; some even require full citizenship as a qualification.

These refugees, these foreigners, these professional men are actually contesting the rulings of the board of regents.

The local feeling is accentuated by the fact that a medical man born, reared, and educated from kindergarten to his final acquisi-tion of a medical diploma in this city must pass an examination.

And these foreigners say, "You must let us practice without passing an examination or we will take the matter to the Supreme Court of the United States. What do we care about the laws of the United States?"

That shows how much respect they have for us.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. LUNDEEN. Does the Senator mean to say that the refugees have an idea that the Supreme Court might sustain their position?

Mr. REYNOLDS. They have the idea that they can upset the ruling of the board of regents, and intimate that they will take the matter to the Supreme Court of the United States. They are going to practice here "whether or not."

The rule under which others do not have to do so is a reciprocity measure, granting licenses to physicians licensed in States of the United States where the licensing boards have standards as high as those of New York, and also making provision for the admission of foreign physicians who can prove graduation and 5 years of practice. In most foreign countries, graduation from a medical school is all that is required to set un in practice. that is required to set up in practice.

That is in foreign countries; but here in the United States, after a young man has graduated from a medical school, in many instances we not only require him to serve as an interne in some of our larger hospitals but we require him to pass an examination.

The test case has so far, through one stage, gone against the State. These aliens are going to make a test of the matter. They come over here and want to practice medicine, dentistry, and law despite the fact that our young American sons are having a hard time making a living in those professions; and the aliens have the gall, the audacity, the nerve to say, "We will upset the laws of the regents."

The German refugee physicians sued for a writ of mandamus to compel the board of regents to license them without examination, and after a referee had taken evidence the decision was in their

Did you ever in all your life hear of such unmitigated gall? I never did.

The ruling was at once appealed, however, to the appellate division, third judicial department, at Albany, where the board has its headquarters, and is awaiting a finding there. That it will go on up at least to the highest court of the State is not doubted. The three petitioners in whose favor Justice Foster decided in Albany on August 5, 1938, are Drs. Julius Levi, Paul Erlanger, and Maximilian Lewitter.

Does the Senator from Minnesota wish to ask me another question?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, recently we returned from Puerto Rico and Santo Domingo, and came to the port of New York; and there we were told that the Europa was arriving from Germany with 1,500 refugees. I said, "What will these poor people do? What can they do to employ themselves here in America?" I was told by an officer of the port that that was easy; that they had all been promised jobs within 2 weeks. I have information that that is substantially correct. Certain information that that is substantially correct. officials of the community were referred to in that connection. That means, if the Senator will permit a further statement, that native Americans will have to go off the pay roll, and will have to walk the streets of New York wearing out their shoe leather in their native land, under their own flag, looking for employment while refugees from foreign countries are coming here and taking their jobs away from them. I am opposed to any such policy.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to be provided with that additional inspiration by the Senator from Minnesota. I take this opportunity to congratulate the people of the Senator's great commonwealth upon the fine judgment they exhibited and evidenced and utilized in sending such an able individual to represent them in the upper House of the National Congress. In that connnection I am very happy indeed that the Senator from Minnesota made that statement. He asked me if the refugees of the world are to displace the boys and girls, the men and women of America. From what the Senator has stated, and from what I will now reveal to him. I must shamefully admit that they are going to displace them.

As evidence of that fact, let me read a letter. I will state to the Senator that I have had thousands upon thousands of letters and telegrams on this subject from all over the United States; and the American people are going to demand that we say whether we are for aliens or whether we are for Americans.

This letter is dated January 10, 1939. I could bring thousands of letters of the same kind to the attention of the Senate. This letter is from Overland, Mo. You have to "show me." This is one of those "show me" letters, because the writer put the evidence right here with it.

Senator REYNOLDS.

U. S. Senate, Washington, D. C.
Dear Senator: News dispatches of January 6 state that you are proposing a bill to suspend all immigration.

The gentleman is correct. I have introduced a bill to suspend all immigration for the next 10 years, or until such time as all of the unemployed of the United States have been employed.

Your proposed legislation will eliminate in part the economic ills that confront this country; also it will create in the minds of the 12,000,000 unemployed Americans a deeper and firmer respect for the United States Government. It will be of greater benefit to the stability of our country than a hundred of Representative Dres' investigating committees.

The incident in the attached news item has done far more harm to the United States Government than all the agents and propaganda of communism, fascisism, nazi-ism, and all other foreign isms which are detrimental to our form of government.

It has made the unemployed of our country ask why this, their own Government and fellow citizens, consider that citizens of other countries are better than the unemployed American citizen, and why should aliens be given jobs in industry while the unfortunate American citizens are put on relief or are given jobs on the W. P. A. They ask why this discrimination against the American citizen by the United States Government and American industry should exist.

Surely there are law-abiding men in New York City who do not have jobs, who perhaps are on relief or who are on the W. P. A. rolls. Some of them have fought for this country. All of them have paid

Some of them have fought for this country. All of them have paid taxes—Federal, State, and city. Surely they are capable of holding the jobs given to the Kirshenblatt family, citizens of Poland.

The interest and well-being of every one of the 12,000,000 unemployed American citizens should come before that of citizens of any continued unemployment year after year constitutes the greatest threat to our democracy, as it gives the unemployed an opportunity to think of some of the inequalities and injustices practiced in this our own country.

I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your splendid work in behalf of the unemployed American citizen. I also wish you every success in your endeavor.

An unemployed American who wants very much to be a good American citizen.

Sincerely yours,

Senators, this is serious; this is no laughing matter. We had better begin to put on our thinking caps. We had better begin to think more about the American people and less about people in other sections of the world.

Now let me read from an article appearing in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, sent out by the Associated Press. It is headed:

Immigrant refugee family making $95 a week seeks escrow fund; $5,000 was deposited to guarantee members would not become public charges.

When an immigrant comes to this country, he is required, under the rulings of the State Department, to deposit a certain amount of money, or provide proof to the effect that he will not become a public charge.

This Associated Press dispatch is dated New York City, November 29, 1938-just a few weeks ago.

The success story-

This is a success story. It is not a bedtime story. It would not put anyone to sleep. It would not provide inspiration for the boy or the girl who wants to become a good American citizen and who wants the opportunities this country has always afforded. Instead of putting to sleep the fathers and mothers who read it at bedtime, it will wake them up, and they will not sleep at all when they begin to think about this. Let us see what is stated:

The success story of the Morris Kirshenblatts raised an unusual problem in State supreme court yesterday.

The Kirshenblatts came here last April from Warsaw, Poland.

Morris' wife, Myndla, told the court in an affidavit.

Now the family

The Kirshenblatt family, who came from Warsaw, Poland-is earning $95 a week and would like to have back in a lump sum, so they can invest it in some business, $3,050 of the $5,000 originally deposited to guarantee they would not become public charges in the United States.

When they came here they had to put up $5,000 in cash to guarantee that they would not become public charges. They arrived here, and all of them got jobs, and now they want $3,050 of the $5,000 back so that they can invest it.

Mr. LUNDEEN. What is the date of the article?

Mr. REYNOLDS. November 29, 1938, and it is dated New York City.

Mr. LUNDEEN. That exactly verifies the statement I made a moment ago, that the people who come here get jobs at the expense of native Americans.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely, and I thank the Senator for that valuable contribution.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAVEZ in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. No doubt the Senator knows that if a job is promised without permission from the Secretary of Labor before an alien comes to the United States, it is a violation of the contract-labor law, and the person violating that law is subject to fine and deportation.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I know that the Senator from Pennsylvania is the highest authority on that subject, and I am glad to have the information. But is that law being observed? I doubt it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania to reply.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know whether or not the law is being enforced. I presume it is, because it is the duty of the Secretary of Labor to enforce the law.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am sure I hope it is being enforced. Mr. REYNOLDS. Now, Mr. President, I should like to tell the Members of the Senate about this Kirshenblatt family. They are earning $95 a week, and would like to have back in a lump sum $3,050 of the $5,000 they put up. Let us find out what they are doing.

Morris Kirshenblatt-

the affidavit said-

is employed as a watchmaker at $35 a week.

Plenty of American watchmakers are out of work, but, as the Senator from Minnesota so ably stated a moment ago, it appears that those who are coming from foreign shores can enter the United States and get work, though millions of Americans cannot get work.

Morris Kirshenblatt is employed as a watchmaker at $35 week. Abraham, their eldest son, earns $25 a week; Jerome, 22, $20 a week; and Henry, 18, $15 a week. The fourth son, David,

The arrangement made with the Public National Bank & Trust Co. before they took up permanent residence was that the bank would hold their $5,000 in escrow, with $1,000 delivered to Mrs. Kirshenblatt on her arrival and the balance in $150 monthly installments.

Mrs. Kirshenblatt says the family does not need to have the money doled out $150 at a time.

They do not need it; they are making money that ought to be going to American unemployed.

The bank opposed her motion for a summary judgment. Its counsel argued it would be "contrary to public policy" to jeopardize any machinery, outlined in a Federal statute, "which expedites the immigration of aliens subject to the disturbances abroad." Justice Louis Valente took the case under advisement.

Mr. President, while the able senior Senator from the great State of Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], with whom I am more than honored to claim friendship, is present, I wish to read a clipping which I have from an issue of the New York Herald Tribune under a Washington, D. C., date line. Again, I wish publicly to congratulate the Senator from Tennessee for his forethought and fine work for the American people in sponsoring an investigation to determine the number of aliens in the employ of the United States Government when there are 12,000,000 American citizens out of employment. That investigation was the result of a resolution presented by the Senator from Tennessee, who honors me with his presence at this time, a man of whom all who reside within the confines of Tennessee should be proud. Knowing him as I do, and being familiar with the fine work he is doing for Americans, being cognizant of the splendid work he did in providing the South with the largest national park east of the Rocky Mountains, I desire to state that I hope the citizens of Tennessee will continue to entertain the fine opinion of this Senator they have had in the past, and will keep him in the Senate as long as he lives. And may he live to be at least a hundred.

The article to which I now refer has a Washington, D. C., date line, and is as follows:

Less than 200 of the 12,000 aliens employed by the Federal Government are stationed in continental United States, it was dis-closed today in reports filed with Congress by heads of various Government departments and agencies.

Submitted in response to a resolution introduced last session by Senator Kenneth McKellar, Democrat, of Tennessee, during debate over employment of aliens by the Works Progress Administration, the reports listed all aliens on Federal pay rolls.

The largest group—9,600—are employed in the Panama Canal Zone because of the scarcity of American workmen.

Before I read the next sentence I wish to say that I was in the Panama Canal Zone, together with my distinguished friend, the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and our friend from Wisconsin, F. Ryan Duffy, who is no longer with us in this body. I there learned, as did my colleagues who were on this mission, of the large number of aliens who were there employed. I shall read again:

The largest group—9,600—are employed in the Panama Canal Zone, because of the scarcity of American workmen.

I shall be perfectly frank in stating that I am highly in favor of substituting American labor for at least seventenths of the 9,600 referred to who are employed in the Panama Canal Zone. I believe that no one can successfully maintain that we cannot find in this country American laborers who would like to go to the Panama Canal Zone and receive the fine wages which are being paid there to aliens.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator again

vield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee. Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator referred to the wages now being paid to aliens.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; to the wages now being paid to aliens.

Mr. McKELLAR. As everyone knows, Mr. President, the Panama Canal is one of the chief military points in the defensive set-up of the United States. It is vastly important to us. It is also vastly important that we have only American citizens on guard at that point. The Panama Canal is probably the most strategic point which the United States possesses. Certainly, with all the money we have to spend there, no man should be employed there in any capacity unless he is an American citizen.

The Senator from North Carolina knows from actual experience, because he has been there, as I have, that the Canal Zone is a healthy place to live. Sanitary conditions are excellent. The housing conditions are good, and are being improved, though I think we should further improve them. No particular illness is prevalent there which is not to be found anywhere. The Panama Canal Zone is a very healthful community, and, in my judgment, no reason in the world exists why we should employ so many aliens, even though they are in minor positions in that place which comprises the most strategic defense position we have.

Mr. DAVIS. Several hundred Americans live there. Apparently they like to live there and serve their Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt of that. I, myself, know some of those who live there. I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the figures given in the reports which we have already received do not constitute the figures for the entire number of aliens working for the Government in the Panama Canal Zone. Several departments have not yet sent in their figures. I believe the Navy Department has not reported. Those departments will send their figures later, and then we will find just what the conditions are in that respect.

Mr. President, I do not wish to do any alien an injustice under any circumstances, but I think that in this time in our history we should look after our own affairs first. That is the underlying principle on which we should act.

I call to the Senator's attention a bill which I introduced in the last session, and which I have reintroduced today, which provides that no Government department shall employ aliens. No other government that I know of employs aliens. The only real argument which has been advanced to me in favor of employing aliens is in connection with the employment of certain Chinese interpreters. As we all know, the Chinese language is a very difficult one, and it may be proper on occasions to employ a very few Chinese interpreters.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am in thorough accord with the Senator's view.

Mr. McKELLAR. But their employment ought not to be permanent. We ought to use our own people in Government service as much as possible. I hope the Senator will vote for the bill, which provides that no alien shall be employed in any of our departments, especially by the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, or the Air Corps,

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator from Tennessee very much for his able contribution. I am sure that the American people, who are interested in preserving America for Americans, will be very grateful to the Senator from Tennessee for his valuable, patriotic contribution at this hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Ken-

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not familiar with the reason why in most cases persons who are not citizens are employed by the Government of the United States. I understand that for the most part it takes place in foreign countries where we have legations and consulates and embassies. In the Panama Canal Zone, of course, a different situation exists. Congress itself might remedy the situation by appropriating sufficient money to man our embassies and legations and consulates in other countries so as to make it unnecessary to employ aliens who are now employed because Americans are not willing to go and work in foreign countries for the salary paid.

My recollection is that in one or two of our embassies or legations abroad, which I have had the pleasure of visiting, there were minor clerkships, which may pay a thousand dollars or $1,200 a year, or even less, the occupants of which were aliens. When the inquiry was made as to why that was true, in addition to the statement with respect to the low salary, in some cases it was stated that a peculiar type of service exists and the Department thinks it is necessary that that service be rendered by somebody who is on the ground and able to speak the language. It was also stated, as I said, that the compensation connected with the position is not sufficient to warrant a qualified American leaving the United States and going to Budapest, or to Bucharest, or to Vienna, when we had a legation there, or to other countries.

I have visited the Canal Zone many times. I wish to ask the Senator if he knows that there are Americans in the Canal Zone who are out of employment because aliens are employed there? Are there enough Americans down there to fill the places without employing any Panamanians?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Kentucky, that I have never heard of any Americans in the Canal Zone being thrown out of employment as the result of employment of Panamanians or other aliens. There are in Panama quite a number of Jamaicans, a few persons from Cuba, and others from the Dominican Republic.

The point the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] and I are making, if I judge his attitude correctly, is that the employees in the Canal Zone receive good pay, when compared with pay received for like employment here. The employees' homes in the Panama Canal Zone are very good. They are screened against mosquitoes and other insects. There is no longer any yellow fever in the Canal Zone. Living conditions and health conditions there are as wholesome as in many parts of the United States.

I should state to the Senator from Kentucky that I am in accord with what he said to a large extent. I now again desire the attention of the Senator from Tennessee insofar as the matter of employment of interpreters is concerned. I will give a concrete illustration. Only last month I was in Tirana, the capital of Albania, and there I spent several days, and observed that our Minister, Mr. Grant, had employed an interpreter who was an Albanian. Mr. Grant is a very able gentleman and is very popular with the Albanians. While on the subject, I may say that we have a great many Albanians living in the State of Illinois, and they have made fine citizens.

I observed that our Minister had employed a full-time interpreter. Although Albania is but a small country, having a total population of only 1,010,000 people, the Minister has a great deal of business to transact. I observed that from early morning to late at night Albanian people were coming to talk with our able Minister, and of necessity he had occasion at times to have a capable interpreter. He did have a very fine interpreter. Of course, it would be very difficult to find an American who spoke the Albanian language as well as that interpreter did, and who would work for the salary he received. My recollection is that the interpreter was paid only $100 or $125 a month.

We must, of course, have interpreters in Japan, in China, in Siam, in Indo-China, in Bulgaria, in Turkey, in Greece, in Syria, in Yugoslavia, and all the countries of the world where the English language is not spoken. We have to have them; we could not very well dispense with them. We could not get American interpreters to go to those countries and serve at the salaries we pay. In those instances I think we should facilitate the work of our foreign representatives by maintaining competent interpreters for their use.

I continue to read from the newspaper article:

The largest group—9,600—are employed in the Panama Canal Zone because of the scarcity of American workmen. The second largest—2,000—are employed by the State Department in its consulates and legations in foreign countries.

We have just discussed that matter.

Before I leave the subject of the Panama Canal, which was brought up so very forcefully by the Senator from Tennessee, let me say that I recall having observed through the columns of the press a few days ago that the Senator from Tennessee has introduced in the present Congress a bill calling for the appropriation of $200,000,000 for the construction of another canal, the Nicaraguan Canal. I know the Senator from Tennessee introduced the bill for the very reason that he is fearful that at some time the Panama Canal may be destroyed by enemy forces. Were the Panama Canal destroyed by enemy forces, it would be necessary for our fleet in the Pacific, in crossing to the Atlantic, to go southward, through the Strait of Magellan, and then back up the eastern coast of South, Central, and North America to its base. The point is a very important one, and the Senator put it well when he said that in our scheme of national defense unquestionably it is the most important, because if the Panama Canal were destroyed it would be difficult for us to bring our fleet from the Pacific into the Atlantic.

In other words, the Panama Canal might properly be termed America's life line. The Panama Canal is to the people of the United States what the Suez Canal is to Great Britain, because the Suez Canal is a part and portion of Great Britain's life line, which leads from the British Isles southward around Gibraltar, eastward through the Mediterranean, and southward through the Suez Canal, the Red Sea, and the Indian Ocean to Singapore, the Dutch East Indies, and Australia. The Panama Canal is just as important to us as the Suez Canal is to Great Britain.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator speaks of a bill to construct a Nicaraguan Canal. I have introduced such a bill. At present the Panama Canal is taxed substantially to its capacity. It now has two shifts of 8 hours each per day. Of course, another shift could be established, slightly increasing the capacity; but the time will come in a very short while, before we could possibly build a Nicaraguan Canal, when we shall need another canal for commercial purposes.

As the Senator knows, under the Bulwer-Clayton treaty of 1852, foreign nations, especially Great Britain, have an interest in the Panama Canal and have certain rights concerning it. We already have a right-of-way through Nicaragua.

Mr. REYNOLDS. My information is that we have a 100year lease. I do not know the details.

Mr. McKELLAR. We already have the right-of-way bought and paid for. Such a canal would be a sea-level canal.

We must do one of two things: Either we must increase the width of the Panama Canal so as to make it a double canal, or we must build a canal in Nicaragua. To my mind it would be infinitely better to build a Nicaraguan canal, for the reason that it would be an all-American canal. We should not have to deal with any other nation except the nation through which the canal would go, and we already have permission to build that canal.

In the next place, the Nicaraguan canal would be 600 miles nearer the United States than the Panama Canal. It would be of immense benefit to us in the way of national defense; and, in my judgment, America could not do a safer or a wiser thing than to build a Nicaraguan canal.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator think we could complete the construction of such a canal for $200,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt it. However, it would not cost very much more than that, in my judgment. I think we could construct an all-American canal through Nicaragua more cheaply than we could double the capacity of the Panama Canal. Then, too, if damage should result to one canal, the other would be open, and we should at all times be protected.

For those reasons I introduced a bill on the subject some years ago and have continued to reintroduce it at every Congress since that time. At this time, while the whole world seems to be ready to erupt, I hope we may prepare for what may come in the future.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let me say to the Senator that I have an open mind on the question of the construction of another canal. When the bill comes before us, I intend to give thorough consideration to the question whether or not we ought to have another canal. I do not know. The Senator from Tennessee knows much more about the subject than I do, because I am confident that he has studied it very thoroughly. I do not know whether or not a Nicaraguan canal could be constructed for $200,000,000. However, when it comes to the cost of construction of such a canal, compared to the cost of naval construction, $200,000,000 is merely a drop in the bucket.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I will yield in just a moment.

The other day I learned that we contemplate the construction of two 45,000-ton battleships, and the estimate for construction of each one of those battleships is anywhere from $90,000,000 to $110,000,000. As a matter of fact, if we could build the proposed canal for $200,000,000, the amount would represent merely the cost of two battleships.

I now gladly yield to the junior Senator from Indiana,

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator think we could build a Nicaraguan canal for $200,000,000, when we are now told that it would cost $200,000,000 to put an additional set of locks in the Panama Canal?

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, that is the very question about which I made inquiry a moment ago, when I directed a question to the Senator from Tennessee. I respectfully question the figure $200,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt very seriously whether $200,-000,000 would be sufficient. However, that question is wholly unimportant. If it should require more money, we should have to spend more money to build it. However, from the information we have, and the reports of engineers, I really believe a canal through Nicaragua could be built for less money than it would cost to double the capacity of the Panama Canal.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much.

I continue to read from the newspaper clipping to which I have referred:

The Post Office Department reported no alien employees, as did the Civil Service Commission, the Tariff Commission and the Central Statistical Board

The W. P. A. listed 18 aliens, all of whom are applicants for citizenship, in important positions. However, its report did not give the number of aliens among relief workers.

The Chief of Army Engineers reported approximately 20 alien relief workers on flood-control projects in California.

The Department of Agriculture listed 89 aliens, 28 of whom are employed abroad by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, 6 in the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine in foreign countries, 13 are laborers for the Bureau of Public Roads in Alaska and Central America, 5 are soil research experts, and 12 are employed seasonally as woodsmen in the Forest Service.

An elevator boy and the assistant superintendent of charwomen were listed by the Federal Reserve Board as not naturalized.

I suppose we could not find an American boy with enough sense to run that elevator. It was necessary to employ an alien.

The Department of Labor disclosed that it employs five Chinese and two Japanese interpreters in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization.

I assume that is essential, Mr. President.

Both the State and Agriculture Departments explained that considerable money was saved by hiring foreign employees for offices abroad at wages prevailing in the vicinity.

As suggested by the able majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

In a long letter, Gov. C. S. Ridley, of the Canal Zone, explained that the scarcity of American laborers made it necessary to "draw on the large reserves of native workmen in Panama City and Colon."

Four alien employees, all of whom are seeking citizenship, were listed by the Department of Justice.

It appears that those who want jobs apply for citizenship. It does not appear that they apply for citizenship prior to seeking jobs with the American Government.

During the course of my remarks today a gentleman whom I know very well sent me a note, reading as follows:

DEAR BOB: There is now employed in the accounting division of a certain division of the Government a young man from Holland or Germany who is not naturalized, and who has been in the country only 3 years. How come?

As a matter of fact, millions of people in the United States are today asking, "How does it happen that so many foreigners are permitted to come into the country and usurp American jobs?" And "Why is it so many boys and girls are prevented from realizing the opportunity of obtaining employment when all these people from foreign shores are permitted to come into the country?" So on every hand we have the inquiry, "Why do we not stop people coming from other sections of the world and taking the jobs which rightfully belong to American citizens?"

Mr. President, I had intended reading a number of letters from my files. Thousands of letters on this subject have come to me from all parts of the United States. However, in view of the fact that the hour is growing late, I think I shall terminate my remarks for the day.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, it Ordered, That the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Stewart] be assigned to service on the following committees: Agriculture and Forestry, Immigration, Interoceanic Canals, Interstate Commerce, and Privileges and Elections.

KELLOGG-BRIAND PEACE PACT

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on January 15, 1929, the United States Senate ratified the treaty known as the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact. In our RECORD of January 15, 1929. it was called a multilateral treaty for the renunciation of war. The common interpretation of the treaty was that it was an instrument for the renunciation of war.

More than 60 nations of the world ratified the same treaty, and those who believed in and who wanted world peace felt that the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact was a great step toward world peace.

I remember some statements made on the floor of the Senate when the treaty was being discussed, to the effect that it would not be lived up to, it would not amount to anything, and remarks of that nature. However, according to our Constitution, a treaty ratified by the United States Senate-and this treaty was practically unanimously ratified—is a part of the law of the land.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was engaged in conversation with another Senator at the time the Senator from North Dakota began his statement. To what treaty does the Senator

Mr. FRAZIER. The Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. We believed that the adoption of the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact for the renunciation of war would mean that we would prepare for peace instead of for war. Many of us were greatly embarrassed and much distressed because immediately after the adoption of that treaty to renounce war our own Nation started to increase its appropriations for war purposes. Ever since 1929 the United States Government has continued to increase its appropriations for war purposes, until the Congress is now being asked at this session of Congress to appropriate practically one and a half billion dollars, or thereabouts, for war preparations.

We have repeatedly increased our appropriations until we have led the mad rush of the nations of the world to increase armaments. In my opinion, it has largely been the example set by the United States Government that has caused the wild scramble for increased armaments on the part of all the great nations of the world.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina, in his recent remarks, estimated that the World War had cost us more than $69,000,000,000 up to the present time, and intimated that, in all probability, it will have cost us more than a hundred billion dollars before the last bill shall have been finally paid.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator will probably recall that a number of years ago President Coolidge made the estimate to the effect that before we shall have liquidated the obligations incurred as a result of our participation in the World War the cost to us will have been in excess of $100,000,000,000, and it is my understanding, from all the information I can gather, that our brief participation in the World War has up to this time cost us more than $69,000,000. The Senator will recall that at the close of the World War, on the date of the armistice, November 11, 1918, we had more than 4,400,000 men in uniform and under arms.

Mr. FRAZIER. I thank the Senator for his contribution. I think, undoubtedly, President Coolidge was correct, and that the Senator from North Carolina is correct in saying that it will cost us more than a hundred million dollars before the World War is finally paid for.

Outside of that, it cost 10,000,000 men who were killed during the course of that war and thousands who have died since because of injuries received. Thousands of our boys lost their reason, went insane, because of the experiences they endured in the trenches. It has been a wonder to me that many thousands more did not become insane because of their experiences during the World War. Yet at the present time prominent military officials have been making the statement that we are making preparations for an army and navy and an air force, of the same size we had in 1918 and 1919, and even to make them greater. It looks that way to me. No one can make me believe that appropriations, running into the billions of dollars for building battleships costing over a hundred million dollars apiece, and probably running to $150,000,000, and entailing an expense of probably several million dollars each year for operation, are being built for peace and not for war. In my opinion, we are making preparation for war. We are proceeding absolutely contrary to the treaty which the Senate ratified 10 years ago

It seems to me, Mr. President, that every thinking citizen, and every Member of the Senate who took the oath, of office which the Senator from North Carolina read on the floor of the Senate a few moments ago, should weigh the recommendations for increased appropriations for war purposes very carefully before voting to plunge this Government deeper into debt by another billion and a half or two billion dollars at the present session of the Congress.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of the 135,000,000 or 138,000,000 constituting the population of the United States today, that part and portion of the population made up of the mothers of America are more thoroughly interested in what the Senator has here to say than is anyone in this forum or in any other place of the United States. I say that for the reason that the debts incurred as the result of a war are not, in truth and in fact, as the Senator will agree, I am sure, liquidated by the dollars and cents of the currency of any country, but the debts incurred as the result of a war are liquidated only by the tears that stream down the cheeks of the mothers who have lost their sons; and no amount of compensation, no amount of money, can ever restore a dead son to an American mother.

I wish to say to the Senator that I am against war. I desire to go further and say that, in my opinion, the mothers of the United States of America who will be called upon to provide the fodder for the cannon ought to have something to say as to whether or not their sons shall go to war and be slaughtered.

Mr. FRAZIER. I thank the Senator for his contribution. Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. FRAZIER. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina that the mothers and the taxpayers, too, of this country should be called upon to express their opinion before the United States enters another world war.

Mr. President, I merely wished to call the attention of the United States Senate to the fact that 10 years ago yesterday the Senate ratified the treaty known as the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact for the renunciation of war. I am sorry that, in my opinion, we have not lived up to it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator with whom are we going to war? Whom are we going to fight? Who is going to fight us? Who is threatening to invade our shores?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am frank to say that I do not know. I have never heard anyone explain it. Some of the best military authorities have said that there is no country that can successfully attack the United States from the distance which they lie away from us.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think I can explain that. We are to engage in another expedition to save the world. We are told to forget our own problems, our own troubles, and once more we are going to save the world. That is the illusion that is being planted in the minds of the American people. That is the propaganda we hear. We are going to save everybody except ourselves. We are going to solve all the problems of the earth except our own problems.

Mr. FRAZIER. It was said that we fought the World War in order "to make the world safe for democracy."

Mr. REYNOLDS. And for Christianity.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say to the Senator, with his kind permission at this juncture, that if the American mothers who of necessity must furnish the bearers of arms and provide the fodder for the cannon are permitted to say as to whether or not we shall go to war there will be no war.

I believe in an adequate national defense; and in employing the word "adequate" I mean that we should be provided with defenses sufficient to protect ourselves in case of invasion; I am willing to vote appropriations for an army and a navy and an air force for the purpose of protecting the people of America against invasion by foreign enemies, but further than that I am not willing to go now.

Who is going to attack the United States of America is what I want to know? Germany is not going to attack us. Why? Because Germany at present has a population which was increased to 80,000,000 as the result of the minorities which she took over in the Sudetan, numbering 3,500,000. Germany is doing what? She has not her eye at the present on the physical acquisition of more territory. She is engaged in making an economic penetration. Those who have recently visited what was once upon a time called "the lovely blue Danube," that rises in southern Germany and flows through old Austria, Hungary, and Rumania to the Black Sea, know that Hitler and the Germans have hundreds upon hundreds of men and barges going down the blue Danube loaded with medicines, toys, machinery, and textiles, and coming back loaded with tallow, hides, oil, lumber, and wheat, which Germany desires. The war we are in today is going to prove to be the greatest war in which we have ever participated. It is a trade war.

What do we find over there? We find over there that the German people have made the most tremendous and most phenomenal economic trade advances with Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Lithuania, Estonia, Yugoslavia, Rumania, Hungary, and Bulgaria. By the way, in passing I may mention that I had the honor and the very great pleasure during the course of my recent trip of meeting the Chief Executive of Bulgaria, His Majesty King Boris, at which time I talked with him at great length in regard to international affairs and with regard particularly to matters relating to the Balkan states.

In connection with Bulgaria, it will be recalled that a few weeks ago the French offered to provide credits for the Bulgarians for the purchase of French manufactured products; but, unfortunately for the Bulgarians, the French could not provide them with the sort of manufactured products they wanted, as a result of which the Bulgarians were forced to turn to Germany. Germany has her eyes focused toward the east. Germany, having paralleled the railroad leading across Czechoslovakia by a railroad which will pass between the frontiers of Hungary and southern Poland, will proceed to the Ukraine of Russia. She is interested in economic penetration throughout the world. She is endeavoring to make an economic penetration in South America, in Central America, and in Mexico, where there is a population equal to that of the United States of America. If Senators do not believe it is a trade war, I ask them to recall this prediction: Within the next 5 years we are going to find ourselves in such a war as the American people never before experienced, because it will be a trade war affecting the clothing of the backs of the laborers of America and affecting the feeding of the stomachs of the hungry.

What do we find in that direction? Mexico, our sister Republic to the south, just beyond the Rio Grande, has a population of 20,000,000. It is a country that we have befriended more than any other country in the world. We buy more silver from Mexico than from any other country in the world. We have bought oil from Mexico. We have sent more tourists there than any other country in the world has sent. We sent there last year 300,000 tourists, who spent millions of dollars; but has that had any effect upon the Mexican people? No. What is the condition that exists there? It is a condition of competition.

You trade with a man not because you like him but because you can get the best deal from him. We might just as well open our eyes and we might just as well realize the condition which confronts us. Let us try to stay out of war and let us try to meet that competition. Let us try to meet that which has been flung out before us by Hitler and Mussolini and the rulers of other states that are now becoming associated with

In the case of Mexico, which I have just mentioned, I recall reading in the columns of the press only a few weeks ago that Germany had succeeded in making a barter arrangement with Mexico by which Germany was to take $17,000,000 worth of Mexican oil and was to pay for the $17,000,000 worth of oil to the extent of $10,000,000 in barter, and it had not been decided how the balance of $7,000,000 would be liquidated.

Right here at our back door are our neighbors, the Mexicans, from whom we buy silver and to whose country we send hundreds of thousands of tourists every year who spend money there; but the Mexicans deal with Germany because they get the best trade there. A fact which really must of necessity command the attention of us all is that the very oil the Mexicans sell they took away from American investors. Talk about withdrawing diplomatic representation! If we are going to withdraw diplomatic representation from Germany, I say we had better withdraw diplomatic representation from Mexico. They have seized all our properties. They have seized all the farming land owned by American citizens and divided it up. I say we had better do that. If we do not like the way in which certain other countries are running their business and have withdrawn our representation from Germany, why do we not withdraw our representation from Spain? Why do we not withdraw our representation from Japan? Why do we not withdraw our representation from the Soviet Union?

We are in a trade war. We are "up against it," and we should not try to fool the American people. We should try to bring before them the facts and meet the issue. I believe the American people can meet the issue. We have never failed to do it.

It is true that by means of barter Mussolini and Hitler are "going places." By the barter method they are doing a big business with South America. We are very greatly interested in the Western Hemiphere, because to the south of us there are about one hundred and thirty-five to one hundred and forty million people. Our able colleague, the beloved Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], has been suggesting and advising us for years past from the floor of the Senate to "look southward." We should turn our eyes southward. What do we find in Brazil? I note that one of the representatives of the Brazilian Government is soon to come to Washington to confer with our great and beloved President. What do we find? The British have the largest investment in Brazil. We are second. For a while the Germans were leading in trade in Brazil. Now the tide has turned, and we are leading. Recently we participated in the Lima Conference, in the capital of Peru; but most of the airplanes bought by the Peruvian Government come from Italy, and the Peruvian aviators are being trained by Italian army aviators. We must open our eyes, and we must meet this competition. In the Democratic platform we say that we should settle disputed matters by arbitration, by peace and not by war. I want to abide by the Democratic platform and settle peacefully, and not by war, all issues in which we might become involved; and again I ask. in conclusion, Who is going to attack the United States?

We know perfectly well that Japan is not going to attack us, because Japan has her hands full in looking after matters in Korea; in looking after the 120,000,000 persons in Manchuria, which she took in 1931; in looking after the millions who are found in China from Shanghai and Peiping southward to Hong Kong and Canton along the routes of travel, and in looking after the people of Formosa. The Japanese have their hands full, more so than ever now as a result of their interest in Indochina; and, by the way, in that connection, it looks as if the Siamese are going to join up with them.

Germany is not going to attack us. She is interested in trade over there. Who else might attack us? Mussolini is not going to attack the United States. Why? Because Mussolini is looking after his 42,000,000 people. As we know, Mussolini owns the Adriatic. He has made an Italian lake out of it; and Mussolini has his hands full in northern Africa. Mussolini is in a position to construct for the Italian people an immense empire in Africa, because prior to the conquest of Abyssinia, with its fourteen or fifteen million people, the Italians had under their control Italian Somaliland, just south of French and British Somaliland. Now, the Italians are desirous of getting Djibouti, the capital of French Somaliland, and their finger is in the pie of the operation of the only railroad in Abyssinia, leading from Djibouti to Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia, a distance of 498 miles.

So I ask the Senate: Who is going to attack us? Every other country in the world has its hands full.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, the Senator from North Carolina, in his able statement, asks who is going to attack us. Mr. REYNOLDS. That is my question.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I understand that the Russians are liable to attack us. They have no navy, but they are teaching their men to swim with full equipment, and they are liable to land in New York almost any day. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRAZIER rose.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Will the Senator from North Dakota pardon me a moment?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Russia is a country three times the size of the United States in area. Russia has a population of 178,000,000. Those 178,000,000 people speak more than 100 different languages and dialects. Russia is rotten within. In Russia millions of people have been murdered. In Russia people are being murdered every day. If Russia ever gets into a war, she will be defeated within 3 or 4 months. Why? Because there will be revolt, there will be revolution within the ranks of her own army and on the decks of the vessels of her own navy.

For instance, Russia has a score to settle with Japan. Russia was defeated by Japan, as will be recalled, and Russia has always wanted to settle that score. Russia had an opportunity to do so only a few months ago when the clash occurred between the Russians and the Japanese in northern Manchukuo, and in one wing of inner and outer Mongolia; but Russia did not attack, and many persons were surprised. Why? Because of all the opportunities in the world Russia ever had to attack, that was the best opportunity, for this reason: Japan, a nation comprised of 90,000,000 inhabitants, was fighting China, possessed by a population of 500,000,000. Japan had her hands full. Russia has the largest standing army upon the face of the earth and the largest reserve upon the face of the earth. Russia has a standing army of 1,300,000. Russia has a reserve corps of men and women of 18,000,000. But despite the fact that little Japan with her 90,000,000 people was fighting a nation possessing a population of 500,000,000-half a billion-the Russians, with their standing army of 1,300,000 and with a reserve corps of 18,000,000, dared not fight Japan. Why? Because Russia is rotten from within, and if ever she becomes involved in a war there will be revolution within 3 months in Russia. Stalin knows it; the Russians know it; and we need never have any fear of the Russians.

As a matter of fact, of course, as the Senator knows, Russia is moving eastward toward the Arctic Ocean, toward the Lena Delta, toward Siberia, toward Wrangell Island, in our Territory. They are just a half a mile from us. But I want to know who is going to fight Uncle Sam.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will disabuse my mind of the fear that was engendered the other day when he told us from the floor of the Senate that the Soviet forces were just a half a mile from Uncle Sam.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Absolutely.

Mr. MINTON. Has the Senator any fear?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh, no; not at all. I will repeat the statement. Senators will recall, because they are more familiar with these international and foreign affairs than am I, that Soviet soil is only half a mile from the possessed soil of the United States of America.

Mr. MINTON. What of it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. In 1867 we bought from the Russian Government Alaska, which included one of the Diomedes, and included the Pribilof Islands and the Aleutian Islands.

Mr. MINTON. I ask the Senator again, What of it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. What of it?

Mr. MINTON. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think it was the finest purchase we ever made, outside of the Louisiana Purchase, I think that was one of the finest purchases we ever made, because Alaska proper comprises 587,000 square miles of land, and of necessity it will provide sustenance and maintenance for more than 3,000,000 people.

In regard to Russia, as Senators recall, in 1933, under the direction of Stalin, the gold rush toward Siberia was started because Stalin wanted to move his population toward Siberia, as that is the richest part of it, and he wants to get as far away from the central powers of Europe as he can possibly get.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I am still disturbed about the answer the Senator from Indiana was seeking. He asked "What of it?" referring, as I understand, to the proximity of these territories.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, I was just speaking of the Diomedes. When we bought Alaska from Russia in 1867 we acquired Little Diomede and the Russians got Big Diomede. They are just half a mile apart. But the closest portion of the mainland of Siberia to Alaska is known as Uellan, Russia, which is a distance of 35 or 40 miles away.

Mr. FRAZIER. No one but Eskimos live there, so I do not think there is any danger. I made a trip to Alaskan waters a few years ago, and we could not get within sight of those islands, because it was so foggy that we could not see, and we had to turn around and go back.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is a pretty good thing. Nature has provided protection for us.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am very glad to have the Senator's explanation of his opinion that no other country is able to attack the United States. But he made one statement with which I cannot agree, although I usually agree very fully with the eminent Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator has traveled very widely, and knows much about foreign countries, I think probably more than any other Member of the Senate, because he has traveled so extensively. He told us that he is against war, but thinks we should arm for adequate defense. That is all the military man says, that we must arm for adequate defense. That is what the President of the United States says, that is what the War Department says, that is what the Navy Department says, that we must arm for adequate defense.

Mr. President, there is no such thing as adequate defense, and the Senator himself admitted it in his argument about Russia. Russia is armed for "adequate defense" right now. They have the largest standing army in the world, according to the Senator from North Carolina; they have one of the largest air forces in the world, too, and the best trained men, and all that kind of thing, yet the Senator says that if war should come they would not last a month merely because they are armed for adequate defense. Would not the Senator think it better if they were not armed at all, but stood for world peace and disarmament?

There is a nation which perhaps the Senator has never visited, a little nation, which celebrated a few days ago its twentieth anniversary of disarmament and absolute peace. I refer to Iceland. For 20 years they have been totally disarmed, they have not had a soldier or standing army of any kind in that little nation, and they have gotten along very well. They were troubled with war and internal dissension and all that kind of thing for generations, but they finally decided to disarm, and they have been getting along very nicely, and the little country of Iceland has furnished some of the best minds of the world.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I may say to the Senator that I want to be provided the opportunity of placing my interpretation upon the word "adequate." I think it is well that we adequately prepare, and by that I mean that we be prepared to ward off an attack by any enemy. I am not willing to provide a navy and an army and an air force for the purpose of attacking any other nation on earth on their own soil.

As to Iceland, she is quite an inspiration to the other peoples of the world. As a matter of fact, there are other nations which believe in peace, for instance, Andorra, the little Republic located on the southern border of France and the northern border of Spain, which has remained quite neutral. There are other small nations throughout the world which have done as Andorra did, and I think their attitude has been an inspiration. The big nations of the earth should be ashamed of themselves for not being able to live in peace and harmony when the little nations can. If we had followed the example of some of the smaller countries, the probability is that we would have been happier.

Mr. FRAZIER. The nations which were neutral during the World War are the nations which are best off today, their people are the best off, and there is less unemployment in them than in the great nations which took part in the World War.

The Senator from North Carolina started to refer to the Democratic platform plank in regard to our keeping out of war. That is a very laudable thing, of course, but I think it would be better if we should live up to the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact, which the Senate ratified 10 years ago yesterday. That put the United States on record, and every Member of the Senate who was present except one voted for the ratification of that Pact. One Member voted against it, because he had offered a resolution to discredit some of the explanation which had been given concerning this treaty which he did not like. He wanted the treaty to stand on its own bottom and to be interpreted according to the words of the treaty, and not interpreted according to explanations that were made by Members of the Senate or anyone else. When his resolution was defeated, he was the only one who voted against ratification. But 85 Members of the Senate voted for ratification, and the other Members of the Senate were on record as stating they would have voted for it if they had been present. So the vote was practically unanimous. That was a treaty renouncing war, and I believe we should live up to it.

I appreciate very much the interest which has been taken by others here in regard to this matter, and I hope we can in some way prevent the huge appropriations which we are likely to be called upon to make for war preparations at the present session of the Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 16, 1939

The House met a 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious is the Lord and righteous, yea, our God is merciful. Thou whose presence pervades all space with rays of the divine light, reverently we wait for Thy blessing. Thou who holdest the stars in their courses and fillest the earth with Thy glory, bestow upon us as a people the strength of Thy wisdom and the justice of Thy judgment. Be with us, our Father, and clothe us with the greatest victory of life, which is the conquest of worry and an escape from the corroding stains of envy and hate. Still sound in our ears "be strong and of good courage." Inspire us with the power to expand, seek knowledge, and hold fast to those forces that maintain our Nation. Let Thy kingdom come in all hearts. Help us to think pure thoughts, speak kindly, and do noble deeds. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

Mr. PLUMLEY. On the subject of flood control. Mr. RANKIN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley] I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes on the subject of flood control in New England.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE W. T. FITZGERALD

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on January 13 a distinguished former Member of the House of Representatives, the Honorable W. T. Fitzgerald, passed away at his home in Greenville, Ohio.

I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks to pay appropriate respect.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Dr. Fitzgerald was a Member of the Sixty-ninth and Seventieth Congresses from the Fourth Ohio District. He was born in Greenville, Darke County, Ohio, on October 13, 1858. He was educated in the Greenville schools, National Normal University, and Wooster University Medical School.

He practiced medicine in Greenville until elected to Congress, and resumed that practice in the same city after leaving Congress. He was one of the most conscientious men that ever sat in the Halls of Congress.

He had a special interest in the soldiers' welfare and became chairman of the Pension Committee.

For a number of years Dr. Fitzgerald had been in failing health, and death relieved his suffering Friday morning, January 13, 1939.

STATEMENT WITH RESPECT TO VOTE

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, on Friday morning I made reservations at Albany, N. Y., for a plane which would leave Albany at 1:40 p. m. and arrive in Washington at 4:30 p. m., so that I might vote on the relief bill. The plane arrived at Newark and was there grounded because of the storm, making it impossible for me to get here except by train out of Newark at 3:45 p. m. When I arrived the House had adjourned. Had I been here, I would have voted in favor of the relief bill.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Gehrmann] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes, making my time in all 15 minutes

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in desiring to address the House at this time is to say a few words in behalf of the dairy farmer. During the past month newspapers have carried accounts of a plan whereby a large quantity of surplus American wheat is to be distributed to the starving people of Spain and China. I certainly have no objection to this. I think it is a worthy cause, but I know and you know that we have a huge surplus of dairy products. Certainly children need some food other than wheat. I see no reason why they should not send some of this surplus milk and other dairy products along with the wheat, and it is along these lines that I shall talk to you today. Let the Red Cross distribute surplus dairy products.

According to these accounts, 20,000 barrels of bran flour were shipped in November and 7,000 barrels of wheat flour in December. This wheat, according to news accounts, was sold by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to the Red Cross for a purely nominal sum. More recently, shipments have been made of 170,000 bushels of hard wheat to Spain and a large quantity of cracked wheat to China, this wheat having been sold for one-half the market price.

I am not criticizing these shipments. According to an article in the January 8 issue of the Washington Star, there are 450,000,000 bushels of wheat produced in 1938 that are not needed in the wheat markets of the world. Since this is the case, surely no one can advance any argument against distributing that wheat free to the people of those countries harassed by wars, where the people have been left helpless and unable to feed themselves. Certainly no better use could be made of this wheat than to help the people of Spain and China save their lives in the face of impending starvation.

If I have any criticism to offer, it is that we have been so slow in taking cognizance of the desperate plight that confronts these people. It does not seem to me that in years gone by the people of this country would have been so indifferent to suffering in other parts of the world. As far back as I can remember, the American people have always responded generously when some other part of the world has been struck by disaster. Even after the World War, when a psychology of hysteria and hatred had been built up against the people of some foreign countries, the spirit of generosity still lived.

It will be remembered that an American citizen who had been highly successful in a business way built for himself in the United States and throughout the world a reputation as a great humanitarian because of the splendid manner in which he handled our relief activities abroad. During the period beginning shortly after the war, Herbert Hoover served on many committees and worked for the relief of thousands of people in Belgium, Poland, Germany, Russia, and other countries in central Europe. Large sums of money were spent at that time by private organizations like the Society of Friends and the Red Cross, but what was perhaps more important, the Congress of the United States set up the American Relief Administration, which, while not a Government agency, was instrumental in distributing extensive relief, made possible by the generosity of the United States Congress.

There can be no question but that millions of people are alive in Europe today who would inevitably have died had it not been for the generosity of our own Government and our citizens.

WHY NOT SEND DAIRY PRODUCTS AS WELL AS WHEAT?

If the Surplus Commodities Corporation is to sell wheat to the Red Cross for a purely nominal sum, or to other private relief agencies at half price, why should not the Corporation transfer dairy products to the Red Cross and other organizations on the same basis? Not long ago, a relief ship left here carrying 170,000 bushels of hard wheat Experts in nutrition estimate that to feed children properly, each 6 pounds of wheat ought to have been accompanied by 1 pound of milk.

If we are to try to take care of small children, any mother knows that wheat is not enough. What is needed to take care of the children in war-torn countries is not so much wheat as butter, milk, and other dairy products. If we are to do the job, we ought to do it so it will be effective. Every man or woman who has raised a family knows that small children cannot get along on just wheat alone, and that is pretty much all that has gone in the relief shipments.

During our relief activities following the World War, we sent out large shipments of lard, dry milk, and food products other than wheat, recognizing that people suffering from malnutrition stood in greater need of a balanced diet than people whose health was still sound.

But in arguing for the shipment of dairy products, I am not only concerned about the children in these war-mad countries, but I am very much concerned about our own American children, as well as the plight of the dairy farmers of this country.

OUR OWN CHILDREN MUST COME FIRST

When I advocate that dairy products should be turned over to the Red Cross to be distributed to starving and undernourished children of warring countries, I at all times realize that we are doing a mighty poor job of taking care of our own needy.

Several eminent health and nutrition authorities have released articles showing that at the present time not much over one-third the amount of fluid milk is consumed by children that experts deem necessary to develop a healthy body. In other words, the best insurance that our children of today will develop into strong, healthy men and women of tomorrow is to make it possible for all underprivileged to receive all the milk necessary to build bone and muscle to develop a race as robust and healthy as any in the world.

Many families with six to eight children now are forced to get along with 1 quart of milk a day when they should have at least five or six. If the needed milk were made available to these children, we would not have these high surpluses, and I would not be pleading to send dairy products out of this country, because our present cow population could not produce enough milk for home consumption. Local relief agencies should by all means see to it that children of needy families receive all the milk they need, so that they will not grow up as weaklings and subject to every disease that comes along, which, in the long run, may cost more for doctor and hospital bills than the milk they should have received. But, since we are piling up dairy surpluses and sending wheat to those in need in foreign countries, why not send milk, butter, and cheese along with the wheat, so as to assist in balancing the diet?

At the present time some 85,000,000 pounds of butter is held by the Dairy Products Marketing Association, financed by the Commodity Credit Corporation. Practically all of this butter has been bought up for about 26 cents a pound. It is simply a threat hanging over the butter market of the United States. As long as this 85,000,000 pounds hangs over the market ready to be sold when the price moves up a few cents, it tends to keep the price down. A real service would be rendered to the dairy farmers of this country if this butter were simply turned over to the Red Cross to be used to aid the children in America as well as on both sides in Spain and China.

I do not believe I am asking anything improper when I call attention to the plight of the dairy farmers in Wisconsin and other States in the North. When farmers get 26 cents a pound for butter it means that they are living on a starvation scale. Farmers of Wisconsin today in my district are getting prices just about as low as they got under Hoover in 1932. Prices at that time got down below $1 a hundred pounds for milk. Prices now are down as low as that. When farmers get less than a dollar a hundred pounds for milk they are getting starvation pay. Milk at that price is the same as 25- or 30-cent wheat to the wheat farmer, 12- or 15-cent corn to corn farmers, and nickel cotton for the cotton farmer.

I am going to try to talk frankly now to the people in control of this Congress. In the last election there were very few supporters of the present administration elected from the dairy sections of the United States. I think that the reason is only too plain. While we have spent about $3,000,000,000,000 or more to aid cotton, corn, wheat, sugar, and tobacco farmers, very little has been done to aid the dairy farmers in the United States. From the beginning of the New Deal until July 1, 1938, about $25,000,000 was spent to buy butter, about $4,000,000 to buy cheese, and $10,000,000 to buy different types of milk.

When we consider that the dairy industry is the most important of the agricultural groups, and that only 1½ percent of the total expenditure of $3,000,000,000 or more has gone to aid the dairy farmer, you may get some idea why the present administration met such a wholesale reversal in the dairy land of the country. When the dairy farmer was getting 75 cents a hundred for milk in 1932, he was just as hard up as were the cotton, corn, and wheat farmers. The only difference is that after spending $3,000,000,000 the dairy farmer is still getting the price he received under Hoover, where the farmers who have gotten help are, of course, better off to the extent of that help.

I believe that the American farmer needs and must have help. I am in favor of helping him in the future as I have been in the past, but I think you will agree with me that it is highly unfair to help certain types of farmers and ignore the dairy farmer completely.

I do not believe that we are producing more dairy products than the people of this country can use. As a matter of fact, we have not produced enough butter, cheese, or milk to give all the American people as much of these things as they should have. That, however, is another question. I hope that before this Congress gets through, it will work out a plan whereby dairy production can be increased from year to year until all the people of this country are properly fed and the farmer given cost of production for doing it. I am convinced that cost of production for everything consumed at home is the only plan that will ever aid the farmers in the long run.

In the meantime, however, we should do the job of feeding the undernourished children of America all the milk and other dairy products necessary and send the surplus along with the wheat that the Red Cross distributes to children in need across the sea in a manner of which we need not be ashamed. Let us give them food, the kind of food little children need to keep them alive—and not only alive but well and growing. The results of the famine in Europe after the World War are still evident in the men and women who were children at that time. Malnutrition attacks and weakens the vital organs even when it does not destroy them, and the effects of starvation are permanent and serious.

During the World War we ran up our national indebtedness to $26,000,000,000. This does not count the money that we raised by taxation and paid out immediately. Altogether, we probably spent $30,000,000,000 or $40,000,000,000, and I doubt if there is much of that money that did much good other than the very small amount that was used, not to destroy people, but to save the lives of the helpless. I think that whatever good will there is in the world today for the United States goes back largely to those splendid efforts we made in years gone by to care for little children, the helpless victims of war and famine.

Twenty years ago this month the Congress of the United States made $100,000,000 available for the purpose of making relief loans to countries other than those against whom we had been fighting during the World War. A full account of these transactions is carried in a report of the American Relief Administration, published in 1931 and called American Food in the World War and Reconstruction Period. Many of those loans have been repaid. As a matter of fact, our loans for humane purposes have been much better than those made for purposes of war.

I urge that these dairy products be shipped where needed in continuance of our tradition of aid to distressed humanity, whether its plight be the result of hurricane, or flood, or man-made war and famine, in the knowledge that by so doing we are not only aiding the helpless children of wartorn nations but that we are also aiding a group of our own citizens who are hard-pressed and who in the past 6 years have been discriminated against by legislation passed in this body.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—SOCIAL SECURITY (H. DOC. NO. 110)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Four years ago I sent to the newly convened Congress a message transmitting a report of the Committee on Economic Security. In that message I urged that Congress consider the enactment into law of the program of protection for our people outlined in that report. The Congress acted upon that recommendation and today we have the Social Security Act in effect throughout the length and breadth of our country.

This act has amply proved its essential soundness.

More than two and one-half million needy old people, needy blind persons, and dependent children are now receiving systematic and humane assistance to the extent of a half billion dollars a year.

Three and a half million unemployed persons have received out-of-work benefits amounting to $400,000,000 during the last year.

A Federal old-age insurance system, the largest undertaking of its kind ever attempted, has been organized and under it there have been set up individual accounts covering 42,500,000 persons, who may be likened to the policyholders of a private insurance company.

In addition, there are the splendid accomplishments in the field of public health, vocational rehabilitation, maternal and child welfare, and related services, made possible by the Social Security Act.

We have a right to be proud of the progress we have made in the short time the Social Security Act has been in operation. However, we would be derelict in our responsibility if we did not take advantage of the experience we have accumulated to strengthen and extend its provisions.

I submit for your consideration a report of the Social Security Board, which, at my direction and in accordance with the congressional mandate contained in the Social Security Act itself, has been assembling data, and developing ways and means of improving the operation of the Social Security Act.

I particularly call attention to the desirability of affording greater old-age security. The report suggests a twofold approach which I believe to be sound. One way is to begin the payment of monthly old-age insurance benefits sooner, and to liberalize the benefits to be paid in the early years. The other way is to make proportionately larger Federal grants in aid to those States with limited fiscal capacities, so that they may provide more adequate assistance to those in need. This result can and should be accomplished in such a way as to involve little, if any, additional cost to the Federal Government. Such a method embodies a principle that may well be applied to other Federal grants in aid.

I also call attention to the desirability of affording greater protection to dependent children. Here again the report suggests a twofold approach which I believe to be sound. One way is to extend our Federal old-age insurance system so as to provide regular monthly benefits not only to the aged but also to the dependent children of workers dying before reaching retirement age. The other way is to liberalize the Federal grants-in-aid to the States to help finance assistance to dependent children.

As regards both the Federal old-age insurance system and the Federal-State unemployment-compensation system, equity and sound social policy require that the benefits be extended to all of our people as rapidly as administrative experience and public understanding permit. Such an extension is particularly important in the case of the Federal old-age insurance system. Even without amendment, the old-age insurance benefits payable in the early years are very liberal in comparison with the taxes paid. This is necessarily so in order that these benefits may accomplish their purpose of forestalling dependency. But this very fact creates the necessity of extending this protection to as large a proportion as possible of our employed population in order to avoid unfair discrimination.

Much of the success of the Social Security Act is due to the fact that all of the programs contained in this act (with one necessary exception) are administered by the States themselves but coordinated and partially financed by the Federal Government. This method has given us flexible administration and has enabled us to put these programs into operation quickly. However, in some States incompetent and politically dominated personnel has been distinctly harmful. Therefore I recommend that the States be required, as a condition for the receipt of Federal funds, to establish and maintain a merit system for the selection of personnel. Such a requirement would represent a protection to the States and citizens thereof rather than an encroachment by the Federal Government, since it would automatically promote efficiency and eliminate the necessity for minute Federal scrutiny of State operations.

I cannot too strongly urge the wisdom of building upon the principles contained in the present Social Security Act in affording greater protection to our people rather than turning to untried and demonstrably unsound panaceas. As I stated in my message 4 years ago: "It is overwhelmingly important to avoid any danger of permanently discrediting the sound and necessary policy of Federal legislation for economic security by attempting to apply it on too ambitious a scale before actual experience has provided guidance for the permanently safe direction of such efforts. The place of such a fundamental in our future civilization is too precious to be jeopardized now by extravagant action."

We shall make the most orderly progress if we look upon social security as a development toward a goal rather than a finished product. We shall make the most lasting progress if we recognize that social security can furnish only a base upon which each one of our citizens may build his individual security through his own individual efforts.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES-ON TAXATION OF FEDERAL OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE (H. DOC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

To the Congress of the United States:

At a meeting of the National Emergency Council held December 17, 1935, I designated the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney General, and the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget to serve as a committee to make a study of Federal ownership of real estate and of its bearing on State and local taxation. This study has been completed and I am transmitting herewith for your information, and such further use as you may deem desirable, the report of the committee and the accompanying tables and charts.

It will be noted that the report concludes with the following recommendations:

1. That all branches of the Federal Service be directed to 1. That all branches of the Federal Service be directed to declare completely, accurately, and promptly their surplus land and improvements in order that a prudent use for such properties may be found or that they may be offered for sale.

2. That the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department continue to maintain a current permanent record of all Federal real estate in order that there may be constantly on file available and depends his information with respect thereto.

and dependable information with respect thereto.

3. That there should be constituted a Federal Real Estate Board composed of a representative from each of the governmental agencies in charge of considerable holdings of Federal income-produc-ing property, a representative from the Procurement Division, and a representative from the Bureau of the Budget. The duty of this Board should be to study and make recommendations regarding the situation existing in individual communities adversely affected by the purchase of substantial amounts of land and their consequent removal from the regular tax rolls of the county or other taxing district; to advise with Federal agencies contemplating the acquisition of additional real estate; and to submit recommenda-tions regarding the disposition of lands that are essentially in the nature of surplus property.

I have approved of the recommendations of the committee and, in order to put them into effect, I have issued an appropriate Executive order establishing the Federal Real Estate Board, and providing for the maintenance by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, of a current record of all Federal real estate. I am enclosing herewith a copy of this Executive order.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the Record with reference to the message of the President on the subject of social security.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I am very much encouraged by the President's message which the Clerk has just read, dealing with the question of benefits to the aged. I was particularly pleased with that paragraph of the President's message which suggested that old-age benefits might be increased "to those States with limited fiscal capacities." is a principle for which I have contended from the very inception of the question of old-age security. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be amiss for me to point out for the benefit of the membership that when this bill was first being considered by the Ways and Means Committee early in 1935 I gave a statement for the benefit of the committee which appears on pages 1084 and 1085 of the published hearings. In that statment I urged that the entire question of old-age assistance in the form of pensions should be recognized as a Federal one. I pointed out with considerable emphasis that the comparatively poor States, such as Mississippi, would not be financially able to match dollar for dollar the Federal contribution.

Failing to get this provision written into the bill by the committee, I again called the attention of the House to this question on April 16, 1935, when the bill was being considered (p. 6012, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 74th Cong.). I then informed the House that upon the reading of the bill for amendments I would offer an amendment which would provide that the Federal Government should pay the full $15 regardless of State contribution. Some days later I offered an amendment to the Social Security Act, which was then in the course of being enacted, in the nature of a compromise which provided for the Federal Government putting up four-fifths and the State only putting up one-fifth. In other words, under my amendment, if adopted, the States would only have to match the Federal Government's contribution on the basis of 20 cents on the dollar. While there was considerable support of that amendment at that time, it failed to receive the necessary majority and therefore was not written into the law.

Following the same principle, when the Seventy-fifth Congress convened I introduced a bill, H. R. 4086, which would have required the Federal Government to pay the full $15 regardless of State contribution. Failing to get favorable action on this bill, I introduced the same bill on January 5 last, and this bill is now known as H. R. 1814 and has been referred to the Ways and Means Committee, where is it now pending.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity thus afforded me to call the attention of the House at this time to the necessity for the amendment of such legislation. Some of our States simply cannot, because of the absence of certain natural resources, collect the necessary revenue to match the Federal contribution. I repeat that I am much gratified and encouraged that the President of the United States has recognized the justice of this proposition, and I therefore hope that the opportunity for the enactment of this principle into law is much enhanced.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes following the address of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plum-LEY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a message from the Governor of the State of Vermont and certain communications incident thereto, which material I undertook to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD last Friday. I was advised by the Public Printer, however, that my material exceeded the limit by about a page. I may say in this connection that I submit this request because of numerous telephone inquiries I have had from Members with respect to it.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman means now the message of the Governor of Vermont to the legislature?

Mr. PLUMLEY. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I desire to call attention to the message of the Governor of Vermont to the Vermont Legislature with the accompanying correspondence between the Governor and the representatives of the Federal Government, which read as follows:

MESSAGE OF GOV. GEORGE D. AIKEN TO THE JOINT SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF VERMONT

Members of the general assembly, this joint assembly has been requested to meet so that I may lay before you for your consideration the serious threat to our common rights which arises from the proposed flood-control activities of the Federal Government within our borders.

This is no new problem, but developments of the last few days make it urgent that the State, as represented by this legislature, take prompt and vigorous action to defend its sovereignty, and particularly its sovereign control of the natural resources located within our boundaries.

Flood control became a matter of common concern for us and our sister New England States after the flood of 1936. We hoped to the control of protection for and expected to attain a satisfactory measure of protection for the Connecticut River Valley through the New England flood-the Connecticut River Valley through the New England flodcontrol compacts between these States. These compacts were drawn in March 1937 and were approved by all the States involved.

But because of the opposition from the Federal administration they were never ratified by the Congress.

In June 1938 Congress enacted an amendment to its flood-control law during the hectic closing hours of the session. Lastminute amendments, introduced hastily from the floor and never even referred to a committee, gave the Federal Government authority to acquire lands and water resources of the States without the consent of the State where such resources are located. The constitutionality of this law is, of course, very doubtful.

Under these circumstances it did not seem likely that Federal officials would have the wish or inclination arbitrarily to enforce their will against the wishes of the people of the State involved, and without consulting them. Yet in October 1938 the Vermont Board of Public Works was notified by the War Department that it proposed to construct a dam at Union Village. The State had been consulted in no way.

it proposed to construct a dam at Union Village. The State had been consulted in no way.

I wrote to Secretary of War Woodring and advised him that although Vermont could not and would not recognize the right of the Federal Government to acquire our land and our water without our consent, nevertheless the State would gladly cooperate with the Federal Government in the construction of this dam. We also offered to confer with him or his representatives.

When I made this offer of Vermont's cooperation in flood control I had two things in mind. The first was a sincere belief that we in the upper valley of the Connecticut should afford as much protection as possible not only to our own people but also to the tection as possible not only to our own people but also to the people of other States in the lower Connecticut Valley. I also had in mind that an offer of cooperation from Vermont would require a demonstration of sincerity on the part of the Federal Government.

On October 21 General Kingman, Col. John S. Bragdon, and Captain Vimey, all Army engineers, called at my office and discussed the proposed dam at Union Village. I told these representatives of the War Department that Vermont was willing and ready to cooperate with the Federal Government in affording flood protection to the people of Vermont and the States south of us. On the same date I authorized our board of public works to enter into negotiations with the War Department concerning the Union Village Dam. On the very same day the board of public works voted to cooperate with the War Department and Army engineers and advised Colonel Bragdon that they would be pleased to confer with him or his representatives at any time.

On the next day, October 22, I wrote the Chief of Engineers of the War Department at Washington reiterating the State's willingness to cooperate in the construction of this dam. I cited to the Chief of Engineers the provisions of the State laws permitting this cooperation.

this cooperation.

On October 26 Brig. Gen. M. C. Tyler, Acting Chief of Engineers, of the War Department, wrote me that Secretary of War Woodring had authorized Colonel Bragdon, district engineer, to confer with the Vermont Public Works Board and work out a procedure for cooperation. Acting on this authority, Colonel Bragdon met with the public works board on November 4 and submitted a tentative agreement between the Federal Government and the State.

After constitute constitute considering this proposed eggreement, the public agreement between the rederal Government and the State.

After carefully considering this proposed agreement, the public works board on November 14 wrote Colonel Bragdon suggesting certain clarifying changes. No reply was received from the War Department until December 19, when Colonel Bragdon came to Montpelier with a revised contract. This had been drawn up by the War Department and, as he said, approved by it.

This contract was approved as to form by Attorney General Lawrence Jones, of Vermont, considered by the Vermont Public Works Board, found satisfactory, and signed by them. It was signed for the United States Government by Colonel Bragdon. Thereafter I approved it in writing on behalf of the State of Vermont. The contract was then complete except for ratification of Colonel Bragdon's signature by the Chief of Engineers of the United States

Nothing further was heard from the War Department until a newspaper article appeared in the Christian Science Monitor of January 6 to the effect that Secretary of War Woodring had refused to approve this agreement which was written by the War Department itself, and not one word by Vermont officials.

The following day, January 7, Secretary of War Woodring wrote me as follows: "I do not feel that it will be necessary to complete the drafts of formal agreements which have previously been prepared covering this procedure."

This repudiated the previous negotiations and contract.

It is almost beyond belief that the Federal Government should consider the taking of our lands of so little importance that it doesn't even require a written agreement.

The very fact that they feel that way raises a very grave issue, not only for our State but for all the States of the Union.

That issue is not flood control; we have offered our cooperation not only for our State but for all the States of the Union.

That issue is not flood control; we have offered our cooperation for flood control, and it has been arbitrarily refused. That issue is not cheap power development by the Federal Government, because the agreement as signed by the State of Vermont did not prevent the Federal Government from developing power.

The issue is simply and solely the insistance of the Federal Government that it can take from us what it chooses, when it chooses, without any regard at all for our wishes or our rights. For more than a year I have warned that behind the flood control, behind the power development, was a deliberate attempt to prepare the way than a year I have warned that behind the flood control, behind the power development, was a deliberate attempt to prepare the way for a little group of men to run things their way, good sometimes, bad sometimes, but always their way, forgetting that a check with the home folks and their wishes is not only good practical horse sense but the very essence of democracy.

By spurning our offer of cooperation for legitimate purposes the Secretary of War has stripped the situation of all pretense. He is evidently impatient with democracy. We can only conclude that neither flood control nor water power but domination is the Federal Government's secret motive.

It is now put squarely up to us Vermonters to decide what we

It is now put squarely up to us Vermonters to decide what we want to do. We can submit meekly, surrendering resource after resource until we are no longer self-supporting and free. Or we can boldly face the facts as they are now uncovered. We can fight or we can run.

I have no doubt what your choice will be.

I, therefore, respectfully recommend that the general assembly, through its constituent houses, take the following action:

First. Petition the Congress of the United States to direct the Secretary of War to approve the proposed contract between the State of Vermont and the Federal Government.

Second. Petition the Congress to repeal the unfair and unjust amendments to the Flood Control Act under which the Federal Government claims the right to take our lands and waters without Third. Appropriate a substantial emergency fund to be expended by the Governor in all legal and proper ways for the defense of our sovereign rights, to the end that this injustice to us and to our descendants be forever prevented.

Vermont has always cooperated fully and freely with the Federal Government. We want to now. But we will be unworthy of our heritage if we do not insist on the recognition of our statehood and the common rights of common men.

Governor of Vermont, Montpelier, Vt.

Dear Governor Aiken: I refer to your letter of October 15, 1938, relating to the availability of funds for the immediate start of construction of a dam near Union Village, Vt., wherein you advise that Vermont does not recognize the right of the United States Government to purchase or acquire land within the State without the consent of the State, but that the State will, however, cooperate with the Federal Government in the construction of this dam in accordance with the laws of the State, and that you are willing to confer with me or my representatives to discuss this matter.

I am advised that since the date of your letter Brig. Gen. John J. Kingman, Assistant Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and Lt. Col. John S. Bragdon, district engineer, Providence, R. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Montpelier, Vt., October 21, 1938.

EMERY A. MELENDY,

Chairman, Board of Public Works,
Montpelier, Vt.

DEAR MR. MELENDY: Engineers of the War Department have expressed a desire to start construction of a flood-control dam at Union Village immediately.

You have my approval to enter into negotiations with the War Department in accordance with the authority given you by section 4975 of the Public Laws of Vermont, as amended, to the end that work on this project may not be delayed.
Yours very truly,

GEORGE D. AIKEN, Governor.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, MONTPELIER, VT., October 22, 1938.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, War Department, Washington, D. C.

War Department, Washington, D. C.
(Attention: General Kingman.)

DEAR SIR: Friday, October 21, 1938, General Kingman, Colonel Bragdon, and Captain Viney, of the Army Engineers, visited me at my office in the statehouse in Montpelier, Vt., to discuss the proposed flood-control dam at Union Village in the town of Thetford, Vt.

That conference was attended by Attorney General Jones and Mr. Philip Shutler of the flood-control committee.

Mr. Philip Shutler of the flood-control committee.

Since that conference I have given careful thought to this matter. I believe that the War Department is sincere in its efforts to provide flood control. As Governor of the State of Vermont, I desire to cooperate with the War Department in accomplishing that purpose in a manner that will avoid delay and yet conform to the laws of both the United States and of the State of Vermont. Section 4975 of the Public Laws of Vermont, as amended, provides in substance that, with the written approval of the Governor, the public works board is authorized to cooperate and to contract with Federal agencies for flood-control purposes. It is likewise authorized to acquire in the name of the State all land and rights necessary for such purpose. It is also authorized to transfer such property so acquired, by lease or deed, to the United States.

Section 2 of the Federal Flood Control Act of 1938 provides in part as follows: "Title to all lands, easements, and rights-of-way for such project shall be acquired by the United States or by States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies and conveyed to the United States."

Therefore, under the Vermont law, the public works board can Therefore, under the Vermont law, the public works board can acquire title to the necessary lands and easements and then convey the same to the United States, and the United States can receive the same under authority of the so-called Flood Control Act. The public works board can contract with the United States to carry out its part in each a receiver. out its part in such a program.

It is therefore possible under existing law for the State of Vermont, through the Governor and the public works board, to give its consent to the immediate construction of a flood-control dam at Union Village, Vt., and to arrange for the transfer of the title to the necessary lands, and easements to the United States.

For 2 years Vermont has shown its willingness to make sacrifices to aid its sister States, and to the end that construction of a flood-control dam at Union Village may be begun without delay, I have authorized the board of public works to cooperate with the War Department to the fullest extent and to contract with the War Department for the acquisition and eventual transfer to the United States of the necessary lands and easements.

This action indicated no change in my opposition to acquisition of Vermont lands by the Federal Government without the State's consent. It does mean, however, that Vermont is willing to consent to the use of the necessary land for flood control at Union Village.

I believe that this will demonstrate to our sister States that we

I believe that this will demonstrate to our sister States that we are willing to do all within reason to provide them with some measure of protection from floods. It will aid in defining the real question at issue and should ascertain whether the Federal administration is motivated by a desire for flood protection of New England States, or under the guise of flood control is seeking to destroy the sovereignty of the States and to centralize all authority in Washington

My action should dispel false impressions to the effect that Vermont's attitude on the flood-control question has been subservient to the interests of public utilities, however ridiculous such assertions must seem to those who know my record.

If the administration desires to have immediate construction started on the dam at Union Village, which site has already been approved by the Vermont Legislature for a flood-control dam, it can do so by the method herein offered. If, on the other hand, the Federal administration attempts to condemn or acquire lands without the consent of the State, it will cause substantial delay in the building of the dam at Union Village and indicate that the administration's real purpose is to destroy the States.

In concluding let me express the hope that this matter will be amicably settled and that construction of the dam will proceed in accordance with plans heretofore submitted, which will provide recreational facilities that will partially offset the losses which the town and the State would otherwise retrieved. town and the State would otherwise sustain. Very truly yours,

GEORGE D. AIKEN. Governor.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Office of the Chief of Engineers, Washington, October 26, 1938.

Hon. George D. AIKEN,

Governor of Vermont, Montpelier, Vt.

Dear Governor Aiken: This office is in receipt of your letter of October 22, 1938, addressed to the attention of General Kingman and relating to the proposed flood-control dam at Union Village, October 22, 1938, addressed to the attention of General Kingman and relating to the proposed flood-control dam at Union Village, Vt. In this letter you state that Vermont is willing to consent to the use of necessary land for flood control at Union Village, and express the desire that the lands and easements necessary be acquired through the Public Works Board of the State of Vermont.

I am pleased to advise that the Secretary of War has this date approved the recommendation of this office that the Department avail itself of your offer to acquire, through the public works board and thereafter convey to the United States upon a reimbursement basis, all lands, easements, and rights-of-way necessary for the project. Based upon the provisions of section 2 of the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938, it is understood that the Department shall determine what lands, easements, and rights-of-way are necessary; that it shall make reimbursement upon acceptance of title by the United States; and that such reimbursement shall be limited to sums equivalent to actual expenditures deemed reasonable by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

The Secretary of War has further authorized the district engineer of the locality to confer with your public works board, or with an appropriate official of the State, to work out a procedure of cooperation, and Col. John S. Bragdon, the district engineer of the locality, has been advised accordingly.

I desire to express my appreciation of your kind offer of cooperation and feel sure that the construction of the project will be facilitated thereby.

Very respectfully,

M. C. Tyler,

Very respectfully,

Illy, M. C. TYLER,
Brigadier General, Acting Chief of Engineers.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Montpelier, Vt., October 29, 1938.

Gen. M. C. Tyler,

Acting Chief of Engineers,

War Department, Washington, D. C.

Dear General Tyler: This is to acknowledge your letter of October 26 accepting our plan whereby the proposed flood-control dam at Union Village may be built with the consent of this State and in accordance with Vermont law.

I appreciate very much the fine spirit of cooperation evidenced by the War Department in this flood-control matter, and sincerely hope that through our negotiations this entire matter may be finally settled, and that flood control, a problem of vital importance to our citizens, may once and for all be removed from the realm of

I feel confident that the contract covering the details as to what lands are necessary, the type of dam to be constructed, the time of conveyance, and method of reimbursement and other material details can be agreed upon forthwith by your Department and our board of public works.

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE D. AIKEN, Governor.

Dear Governor Aiken: With further reference to my letter of October 26, 1938, advising you that funds had become available for the construction of a flood-control dam near Union Village, Vt., I desire to advise you further that the preparation of plans and specifications for this structure has now proceeded to the point where the project may be advertised for actual construction in the very near future.

It is desired to begin construction at this locality as promptly as possible in order to provide the people of the State of Vermont and of the lower States with flood-control benefits at the earliest practicable date. In order to accomplish this purpose, I shall be pleased to accept the cooperation which you have so kindly offered, to acquire through your board of public works the necessary lands, easements, and rights-of-way, in the manner authorized in title 21, sections 4974 and 4975, of the Public Laws of the State of Vermont, and to continue this procedure unless experience, not now foreseen, discloses difficulties in this method. The provisions of the above State statutes appear to conflict in no way with section 2 of the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938. In view of these things, I do not feel that it will be necessary to complete the drafts of formal agreements which have previously been prepared covering this proposed procedure.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
MONTPELIER, VT., January 7, 1939.

Hon. Harry H. Woodring,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Dear Secretary Woodring: Your letter of January 5 referring to the proposed dam at Union Village and the agreement, signed by Lt. Col. J. S. Bragdon for the War Department and Emery Melendy, O. A. Rixford, J. S. Kilbourne, of the board of public works, and approved by myself for the State of Vermont, has been received.

I interpret this letter to mean that the United States Government does not recognize and approve this agreement.

Your letter indicates that you expect the State of Vermont to acquire the necessary lands, easements, and rights-of-way for the Federal Government without any formal agreement. Considering the amount of land and money involved, ordinary business practice would call for a written contract.

Section 4974 of the Public Laws of Vermont provides: "The board of public works with the written approval of the Governor is authorized and empowered to cooperate and contract in the name of and on behalf of the State with the Federal Government in the construction and maintenance of any public-works project prepared by the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works or other Federal agency now or hereafter created." It is obvious that I cannot give my written approval to a contract the terms of which are not given in writing.

It is unfortunate that you cannot see your way clear to construct the dam at Union Village in the manner which was agreed upon.

Very sincerely yours,

Very sincerely yours.

GEORGE D. AIKEN, Governor.

At this point I desire to insert the joint resolution demanding retention of the sovereignty over land and the natural resources of the State of Vermont, which was adopted by the legislature in response to the message of the Governor, and was approved on January 12, 1939, a certified copy of which I am filing, reading as follows:

GEORGE D. AIKEN, Governor.

In order that you may have before you the evidence of the recorded position which has been taken by the Governor of the State, I wish to insert at this point a telegram, which reads as follows:

MONTPELIER, VT., January 14, 1939.

Hon, CHARLES A. PLUMLEY.

Hon. Charles A. Plumley, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I have been informed that the President has stated that if Vermont doesn't want any dams Vermont doesn't have to have them. I hope the President is not trying to becloud the real issue. It is not flood-control dams we oppose. It is surrendering of State sovereignty and resources to the Federal Government as a price for building these dams that we object to. As evidence of this, I am urging the New England congressional delegation to press for ratification of the New England flood-control compacts immediately and to amend the 1938 flood-control law by restoring to all the States the same rights they held previous to its enactment.

George D. Aiken. GEORGE D. AIKEN

Governor of Vermont.

In common with a good many of you I also received the following telegram from the Governors of the several New England States:

Boston, Mass., January 14, 1939.

Congressman Charles A. Plumler, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We urge the Federal Government to cooperate immediately with the New England States to accomplish flood control without demanding the complete surrender to the Federal Government of basic rights which belong to the people in the States. We believe that the natural resources of all the States belong to the people therein and that they should not be taken away without the consent of the States acting through the duly chosen representatives of the people.

Gov. George D. Aiken, Montpelier, Vt.

Gov. RAYMOND E. BALDWIN, Hartford, Conn. Gov. Lewis O. Barrows, Augusta, Maine. Francis P. Murphy, Concord, N. H., Governor. Leverett Saltonstall, Boston, Mass., Gover William H. Vanderbilt, Providence, R. I.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the vital issue involved is not and cannot be disposed of by flippant remarks emanating from the White House or anywhere else?

The Governors of six sovereign States have entered into a compact to protect their States insofar as possible against further encroachment or domination. It would be interesting, were I at liberty to disclose, how many other Governors have indicated that they were in full accord with the attitude, position, and pronouncement of the six who have entered into the compact.

The issue involving the sovereignty of their States and their rights will not be blown away by any blast of "hot air," nor disposed of by any attempt to array State against State by promising to take money away from one and give it to another. Such insinuations and such an attitude only strengthen the purposes of those who propose to fight to a finish for the underlying principle of government with which this issue is concerned.

I ask you to read carefully all the documents submitted and that you familiarize yourself with the situation generally; having done so, you will be forced to admit that, while my statements are moderate, they are absolutely correct.

A few days before Governor Aiken delivered his message to the Legislature of the State of Vermont, Secretary Woodring had repudiated a proposed contract between Vermont and the Federal Government. In this agreement, signed by the Governor and the divisional Army chief, Vermont deeded the land to the Federal Government after the latter asked consent of the State. The site involved only flood control but no power development. Secretary Woodring replied that no written agreement was necessary, for under the Barkley Flood Control Act of 1938 lands can be taken without consent, and that power equipment would be installed.

It has been well said that future historians will write no more disgraceful page than the New Deal record of New England flood control. For 2 years the New England Governors under the then existing laws sought the approval of compacts which would have laid the foundation for an excellent flood-control system through Federal-State cooperation. The administration, determined to capture the waterways of the Nation, blocked the compacts, and finally pushed the Barkley Act through the Senate at 2 a. m. on a hot June night. Under the new law the Federal Government can seize land without consent, make retroactive payments to a certain State, exclude other States from its provisions, and accept the recommendations of the politically appointed Federal Power Commission on an equal plane with the Army engineers-in reality the fact-finding reports of the latter no longer count by reason of orders given to the former.

In August the President announced that there were no funds available for flood control during the current fiscal year. However, the New England floods and hurricane changed the picture. Suddenly the President found $11,000,-000 for flood control which had not been available 2 months before. The New England Governors, remembering the famed Maryland bridges in the Tydings campaign, accepted the gesture as a typical jack-in-the-box to capture the New Deal for New England. The people of New England, however, are "a wiser and a tougher people," and swept Senator Brown and Congressman Kopplemann and other anticompact representatives out of office. The preelection move to put the Republicans on the spot failed utterly. The sight of United States Army engineers marking out land for seizure did not dismay the descendants of the Green Mountain Boys. The spirit of Ethan Allen stalks abroad with the words of Governor Aiken: "We can fight or we can run."

In New Hampshire the Land Use Act of 1935 was invoked, denying the right of the Federal Government to acquire land without consent except for post offices, customhouses, and national defense. In his inaugural speech on January 5 Governor Murphy hoped that differences between the Federal and State Governments could be settled, for "to become involved in costly litigation with the national administration, with consequent long delays in undertaking needed flood control, would be unfortunate. We still entertain hope that adjustment can and will be made and a common basis of action arrived at." Upon his recommendation a special flood-control commission has been appointed by the New Hampshire Legislature.

There are two courses of procedure open to the States in the present deadlock, one legal, the other political. The States will probably take their case to the Supreme Court, basing their major claim that the Federal Government has no right under the Constitution to condemn land within a State without the State's consent. A constitutional restriction cannot be set aside by a statute passed by Congress such as the 1938 Flood Control Act. The States have indicated their intent to cooperate with the Federal Government on flood control after consent has been given, but they deny the right to condemn land for power purposes. They refuse to cooperate on this basis, and the Federal Government will have to prove its right to proceed against the will of the

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says he does not object to condemning the land, but does object to condemning the land for power purposes.

Mr. PLUMLEY. No; I did not say that. We do not object-

Mr. RANKIN. To condemning the land for power purposes?

Mr. PLUMLEY. We object to condemning the land and taking it without our consent.

Mr. RANKIN. What are you objecting to that for? The gentleman says he does not object to it being condemned for flood purposes, or for power purposes. Why does he object?

Mr. PLUMLEY. We object to it being taken without our consent.

Vermonters, as is evidenced by their action, are of the opinion that today the American principles of life, which have been taken more or less for granted, must be protected, even at the untold cost of blood and treasure. hour has come for self-examination, and for extermination from our body politic of all legislation that threatens our democracy. The States must retain their sovereign rights or else become branch offices of Washington.

The newly elected Members of Congress are entitled to know something of the background and the history of legislation pertinent to, and pertaining to the present situation. It may be stated for your information that, on the eve of adjournment of the last session of Congress the Senate approved an amendment to the flood-control bill which specifically empowered the Federal Government to take title, without the consent of the State affected, to lands desired for the construction of dams and reservoirs.

Senators from New England and from the Western States vigorously fought this amendment, pointing out that it overruled the policy approved under the Flood Control Act of 1936. This provided that property should not be condemned without the consent of the States concerned. Such arguments were of no avail, and the measure was rushed to passage with only a few people realizing the significance of a controversial amendment which carried the "must" label of the administration.

Indeed, the one feature of the flood-control act to which President Roosevelt gave unrestrained approval was this very amendment which the Governors of the six New England States are now preparing to fight as a challenge to States' rights and an invasion of State sovereignty. An illuminating light is thrown upon the underlying purpose of this amendment by the President's comment at the time of signing the bill:

Insofar as this bill provides for an improvement in jurisdictional control over the properties involved, and a more adequate control over consequential power developments, it is a definite step in the right direction.

In leading the opposition to this far-reaching encroachment on the States, Governor Aiken of Vermont shows that he is not hostile to the Federal Government's power program. Neither does he oppose flood control. On the contrary the State of Vermont has demonstrated its willingness to cooperate with the Federal authorities in carrying out their program in accordance with the terms of an agreement which Secretary Woodring has set aside. The issue, as Governor Aiken sees it, is "simply and solely the insistence of the Federal Government that it can take from us what it chooses, without any regard at all for our wishes or our rights."

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missis-

Mr. RANKIN. The Government makes no attempt to take property without paying compensation to the owners, does it? It proposes to pay whatever this property is worth, does it not?

Mr. PLUMLEY. We do not propose that it take this property unless we say it may.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, the gentleman is not kicking about the price; he is kicking about the consent feature?

Mr. PLUMLEY. That is correct.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. REED of New York. Is it not a fact that a sovereign State entered into what appeared to be a perfectly fair contract with the State of Vermont?

Mr. PLUMLEY. With the Federal Government.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes. Vermont, a sovereign State, entered into a definite agreement with the Federal Government.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Orally.

Mr. REED of New York. Then attempted to repudiate that by an act of Congress, is that right?

Mr. PLUMLEY. That might be said to be true. Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, there never was any contract consummated between the State of Vermont and the Federal Government, was there?

Mr. PLUMLEY. As a matter of fact, the representatives of the Federal Government not only orally negotiated this contract but reduced it to writing and submitted it to the State for the signatures of the State officials, which were appended thereto. When the contract was returned it was repudiated.

Mr. RANKIN. But it never was approved by the Federal Government. That is the fact, is it not?

Mr. PLUMLEY. It is all a question of who the gentleman thinks constitutes the Federal Government. In my opinion, the Secretary of War took his orders from the Commander in Chief. I cannot be made to believe that the Army engineers were sent to Vermont, made a survey and made their oral contract, reducing it to writing, and sending it to Vermont for signature without Mr. Woodring's tentative approval at that time. After that something happened.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield further, as a matter of fact, this contract never was approved by the Federal Government, was it?

Mr. PLUMLEY. It never was approved by the Commander in Chief, the President.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. WHITTINGTON. Has the gentleman presented, or will he include in his remarks, the proposed contract signed by the Government and the authorities of Vermont?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I will, yes; as well as the communications had with the War Department.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And the letter of the Secretary of War dated January 5?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is there any difference in the authority for Federal condemnation for dams under the Flood Control Act of 1938 and the power of the Federal Government to condemn for post-office sites, veterans' hospital sites, or for sites for dams involving reclamation in the far West and other condemnations?

Mr. PLUMLEY. The gentleman is well informed as to that and does not have to ask me. He is chairman of the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman wants the Record to show the facts, will he not admit that the Federal Government, in the instances mentioned as well as in other instances, has the right to condemn without the consent of the States in which the projects are located?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Yes; and we are going to undertake to repeal that.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In other words, you are going to undertake to repeal the right of the Federal Government to construct a post office in Vermont unless your State consents in writing to the condemnation proceeding?

Mr. PLUMLEY. We are going to undertake to prevent the Federal Government from making further encroachments on the rights of the States.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say to the gentleman, with his permission, that the power to condemn contained in the Flood Control Act of 1938 is a power similar to that contained in the reclamation acts under which dams have been constructed in the Western States for reclamation and irrigation purposes. This power is similar to the power contained in other Federal acts authorizing the Federal Government to condemn for public purposes in connection with the construction of public buildings.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Vermont may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. May). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. There are some national forests in New England, are there not?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Are there any in Vermont?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Would the gentleman object to the Federal Government condemning and taking property on payment of due compensation, without getting somebody's consent?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Objection has been made.

Mr. RANKIN. They took it, though, did they not?

Mr. PLUMLEY. By consent.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. Would the gentleman make that unanimous consent?

Mr. PLUMLEY. No.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman insert in his remarks any stipulation in any statute where consent is required for the condemnation of land for Federal forests? As a matter of fact, the Federal Government can condemn where it desires without the consent of the State. They have done it in New England as well as in other parts of Mr. PLUMLEY. Yes, but the State of Vermont has objected. I would want to check up on this statement. I would not want to make any wild statement.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. In just a moment.

The State of Vermont objected to the creation of a national parkway through the State of Vermont because it involved the taking of certain lands of the State of Vermont without the consent of the State. I can put information as to that in the Record, as well as anything else I can find on the subject.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With respect to the national forests as well as the parkway, the gentleman's State has many more forests than parkways.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

the country.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Is it not true that national forests are created by legislative enactment?

Mr. PLUMLEY. By act of Congress.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Therefore, the State through its duly elected Representatives has an opportunity to be heard with regard to the boundaries of such forests, whereas in this situation there is a broad power to exercise the right of eminent domain without the consent of the State being required or there being any opportunity for the wishes of the State to be considered. Is not that the difference?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PLUMLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missiscinni

Mr. RANKIN. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Vermont, but may I say to him before propounding my question that there is not a chance in the world of getting this law changed. If the law cannot be changed, is the gentleman from Vermont willing to deny the people of Vermont and New England the benefits of flood control merely because the consent of some one up there is not obtained? The question here is flood control in New England. If the Federal Government is not permitted to proceed under the present law there will be no flood control in New England for the time being.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I understood that was threatened.

Mr. RANKIN. Not threatened, it is a statement. We are not going to let Vermont come here and change an entire law just to gratify someone's desire to have his consent required.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I have understood that was the attitude. Flood control is obviously a national problem, but it does not follow that effective control of floodwaters requires a centralization of power which would deprive the States of all voice in determining how such projects shall be developed. The States and their subdivisions have a very great stake in these undertakings and they are entitled to participate in deliberations on matters that vitally concern them.

Vermont's Governor has made it clear that he has no desire to obstruct the Federal Government in carrying out programs that are a matter of interstate and national concern. All he seeks to determine is whether the State has certain rights reserved to it under the Constitution which the Federal Government must respect. And even if the courts were to uphold the right of the Federal authorities to proceed with their flood-control program in Vermont without seeking the approval of the State, the method would still be open to condemnation. For it does violence to the basic principles upon which our Federal form of government is founded.

The obvious and the best solution of the controversy lies in repeal of the offending amendment and a return to the policies outlined under the Flood Control Act of 1936.

Governor Aiken has repeatedly pointed out that the issue is not confined to Vermont or its people. If the Federal Government is allowed to take land in Vermont without consent of the State, it could take oil wells in Texas and coal fields in West Virginia in the same manner, and other resources of any other State.

The issue is so plain it looms above the Presidential fog as does Mount Shasta over the fogs that drift eastward at its

The issue is not flood control; we have offered our cooperation for flood control and it has been arbitrarily refused-

Said Governor Aiken. The issue is-not cheap power development by the Federal Government, because the agreement as signed by the State of Vermont did not prevent the Federal Government from developing power. The issue is simply and solely the insistence of the Federal Government that it can take from us what it chooses, without any regard at all for our wishes or our rights.

It is a fact that in recent years the Federal Government has been steadily invading the realm hitherto reserved to State jurisdiction, and it has been doing so with very little resistance from the States themselves. The chief reason has been that Federal intervention has usually been accompanied by the expenditure of Federal funds in the States. The States have been bribed into acquiescence, as ex-President Coolidge once suggested they would be under such a policy; but the irony of the situation has been that they have been bribed with their own money. Federal funds are not manna from heaven. They must come ultimately from the citizens of the individual States, for the simple reason that there is nowhere else from which they may come.

And if the Federal Government be permitted to take the property of the States, from what source, may I ask, can the States eventually hope to derive any revenue, and must they not, therefore, eventually lose their identity, sovereignty, and become just cogs in the big machine, the power for which has been accumulated by and through just such means and measures as are herein involved? That is the issue.

So there is more than much to be said for the necessity of preservation of the rights of the States and for the decentralization of political power in order to prevent its dangerous centralization and concentration in the hands of any one group or any one man.

The right of the States to self-preservation, self-determination, and the continuance of orderly democratic government is the issue, when the fog of flippancy is dispelled by the sunlight of fact.

I read with interest, and I desire to direct your attention to an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post this Monday morning:

As a result of Governor Aiken's vigorous stand against Federal acquisition of land in Vermont without that State's consent, the White House has announced that it will make no effort to force through the flood-control project at Union Village. The Governor seems to be justified in assuming that the President fears a test of the issue in the courts.

In thus recognizing the right of Vermont to be consulted as to the acquisition of land within its borders for flood-control projects, however, the administration seeks to impose a severe penalty upon however, the administration seeks to impose a severe penalty upon that State. The much-needed flood-control project at Union Village is to be canceled. Since the State refuses to surrender its rights, its people will be left to combat potential floods without the Federal aid offered to less independent Commonwealths. As spokesman for the President, Stephen T. Early tries to evade the real issue by saying that other States will be glad to use the flood-control funds which the War Department was planning to spend in Vermont. He would like to leave the impression that the Granite State is not interested in protection from floods. Actually the State is willing to turn over the desired reservoir site to the Federal Government. It refuses only to acknowledge the right of Federal agencies to take the land without its consent.

Of course, the White House is entirely right in saying that the Flood Control Act gives it the right to take land for flood-control purposes without consent of the States. But Mr. Early falls into serious error when he contends that "there was no resentment" when this measure was passed. The Senate Chamber rang with resentment when it was discovered that an amendment permitting such encroachment upon States' rights had been written into the Road-control build during the president ways with little and the state of the stat flood-control bill during the preadjournment rush, with little or no consideration of the principle at stake.

That blunder on the part of an over-worked Congress cannot be corrected simply by denying flood protection to States which insist on maintaining their rights. The act should be amended to re-store the traditional requirement of consent from the States before their land may be doomed for this Federal program. In effect, the President has recognized the undesirability of overriding the wishes of a State in matters of this sort. This being the case, he cannot reasonably ask that the means of coercing the States into a surrender of vital rights be left in his hands.

That is comprehensive in its coverage, and it reflects the attitude and state of mind of the average person this country over.

Mr. Speaker, we are a free people because freedom has been the American ideal from the first days of the Republic, an ideal embodied in the opening words of the Declaration of Independence and firmly planted in the Constitution. But it has taken centuries of time and oceans of blood to achieve and secure those elemental freedoms embodied in our Bill of Rights, and should they be lost the whole agonizing path might have to be trod once more before happier generations would know again such liberty of person and freedom of spirit. Freedom stands only so long as free men make it stand against the winds of intolerance and abuse.

As the Representative of the people of Vermont, I will be pardoned I know, if I insist that you must understand them in order not to misunderstand the situation which has arisen. At every high point in history since the Green Mountain Boys laid claim to the territory they now occupy and know and love as Vermont, the everyday unknighted, unplumed citizens of that little State, unmoved by aught save their sense of duty, have stood in the ranks, done the day's work, asked naught of any man, served the State and saved the Nation, and they will do it again.

Compelled since the earliest days of their occupancy of the territory now known as Vermont on account of its exposed situation to face dangers of various kinds, and being accustomed to remove obstacles and to surmount difficulties by their personal exertions, they have acquired an unlimited confidence in their own ability, and imbibed the loftiest notions, with respect to what constitutes liberty and inde-

They are very practically minded; they may not be theorists; they may not be philosophers, but they have a theory and a philosophy, that every man and woman has a right to make of himself and herself everything, and whatever can be made, without Government aid or interference.

They have no utopian theory of a "more abundant life" than that they can carve out for themselves. They are the descendants, and they possess the characteristics and qualifications of their forbears, who fought for and wrought out the principles of civil and religious liberty, which are the foundation of, and were the starting point of all free institutions.

They have the innate, intense, and ineradicable notion that a man has a right to be free and to be secure in those rights guaranteed to him under the Bill of Rights.

The fundamental grounds which underlie our whole Government and our national life cannot be attacked, cannot be denied, cannot be made light of without serious danger to our entire political fabric.

Liberty-

Said President McKinley-

is responsibility, and responsibility is duty, and that duty is to preserve the exceptional liberty we enjoy, within the law, and for the law, and by the law. God grants liberty only to those who love it, and are always ready to guard and defend it.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cochran). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, when I hear the gentleman from Vermont preaching to us the doctrine of State's rights I am reminded of the old adage, "Beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts."

If this new State's rights doctrine preached by the gentleman from Vermont were put into practice you could not build a post office in a single State of the Union if someone in a high official position in the State, such as the Governor, objected, even though such objection were prompted, as in my opinion this one is, by the selfish interests that are plundering the people of New England to the extent of more than $100,000,000 a year in overcharges for electric lights

If the doctrine preached by the gentleman from Vermont had been put into practice we would not have built the veterans' hospital in Vermont-which I, as chairman of the veterans' committee, supported-without the consent of the Governor and the legislature.

If the doctrine preached by the gentleman from Vermont were the law of the land we could not do anything to control floods in New England or in any other State in the Union where some influence had control of the Governor or one branch of the State legislature. We would have to do it by a new form of unanimous consent.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Just for a question.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Federal Government ever had any difficulty in getting the consent of any State in the Union for its floodcontrol projects?

I want to tell the gentleman what is Mr. RANKIN. behind all this fight.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Can the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes: I am going to answer the gentlemen and tell him what is behind all this fight. They have been coming down here demanding ratification of the New England compact covering the six New England States.

The main influence behind this movement, in my opinion, is the Power Trust in New England, so that unless such development as it wanted was brought about, they could kill the whole program. This is what is behind this fight nowthe power companies in New England that are overcharging the people of the New England States alone more than $100,-000,000 a year. If the people of New England paid the same rates for electric power that they are paying just across the line in Ontario, Canada, they would save at least $100,000,000 a year.

Under this old compact, if it had been ratified, the Power Trust would have been able to influence at least one State administration, so that it would have been utterly impossible to operate under it. When the flood control bill came to the House last year, it did not contain this provision. This provision was prepared in my office. I got it passed upon and approved and sent to the Senate in order that we might proceed to develop the water power in New England, not only to control the floods and promote navigation, but that we might use it for the people of New England for all time to come to generate hydroelectric power.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I must decline to yield further.

The people of New England have no coal, they have no oil, they have no gas, their soil ordinarily is poor-

Mr. PLUMLEY. I take exception to that. Mr. RANKIN. The greatest wealth of New England is her waterpower. It is her greatest natural resource, and yet they are not permitted to use it. That is the reason this fight is being brought on here. Certain interests do not want us to make it possible for them to do so.

Oh, I know that Governor Aiken imagines he is running for President on the Republican ticket. Why, he might as well forget it. Any man who offers for President in 1940, with the stamp of the Power Trust's approval will simply have the "kiss of death" upon his brow to begin with. [Applause.]

The American people have learned what electricity is worth and we are going to keep informing them through the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD.

Now, let us see what is behind this fight. There never was any contract entered into between the Governor of Vermont and the United States Government, and there is not going to be one entered into that will in any way impair the present law. We are not going to change that law. You might as well understand that now. If a few of you men from New England want to kill flood control in New England in order to gratify the cupidity of the Power Trust in those States, we will know it, because it will be exposed from the floor of the House; but we are not going to change this law. Those provisions are permanent.

The Federal Power Commission, when it made its investigation, brought back a report recommending the building of these dams and the insertion of pen stocks for the generation of hydroelectric power. That is what they are kicking about; they do not want these pen stocks put in these dams. They do not want any hydroelectric power generated in New England. They seem to prefer that the Power Trust, that apparently runs the politics of that section of the country at this time, continue to wring its pound of flesh from the struggling people of New England as they are doing today.

Oh, I know they proposed a contract to the Federal Government, but the Federal Government is not going to enter into any such treaty with any one of those States. Under the old compact, which was never ratified, you never could have done anything except build some levees, probably, with the result that you would have had recurrent floods, each worse than the one before; but under this law, which, in my opinion, is the best statute of its kind that has been passed in your day and mine, they cannot only go there and control the floods and save the lives and the property of the people of New England, they cannot only give them transportation and waterways that will guarantee them commercial intercourse with the rest of the world, but they can also develop the greatest natural resource in all New England, outside of the soil from which they live, and that is the hydroelectric power in those streams, and distribute it to the people of New England at what it is worth.

If that is done, it will reduce light and power rates in New England $50,000,000 a year within the next 3 or 4 years.

Remember that under the old proposed compact the people of Vermont would have had to contribute a part of the cost of this dam. Under the present law the Federal Government pays the entire cost and take title to the land involved, and has complete control. That does not suit the Power Trust. They want to get their fingers in it. Therefore, this demand for unanimous consent.

I have the rates in my office in every town in Vermont and I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD to include that table to show how badly those people are overcharged for electricity. It will show that practically every one of them is overcharged 100 percent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cochran). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. How much of the RECORD will this table take?

Mr. RANKIN. It will probably take not over a page; certainly not over a couple of pages.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman knows that he has put a great deal into the RECORD already on that subject.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; and I shall put in some more. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am one of the best Representatives his district has ever had in the House. Those facts that I have put into the RECORD have forced a reduction of power charges in his district more than anything that the Republican Party ever did in its 50 years of administration.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman said something about my district, and I think that I ought to defend my district.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; I am taking care of the gentleman's district.

Mr. RICH. Oh, no; that is my duty.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; I shall take care of the gentle-

Mr. RICH. I am representing that district, and trying to do everything for it under the sun, but when I find out that the gentleman is trying to put the Government in business in everything, in every line, to the detriment of the people of my district, and that he is building up everything for the people down there in Mississippi, even to the extent of building factories, and trying to take the industries from my State, I think I have a right to complain.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Oh, no. If the gentleman is going to help anybody, let him go ahead. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended for 10 minutes,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a previous order of the House. The Chair asks the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is agreeable to him to have the time of the gentleman from Mississippi extended for 10 minutes?

Mr. RICH. O Mr. Speaker, already I have said that if the gentleman can help anybody let him go ahead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall take a moment or two to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]. When this administration came into power the people of Pennsylvania were overcharged from $85,000,000 to $104,000,-000 a year or more for electricity. The utilities owned $100,-000,000 worth of property in Pennsylvania that was escaping taxation. They were piling that burden onto the masses of the people, and at the same time were charging exorbitant power rates, overcharging the people of Pennsylvania alone from $85,000,000 to $104,000,000 a year. We have reduced those rates and given a reduction to the people of Pennsylvania of about $40,000,000 a year, and that has been accomplished because of the fact that I and other men who believe as I do have fought for it in the House and the Senate, with the assistance and support of the present President of the United States. So far as building factories in my country is concerned, there is nothing to it. No factories have been built in my district by any Federal aid. But the Power Trust has intimated such from one end of the country to the other because I have wrung their hands loose from the people of the district I represent, and if you will stay with us we will do the same thing for the people of every other congressional district in the United States.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I desire to make a statement in answer to the one the gentleman made. I know of the gentleman's information and enthusiasm on that subject.

Mr. RANKIN. I ask the gentleman not to use up my time.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I am not going to, but when the gentleman refers to the soil of Vermont as not being fertile, he is misinformed, and I am sure he would not care to go on record in that way, because we raise more bushels of wheat and corn and potatoes and every other agricultural product to the acre than any other State in the Union.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and it takes every bit of it to pay your electric bills. [Laughter.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman explain briefly to the House what happened to the money spent to pay these exorbitant electric bills if these rates were put down to where they belong?

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell you what would happen. If you will reduce those rates to the Ontario levels, the use of electrical appliances in that country will grow by leaps and bounds. We had to pay the same rates you have in my home town of Tupelo, when 19 percent of the consumers in that town had electric refrigerators. We have reduced those rates and today 90 percent of them have electric refrigerators.

Not only that, but they have increased the use of electric ranges, washing machines, electric irons, vacuum cleaners, water pumps, and everything else that goes to relieve human drudgery and contributes to the happiness and prosperity of the American home. We have promoted a program of rural electrification. Under it the highest rate that is paid in my district is 4 cents per kilowatt-hour. There is not a man in the gentleman's district, except in one little town—and his district covers the whole State—there is not a man in Vermont that I can find, except in one small town, that is not paying twice that rate, although right across the line in Ontario they are buying power cheaper than we are getting it in Tupelo or anywhere else in the Tennessee Valley area.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman know that we did all of that in our own little town, without any Government help, except that they loaned us the money on which they made a profit when they sold the bonds?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I know what you did. You live in Allegan, and the rates there are below the average.

I have gone through the electric rates of every congressional district in the United States. What we are trying to do is to break these rates down to the people, so that they can get cheap electricity, in order that they may enjoy the great blessings of modern civilization.

We are behind every other country on earth almost in rural electrification. Every country in Europe has 90 percent of its farms electrified. Some of them 100 percent. Even in New Zealand, that far off country, 65 percent of the farms are electrified. In this country less than 15 percent of them are electrified. In New England, where you need it most, those farmers who do get electricity have to pay such enormous rates for it that they cannot use it, except for the most meager purposes. If you will let us alone we will develop the water power of New England, and the people of those States will not only use it for the purposes I have mentioned, but they will use it to heat their homes.

I know some of you coal men oppose us on this, but you injure the coal business by doing so. You can generate power by coal in any State in this Union that has a coal mine, and distribute it at the T. V. A. yardstick rates and make money. But the Power Trust will not let you.

All the pressure of the Power Trust is being brought to bear today on Vermont, just as it was on Alabama, to try to get the State of Alabama to attempt to confiscate Muscle Shoals. It is brought to bear just as it was in Tennessee, trying to break up the efforts of those cities and towns and rural districts to get cheap electricity.

But they say, "We do not mind your spending money for flood control, we do not mind your spending money for veterans' hospitals, we do not mind your spending money for power, but we want you to get unanimous consent of every Governor in New England."

Now, what does that mean? It simply means you will never have any flood control in New England. It means that if we were to comply with that request, this law would be dead, and flood control in New England would be at a stand-still for all time to come. Because we never would get together. Do not you men get the idea that you are going to elect a Republican ticket with the Power Trust tied around its neck. That is impossible. You may carry some of the New England States—not all of them—but the rest of the country has moved off and left you. A Power Trust candidate for the Presidency in 1940 will not stand any more chance to be elected than the Republican elephant would to hang from a horizontal bar by his eyebrows. If the Power Trust is going to try to elect a President that will destroy what this administration has done, and deny to the people of New England the right to have their water power developed and their power distributed at what it is worth, and bring up the question of unanimous consent in order to block it, and then destroy all the other good things this administration has done, then they might as well forget it, because the American people have moved away from that doctrine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record the T. V. A. rates, the Ontario rates, and some other rates at this point to compare with the Vermont rates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I insert below the light and power rates charged domestic consumers up to 100 kilowatthours per month under the Ontario rates, which are charged just across the line from Vermont; under the Tacoma rates, charged at Tacoma, State of Washington; and under the T. V. A. rates.

Just below it I insert a table showing the residential rates up to 100 kilowatt-hours now charged in every town in the State of Vermont. The reason I am stopping at 100 kilowatt-hours a month is that the average consumer in Vermont uses less than that amount.

From these tables you will see that practically every domestic consumer in the State of Vermont is overcharged 100 percent for electric light and power.

Mr. RANKIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have here the letter and statement of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]?

Mr. RICH. Surely. If you give him 5 minutes, then I will ask for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, understand we are not trying to take this property without due process of law. The Federal Government is not trying to confiscate this property.

It proposes to pay every dollar it is worth. It is not trying to injure anybody. It proposes to go in there, build this dam and reservoir for the benefit of the people of Vermont, and to pay whatever this property is worth. I have before me a statement from the Secretary of War that I want to read into the RECORD at this point:

JANUARY 5, 1939.

Hon, George D. Aiken,

Governor of Vermont, Montpelier, Vt.

Dear Governor Aiken: With further reference to my letter of October 26, 1938, advising you that funds had become available for the construction of a flood-control dam near Union Village, Vt., I desire to advise you further that the preparation of plans and specifications for this structure has now proceeded to the point where the project may be advertised for actual construction in the very near future.

It is desired to begin construction at this locality as promptly

It is desired to begin construction at this locality as promptly as possible in order to provide the people of the State of Vermont and of the lower States with flood-control benefits at the earliest practicable date.

Now listen carefully to this:

In order to accomplish this purpose, I shall be pleased to accept the cooperation which you have so kindly offered, to acquire through your board of public works the necessary lands, easements, and rights-of-way in the manner authorized in title 21, sections 4974 and 4975, of the Public Laws of the State of Vermont, and to continue this procedure unless experience, not now foreseen, discloses difficulties in this method. The provisions of the above State statutes appear to conflict in no way with section 2 of the Flood Control Act approved June 28, 1938. In view of these things, I do not feel that it will be necessary to complete the drafts of formal agreements which have previously been prepared covering this proposed procedure.

In order that there may be no delay in initiating construction of the Union Village Dam, I trust I may receive your early and favor-able reply to the views expressed above.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING Secretary of War.

Commenting on that, Secretary Woodring says:

My sole interest is to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act of 1938, which are as follows:

"" * Notwithstanding any restrictions, limitations, or retrol Act of 1938, which are as follows:

"" * Notwithstanding any restrictions, limitations, or requirement of prior consent provided by any other act, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire in the name of the United States title to all lands, easements, and rights-of-way necessary for any dam and reservoir project or channel improvement or channel rectification project for flood control, with funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated or made available for such projects; and States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies shall be granted and reimbursed, from such funds, sums equivalent to actual expenditures deemed reasonable by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers and made by them in acquiring land, easements, and rights-of-way for any dam and reservoir project or any channel improvement or channel rectification project for flood control herefofore or herein authorized: Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for any indirect or Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for any indirect or speculative damages * *."

As Secretary of War, I am proceeding under these provisions by which the United States Government expends the Federal tax-payers' money for complete flood control by building dams and reservoirs—in this instance in the State of Vermont—without the expenditure of one cent by the State.

Notice, not a cent is demanded. The Governor did not object to the fact that it would not cost the State of Vermont one cent. The only cent it would cost Vermont was unanimous consent.

I propose to follow the same procedure in Vermont as I have since the passage of the act in New York and in other States. I cannot accept lands transferred to the Federal Government if any restrictions are imposed by the State.

That is what the consent demanded is about. They want to put some strings onto it, and the strings would be that there should be no penstocks in these dams; therefore, no hydroelectric power generated.

I have served as Governor of a State myself, and I do not concede to Governor Alken, nor to any other person in the United States, a greater championship of States' rights. The War Department stands ready to cooperate with Governor Aiken, of Vermont, or any other State in the Union, in carrying out this Federal act according to the tenets of said act. In view of these facts, the responsibility for any delay in providing much-needed flood protection in the Convenciont Velley lies equarely with the Governor of Vermont. Connecticut Valley lies squarely with the Governor of Vermont.

Mr. Speaker, that is the whole story. The entire effort is to keep us from developing the hydroelectric power of that territory for the benefit of the people of New England. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson] may address the House for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to address myself solely to one single subject, but I must digress for just a minute to comment on the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. I like the gentleman from Mississippi very much, and I sometimes believe he is most sincere in what he is trying to do; but when he tells you that the utilities of Pennsylvania and of this country have picked the pockets of the consumer, I ask myself where the greatest condemnation lies; whether against the individual picking the pockets of the consumers of this country, or whether against politicians picking the pockets of the people of this country. In the past 3 or 4 years we have made so many radical and ridiculous expenditures of Government funds that we have increased our debt more than twice; we have increased it from nineteen and one-half billions in 1933 to thirty-nine and one-half billions in 1939-6 years increased more than 100 percent political pickpockets work. The debt is so huge and so staggering that it will take not only our children but our children's children, our children's children's children, and our children's children's children to pay the bill these New Deal politicians of the F. D. Roosevelt dynasty have unloaded on the people of this Nation. I can think of nothing more ridiculous or more unbusinesslike than the debts this administration has heaped upon the American people. It is a mystery to me how they figure the debts can be paid. Where are you going to get the money?

I am not going to talk so much about Government finances at this moment as I am about Government laws. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to congratulate the people of Pennsylvania, for tomorrow they will induct into office as Governor, Arthur H. James, an honorable, upright, conscientious man, qualified in every way to be the Governor of a great State. [Applause.]

He follows 4 years of New Deal rule. Until Governor Earle came into power the Keystone State had been governed by a Republican administration for 40 years. I venture the assertion, however, that it will require the Republicans almost another 40 years to get Pennsylvania out of the awful condition it finds itself in after 4 years of New Deal rule. It is not Democratic rule, it is New Deal rule; and I may say that it has been the worst administration Pennsylvania has ever had. We are hoping, however, that we may find ourselves in the position where we shall be able to overcome some of the obstacles and handicaps bequeathed to us by these 4 years of misrule.

Tomorrow will be a great day in the history of Pennsylvania. We hope, we pray, and we wish for the best of luck to the new Governor and to the legislature and his coworkers, that he may have cooperation to give the people of this great State an honest and conscientious administration of their affairs; an administration that will be a credit to a great State, an administration that will be honest, an administration that will be constructive, an administration that will be for the best interest of the people who inhabit the State, and to our Nation as well. I have hopes of all things that are good for our people.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The new administration which the gentleman talks about surely will not destroy the progress made in reducing the light and power rates for the people of Pennsylvania, will it?

Mr. RICH. Anything good that the past administration has given Pennsylvania, I can assure the gentleman from Mississippi, will be retained because the Republican Party has always been constructive and will do whatever is for the best interest of the greatest number of people.

Mr. RANKIN. That is all right. I hope that policy will be carried forward.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to read to the Members of the House a statement I received from the president of a bank in reference to his annual statement to the stockholders:

The first item in the statement is the amount invested in United States Government obligations aggregating two and a half United States Government obligations aggregating two and a half million dollars. This amount is abnormally large, and the determination of how much of the bank's funds should be thus invested, and what maturities should be held, is one of the most important and difficult problems facing your directors and officers. Of the amount stated, over 75 percent represents maturities of from a few months to 5 years. The balance represents maturities averaging about 7 years.

The principal reasons for investing so heavily in Government obligations are: The almost total lack of demand for desirable commercial loans; the uncertainties confronting the business world because of reckless spending on the part of both the State and Federal administrations, and the excessive, burdensome taxation necessary to meet these expenditures; the constantly changing financial and economic policies of the Federal administration; the unfairness to business in certain provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, which threatens the closing down of many enterprises in nearly every line of industry; and the likelihood of wide fluctuations in bond prices as a consequence of these several

It is impossible for our economic machine to run indefinitely on money borrowed and spent by the Government.

This is a subject that could be discussed at length. Suffice to say that, in my judgment, no permanent improvement can be expected in our general business and economic conditions until the State and Educate harders are not belongered. State and Federal budgets are put in balance and certain regu-latory, confidence-destroying, and otherwise harmful laws and governmental policies are removed. This accomplished, private loans would gradually take the place of Government obligations in the portfolios of the banks; and this would be a most healthy change for the banks, the Government, and the general public.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the present Congress will try to correct any harmful laws that have been passed and will endeavor to secure a job for every man in this country. That is the most important thing confronting us today and I am going to suggest that you give it some of your time and study. I suggest the Wagner Act be one of the first to be considered, the N. L. R. B.

I have before me a survey made by Factory Management and Maintenance, which sent out a questionnaire to 1,500 business people in this country.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a part of this survey, the replies thereto, and a letter from the editor to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCHULTE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FACTORY MANAGEMENT AND MAINTENANCE, New York, N. Y., January 6, 1939.

Representative ROBERT F. RICH,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman Rich: Factory Management and Maintenance has recently completed a survey, the first of its kind, designed to determine the opinion of men engaged in industrial plant management concerning the Wagner National Labor Relations Act and the Labor Board.

The survey was Nation-wide in scope and, I think, completely representative. It shows that management men are not opposed on principle to the organization of employees by unions, and that on principle to the organization of employees by unions, and that they believe there is a need for legislation to safeguard the organizing rights of labor. But the survey shows also how completely dissatisfied are these men, experienced in the actual workings of the law, with the present act and the existing Board. By a ratio of 40 to 1, they recommend a substantive change in the act and by 8 to 1 a drastic change in the Board itself.

For your interest and information, I inclose a preprint of the article summarizing the results of the survey. I believe you will be impressed by its factual content, and I wish to call your attention especially to pages 44, 45, and 46, on which are reported the opinions of The Experience Group, composed solely of those who have had actual dealings with the Labor Board.

Very truly yours,

Very truly yours,

L. C. MORROW, Editor.

Mr. RICH. This survey suggests strongly the need of a change. It is most imperative that we act and at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I am interested in the remarks of the gentleman, particularly so far as the national debt of our country is concerned. May I call his attention to the fact, however, that Great Britain incurred a stupendous debt on account of the Napoleonic wars in 1815, just 125 years ago? Since the adoption of that debt in 1815, Great Britain has not repaid it up to the present time, and her financial stability and standing is respected throughout the world. The same thing will apply to the colossal debt of the United States of almost $39,000,000,000. In time we shall repay this obligation the same as Great Britain has been doing for the past 125 years.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Sirovich] has propounded a most interesting question. If, in 125 years, Great Britain has not repaid the debt contracted in 1815, it may take the United States a century or two to make good the obligations it has incurred in the World War, as well as the tremendous amount of money that has accumulated as a result of the deficit during the Roosevelt administration, which has brought our national debt to almost $40,000,000,000. If Great Britain and our other allies to whom we loaned money during the World War and after the World War, would repay the rightful obligations they owe us, $12,000,000,000 could be subtracted from our national debt. I believe that international decency demands that Great Britain, France, and all other nations to whom we loaned money should repay their debts to us.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson] has permission to address the House. Is the gentleman's request satisfactory to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson]?

Mr. THORKELSON. It is satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich].

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman quoted from the annual report of a bank. If I understand the gentleman correctly, the president of this bank said that they buy Government bonds because the market is denuded of commercial paper, is that correct?

Mr. RICH. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no commercial paper being created by industrial employment because of the fear of Government rules, regulations, and the legislation enacted by the Congress?

Mr. RICH. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, did I understand the gentleman to say that he believes this Congress is going to repeal or modify a lot of laws and remove this difficulty?

Mr. RICH. I am hopeful this Congress will repeal some of the acts passed during the last 4 years, thereby restoring confidence to the business people of this country so that an opportunity may be had for men to go into business. If the Congress does this, there will be an opportunity for men in business to put additional capital into their business, which will thereby create additional jobs for those men who are unemployed. Business will put 200 to work for 1 in the New Deal way on Government pay roll. If we build up this atmosphere in the minds and in the hearts of the people of this country who desire to go ahead, we will raise the national income to $80,000,000,000, and it will not be done recklessly through the expenditure of Government money. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the gentleman taken the time to study even briefly the financial statements published by all the banks of the United States as of December 31, and when I say "all the banks," I mean just those banks that published statements on December 31, showing their holdings of Government bonds?

Mr. RICH. I did not make a particular study of that phase of the statement, but I know the banks now hold the largest amount of Government securities they have ever held at any one time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In round figures, it is $18,000,000,000. Has the gentleman also noticed that as new issues of Government securities have come out the banks in recent weeks have pushed the price of some of the bonds up to $114 on a $100 bond in an attempt to get a security that will pay just a little bit of interest and give some income to the banks? If that is to be our situation, what will happen when the market price of Government bonds breaks, which necessarily must occur if money goes back into private industry and we start to build toward an $80,000,000,000 income, and the people start running away from Government bonds as they are now running to them? When that time comes the banks will lose by the billions.

Mr. RICH. Any banker who is paying a premium on Government bonds today is a very foolish banker, in my judgment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are all doing it, and the gentleman's bank is doing it.

Mr. RICH. Now, be careful. We are trying to keep away from that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman's bank is doing it.

Mr. RICH. If I have any influence in any bank with which I am associated, I say, "Watch that $2,000,000,000 you have given the President and Mr. Morgenthau to hold up the price of bonds because whenever they spend all that money look out, boys, the roof is going to fall in," and they are careful.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. RICH. You gentlemen are not going to let me talk at all about the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. SIROVICH. I will get the gentleman more time.

Mr. RICH. All right.

Mr. SIROVICH. Now that the gentleman has answered the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, will the gentleman please inform the House whether or not the banks of this country are in better financial condition today than they were in 1932?

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from New York would have me believe that just because the banks have a lot of Government bonds they can turn into cash and are in a more liquid position they are in better financial condition. Insofar as liquidity is concerned, that is true, but what is the value of a Government obligation today? Let me call your attention to the old German mark I hold in my hand, which in the time of Kaiser Wilhelm was worth 24 cents. This is a 100-mark note, and you know that when Germany repudiated her debts I could have secured a wagonload of these for 24 cents. They were not worth the paper they were written on. How do you know the bonds or the paper money of this country will be worth any more than the German marks if we do not try to keep the Government on a sound financial basis? That is what is worrying me. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman prefer to have $52,000,000,000 of deposits in the banks, which is the situation today, and no industry, or have a lot of industry going on with a much smaller amount of deposits in the banks?

Mr. RICH. I would rather have the industries of this country in full operation manufacturing the things the people of this country want. I would rather have our farmers busy raising our own produce, rather than have reciprocaltrade agreements which allow large quantities of commodities to be brought in from foreign countries. This is the first thing I would like to have so we can give the people of this country work. I want a job for our people, so they can get off the dole and earn an honest American livelihood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting here quietly for about 3 weeks listening to discussions dealing with many problems which concern the fundamental basis of the Government under which we live. I am not speaking to you as a lawyer or as a politician, and I care nothing about the Republican or the Democratic Party. I am here having been elected by the people of Montana to represent the people of Montana and not any political party.

Congress is selected by the people to represent the people and to confine itself within the Constitution as it was handed to it by the people of this great country of ours. If you will read the first paragraph of the Constitution, you will find this:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

If you will read the last paragraph in section 8, you will find this:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

The tenth amendment to the Constitution reads as follows:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

Further, in order that there shall be no invasion of such rights, the people say in the ninth amendment to the Constitution:

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

These are some of the rights the people have reserved for themselves. Congress is not here to propose its own ideas with respect to the Constitution. You Members of Congress are here simply to confine yourselves within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Who are the people? The people are composed of those engaged in industry, commerce, business, labor, agriculture, the professions, and all other earning groups. They are the people, and you have no right to enforce your views on them, because the Constitution belongs to the people and not to Congress. The Constitution is the fundamental law upon which all legislation must be based. It must not be based upon the personal opinions of Members of Congress or anyone else.

I know that this has not been adhered to by any Congress. It is not a question of blaming the Republican Party or the Democratic Party or President Roosevelt or President Hoover. Those who are responsible for the conditions facing us today are the majority in Congress; it makes no difference whether we be Republicans or Democrats, because we are the ones who pass the bills, and we must not forget that. [Applause.]

Many laws have been passed that are clearly unconstitutional, and I want the Members of Congress to know this whether they like it or not. We must confine ourselves to the Constitution and the power delegated to Congress by it. The Supreme Court passes only on the constitutionality of the legislation we enact. Congress and the Supreme Court are subservient to the people. Under the Constitution, neither has the right to pass any law unless it comes within constitutional limitations. I say this has not always been followed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In 1934 Congress passed the Gold Reserve Act, in which the gold was recalled from circulation and taken over by the Federal Government. I want you to know that that gold belongs to the people and is their property, just as much as a house is property. When Congress enacted a law that deprived the people of the very property they had earned, that they had dug out of the ground with their fingers, it did something that is clearly not within the Constitution of the United States; and it was not living up to its obligation to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.

I want to speak about something else before closing, because I shall have something more to say later on.

In the same Gold Reserve Act you set aside $2,000,000,000 which was to represent the increment on the gold when its value was reduced from 25.8 to 15.25 grains of gold ninetenths fine, and you gave that $2,000,000,000 to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of the Treasury to be used in any manner they cared to use it. That was all right, but you said in that act that no officer of the United States could ask for an accounting of the $2,000,000,000. You had no right to do that.

In section 9 of the Constitution you will find that-

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

What right did you or what right did the Supreme Court have to pass a bill that absolutely denied the right of the people to an accounting for that $2,000,000,000, as is clearly provided for in the Constitution?

I have no animosity or ill feeling toward the Democrats, because I like them, and I like the Republicans as well, naturally, because I do belong to the Republican Party. But as a Representative of the people of Montana I want you to know that when I sit here in Congress I represent with all of you the 48 States of the Union, and we cannot do anything for one State or for the benefit of one State without hurting the others, and this is a point we must bear in mind.

I do not want to go into any lengthy discussion now, because I shall speak about this later on; but I want you to think this over. We must get back to the foundation upon which our Government is built, and that foundation is the Constitution of the United States.

You have established about 75 private corporations by specific acts of Congress, and I would like to be informed of any provision of the Constitution that has given you the right to create corporations by specific acts of Congress. I want you to tell me that. [Applause.]

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who lovest all and forgettest none, and who art always more ready to hear than we to pray: look upon us with Thy favor as at this, the beginning of another day, we commit ourselves unto Thee.

Do Thou so order our unruly wills and affections as to bring them into perfect harmony with Thy will; and we beseech Thee to direct and prosper all our consultations in behalf of our Nation that we may be delivered from all those sins that divide us, from class bitterness and race hatred, from greed and from the arbitrary love of power, from the fear of unemployment and the evils of overwork, from the luxury that enervates and the poverty that stultifies; and grant that universal justice, made radiant by Thy love, may be established among us for all generations. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE

Mr. BILBO. I introduce a bill, for appropriate reference, proposing an amendment to the Social Security Act to provide for the payment by the Federal Government of $30 per month to all persons over the age of 65 years, irrespective of the amounts the States contribute. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed as part of my remarks. It is brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 750) to amend the Social Security Act with respect to old-age assistance, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That effective January 1, 1940, clause (7) of section 2 (a) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as Any payment so made shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for the purposes of this title."

PROPOSED NAVAL BASE AT GUAM

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Naval Board has recommended the establishment of a naval base at Guam. On that subject Gen. William C. Rivers has written me a letter. It is known that General Rivers was stationed at Manila for 11 years and has made a study of the subject. I ask that his letter be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, January 15, 1939.

New York City, January 15, 1939.

The Honorable William E. Borah,

The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Borah: You may have seen the press reports to the effect that a naval board recommends about nine new naval air, submarine, or destroyer bases in the Pacific Ocean. And that two of these new bases are to be in the western Pacific. That is the base recommended at Guam and the base recommended on Wake Island will be west of the 180° meridian.

For the United States to establish a naval air, submarine, and destroyer base at Guam, near and on the strategic flank of Japan, would be, I believe, the most markedly aggressive and provocative military step of the kind which I have seen on our part in the fifty-odd years since I entered West Point. The customary strategic designation for a fortification at such a place as Guam—almost 4,000 miles from our powerful defense base at Hawaii—is that of a salient. In this case Guam would be a far-away and indefensible salient. salient

Should the Government of Japan establish a fortified air, submarine, and destroyer base on the strategic flank of the United States—say, in the Gulf of California—the people of our own country would naturally consider such action a threat to the safety of the United States.

the United States.

Our principal authority on naval matters, Admiral Leahy, said last winter to the Naval Committee that the Navy would be "seriously inadequate to the task of sending a naval expedition to the Philippines," even after the increases in the fleet have been completed. Again, "I doubt if we could undertake such an expedition with three times the increase." Also, "the defensive line of the American Navy at the present time reaches from the Aleutian Islands to the Hawalian Islands, to Samoa, and to the Canal." Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM C. RIVERS Major General, United States Army, retired.

THE AGRICULTURAL SITUATION

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a letter from a farmer in northern Missouri which definitely sets out the ideas of a farmer on the farm situation.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAREDO, Mo., January 8, 1939.

Hon. Harry S. Truman,

Washington, D.C.

My Dear Senator: I am pleased to have your letter of the 3d, but, as the Agricultural Act is so comprehensive, I am afraid I can't define all its faults in writing. It has been drawn up by college professors and farm leaders, the latter the farmers who farm the farmer; and if it would work in one place, it would fail farm the farmer; and if it would work in one place, it would fail to do the job in two other places.

I am convinced that you and the majority of all Senators and Representatives of Congress are sincere in helping the farmer, but can there really be any help? When you legislate to remedy one evil you are creating two.

The name "soil-conservation program" is all right. We need it; as in my 22 years in Grundy County I have seen millions of tons of soil going wastefully to the river, and today over 50 percent of all of our top soil, including bottom land, which does not erode very much, is gone; and under the soil-conservation program it is going faster than before.

We are rated here as a commercial corn county and are restricted going faster than before.

We are rated here as a commercial corn county and are restricted in planting corn. The man who has practiced soil conservation has the most restrictions, and the fellow who has butchered his farm the greatest allotment. As a result the man with good bottom land can't comply and plants far in excess of what he would ordinarily plant. And the man who has most of his land plowed has a large corn base, plants corn to the limit, and fills out the balance with Atlas Sorgo and takes from three to five times as much plant food out of the soil as corn will, but he is still in compliance. Only about 25 percent of the farmers in Grundy County are in compliance for 1938. We are raising more corn now than before we had a program. Nineteen hundred and thirty-seven was the first year that corn was shipped out of Laredo since I have been here, and the local price was terminal market minus expenses, and before 1937 it was plus expenses.

You know the statistics of the increase of corn in the cotton, tobacco, and wheat States to the detriment of the Corn Belt.

tobacco, and wheat States to the detriment of the Corn Belt. Now they are stressing more livestock and dairying, another upset in a few years in the agricultural balance.

In a few years in the agricultural balance.

I have a neighbor who married in 1932 and rented a very poor 160 acres, was in debt for all he owned, stayed on the place during the worst years we ever had in Grundy County. He had a sale recently and then bought a farm with $2,500 cash, comfortable household goods, a new car, and good farming equipment. I know of lots and lots of farmers who inherited good farms in good times and are broke today. Surely there is no legislative remedy for such cases. remedy for such cases.

The curtailment of production is our greatest source of unem-The curtailment of production is our greatest source of unemployment. Farm laborers out of work went on W. P. A. work, and those at work envied those on W. P. A. and quit and went there also. The farmer bought a tractor, plowed all he could, wants to sell his grain direct from the field, and let fences, ditches, weeds, and buildings take care of themselves. The money put out on the wheat program is an absolute waste, as the wheat farmer only wants to work 60 days out of the year, has cheap land, low taxes, and is the laziest man in this United States of America. America.

If any money is given to farmers direct, I favor a soll-conserva-tion program in the fullest sense of the word. I mean by that a rotation program; in the Corn Belt no corn or row crops to be planted unless then fallow after good sod. Then corn, corn, seeding grass seed with wheat or oats and again left at least 2 years in meadow, and eliminate all land unfit for plowing.

A set-up of benefit payments could be worked out whereby most farmers could comply and our surplus problem solved. Today one can draw benefit payments and at the same time farm one piece of ground continuously and most of the money received can be used for anything.

The money received for compliance should only be used and paid out for conding. Imping towarding creditating weeds storping

As 58 percent of all land in Grundy County is owned by absentee landlords—and the same is true elsewhere—the renter should receive the benefit payments and do the work for the good of the ceive the benefit payments and do the work for the good of the farm, so future generations will have some land left to them. If industrial employment increases, we will have no overproduction of farm products; one family can eat a lot of corn at one meal with a generous supply of choice beef.

Everything possible should be done to stop land speculation and to encourage ownership of a farm as a home. Legislation should be enacted to place community sales and concentration yards under the same strict supervision as public stockyards. This would stop direct buying by packers, unfair trade practices, and the spread of disease. disease.

Low rates of interest are essential, but only on good collateral. The way the Farm Security Administration is dishing out money is harmful to most recipients and also the United States Treasury. God did not create two men alike, and certainly he did not intend to endow everyone with an executive mind.

Sorry I did not have the use of a typewriter and hope you can make this out. In case you are not clear on any subject, I would feel honored if you would ask.

With kindest regards, I remain, Very respectfully yours,

L. ESCHENHEIMER.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE-ATTORNEY GENERAL

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank Murphy, of Michigan, to be Attorney General.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I should like to discuss the nomination of Mr. Murphy.

Sometime ago the President of the United States is reported to have made a statement in which he said:

The measure of a man's sincerity is not what he says but what he does.

By the standard of the President's own words let us measure the qualifications of Mr. Murphy for the office of Attorney General of the United States.

To start with, in all probability a man acting as President of the United States would try to secure a well-qualified man for Attorney General of the United States. Therefore, let us look at Mr. Murphy's record in the legal field.

He was admitted to the bar in June 1914. He entered a law office in Detroit shortly after that time. He remained as a law clerk in that firm for 3 years.

On August 9, 1919, he entered the office of the United States district attorney of Detroit as chief assistant to the district attorney, and remained in that office until March 1, 1922. He then entered a law partnership with a man by the name of Edward G. Kemp, and remained in private practice until January 1924.

In 1923 Mr. Murphy was elected judge of the recorder's court and took office on January 2, 1924. He remained in that position until he became mayor of Detroit in 1930. He resigned as mayor in May 1933 to accept appointment as Governor General and High Commissioner of the Philippines. He remained in that office until 1936, when he was elected Governor of Michigan.

The recorder's court of the city of Detroit is a sort of a police court, having little jurisdiction over civil suits. It is wholly confined to criminal actions. If you will examine the records of the Supreme Court of Michigan of that time, you will find that Mr. Murphy did not have a single case before the Supreme Court of Michigan during the time he had membership in the firm of Murphy & Kemp.

Let us consider his status with the Supreme Court of the United States. Up to the time Mr. Murphy was appointed Attorney General he had never been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States, and after receiving the appointment he had to appear and secure admittance to practice before that body.

Now a little back history:

When Mr. Justice Hugo Black was appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Murphy made this statement:

In Justice Black's appointment to the Supreme Court we have a man of excellent character, great ability, a great liberal, and a progressive.

Apparently Mr. Murphy's views coincide with those of Mr. Justice Black. He implies by his statement that he sees eye to eye with Mr. Justice Black.

On November 8 of last year—which was rather a disastrous day for some persons in some sections of the country—Mr. Murphy was repudiated by an overwhelming vote by the people of the State of Michigan, the people of the State who knew him best, his home folks. I am not against Mr. Murphy today because he was repudiated by the voters of Michigan. I am against him for the same reason for which the voters of Michigan were against him—because he is a symbol in this country today of opposition to law and order and some of the precepts of good citizenship in this country.

Mr. Murphy's nomination and his confirmation by this body constitute a direct slap at the people of Michigan and the law-abiding citizens of the country. A man in whom the people of his own State, who knew him best, had not enough confidence, after a fair trial, to reelect as Governor, is now elevated to direct one of the great departments of this Government, the Department of Justice.

Let us look for just a moment at Mr. Murphy's record the record by which the President of the United States says all men should be judged. Let us look first at Mr. Murphy's record as mayor.

His record as mayor of the fourth largest city in the United States is conspicuous for its flagrant, baseless disregard for the law which he was pledged to uphold. When a mob marched on the Ford factory in 1932 Murphy's statement in the Detroit News, under date of March 15, appeared as follows:

Your parade was without permit, in violation of the city ordinance, and yet we had the police there to protect you and everybody else.

As a result of that march, 4 men were killed and 28 were injured. This was the protection which he gave as mayor of Detroit, to which he referred—4 men dead and 28 more injured, through Mr. Murphy's failure, by his own admission, to enforce the laws of Michigan and the city ordinances of the city of Detroit.

By the way, it was while he was mayor of Detroit that Mr. Murphy came into close connection with the philosophy of the President, that is, of being a big spender. As long as he was spending the public's money, he was generous indeed.

His record as Governor shows a striking resemblance to his record as mayor; providing a similar but even more serious example of his failure to enforce the law. After having solemnly sworn to uphold the laws and the Constitution of the United States, and the constitution and the laws of the State of Michigan, in his oath as Governor, Murphy proceeded to break that oath by allowing the occupation of Flint automobile plants by a Communist-led mob, thus depriving citizens of Flint of liberty and property without due process of law.

The court, having jurisdiction over that territory, had issued an order that those who had taken possession of the automobile plants, and beaten and assaulted citizens of Flint, be ejected. The sheriff of Genesee County and other peace officers stood ready to enforce the order. As Governor, Murphy had the ability and the means to enforce that order. While felonies calling for imprisonment under the laws of Michigan were being committed, Mr. Murphy was holding conferences in a Flint hotel and refusing to permit the State police to go to the aid of the local authorities who were being hopelessly overpowered in their efforts to restore order. At no time during the course of the unlawful destruction and occupation of private property did Mr. Murphy publicly ask or demand that the "sit downers" abandon their lawless activities. On the contrary, he insisted that sheriffs and peace officials refrain from carrying out the court order. In fact, he emphasized that the State police and the National Guard, under his direct authority, would be used to protect those in possession of the factory. There could be no question that he had no right or authority, on any grounds, to hinder or cause to be set aside the law of the land.

I wish now to review the record, in light of this newly discovered or newly produced, shall I call it, evidence, that is produced by the man whom it should best serve.

Let us ponder on the setting of this new and astounding letter. Frank Murphy said that he read a virtual ultimatum to John L. Lewis the day before the automobile strike was settled in Michigan 2 years ago. It is true that this alleged letter, written to a man with whom Murphy was in daily conference along with officials of the strike-closed factories, is only claimed to have been written more than 40 days after the strike had been in progress. That alone indicates great restraint. The letter might have been written the day after the strike started just as well.

Why did Frank Murphy wait until now to produce that letter? With charming and disarming frankness he told reporters that he had not used the letter in the campaign for reelection in Michigan because his personal fortunes were secondary.

He might have added that a Governor cannot maintain the confidence of the people unless he upholds the law.

This misunderstood ex-Governor added—and I quote again from the Washington Post of last Saturday:

I acted as mediator right up to the end of my term for, as recently as December 16, what might have been a very serious strike broke out in certain automobile plants. We were able to settle it, however.

I think a public official has to be accessible to both sides and never say or do anything that might make either side lose confidence in him. There was no point in making that letter public while I was Governor—except in defense of myself personally. And my personal fortunes are a secondary matter.

That is the end of the quotation. That is pretty noble, pretty self-sacrificing. By what logic would a plain assertion of just policy impair the efficiency of a Governor's arbitration powers? By what stretch of imagination would a statement ordering John L. Lewis to obey the law destroy the confidence of the people in a Governor? Have we gone so far in this country that a statement requiring obedience to the law, coming from the Governor of a sovereign State, would discredit him? No wonder the people of Michigan had enough of Frank Murphy.

We have had many sides to the so-called picture, and I desire to ask very frankly, what confidence can we have in a law-enforcement official, the Attorney General of the United States, who has this record behind him? Remember, Mr. Roosevelt says that the measure of a man's sincerity is not what he says, but what he does.

I wish now to refer to one other matter in connection with Mr. Murphy. While campaigning for the Governorship of Michigan, between January 1, 1936, and September 4, 1936, he repeatedly gave the voters of Michigan the impression that he had resigned as High Commissioner of the Philippines. During that period, however, while he was giving the voters of Michigan the impression he had resigned, he received $14,500 in salary as High Commissioner. He went off the Federal pay roll on September 4, 1936, and went back on after the election on November 4. Between November 4 and December 31, after he had been elected Governor, he received $2,850 in salary. This information was supplied by the Bureau of Insular Affairs. Some of this time while Mr. Murphy was drawing the salary he was down in Habana, Cuba, or Florida basking in the sunlight.

It may be easy for some people to forget-and I know many people in this body want to forget about the record of Mr. Murphy in Michigan-but it was part of Michigan's darkest history: it was a history of the start of sit-down strikes in America, and I cannot forget it, even if that would be courteous to the President of the United States; and the people of Michigan could not forget it on November 8 last.

Now I wish to speak regarding Mr. Murphy's communistic activities, or his communistic associations, and I shall have some very interesting documents to present.

I produce here and I shall offer for the RECORD a letter from the editor of the New South, which is a journal published in Birmingham, Ala., whose policies are of a communistic nature. I shall read from this, and it may be interesting to some on the other side, because the writer discusses his favorite candidate for President in 1940. I read:

There is not as yet very much discussion in the South on the There is not as yet very much discussion in the South on the subject of the Democratic nominee in 1940. The majority of the southern people support the President and his program, and to them it is not very important whether the candidate should be Mr. Roosevelt himself or someone else who can be trusted to carry on the New Deal. But, on the other hand, there is a reactionary element interested in nominating a candidate who would abandon Mr. Roosevelt's progressive program and return to the old days of free exploitation and disregard of human want and suffering. These reactionary forces are strongest in Mississippi, South Carolina, and to some extent in Virginia, and weakest in Florida, Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina. tucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina.

The names now mentioned—Ickes, Jackson, Wallace, Farley, and

The names now mentioned—ickes, Jackson, Wallace, Farley, and Hull—are all regarded as New Deal men and are all undesirable and unacceptable to the "right" wing forces, with a slight possibility they might accept Mr. Farley. Other New Deal people who should be on the list of possibilities are Governor Murphy, of Michigan, and Hopkins.

In other words, the names of Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Murphy are deliberately used as indicating their choice for President in 1940. I continue reading:

We do not mention the candidates of the reactionaries—a minority, yet a noisy one. Their logical candidate is Senator Clark, with Wheeler and Garner as other possibilities, and maybe even George or Tydings, if one or both should be successful in winning renomination.

I respect those gentlemen. I am rather upset at this objection of the Communists of the country to their nomination by the Democratic Party.

Many things may happen between now and 1940, including changes in the international situation. Now, it is only clear that the lines between the progressive and reactionary forces in the party are becoming sharper.

While the majority of the southern voters are behind Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal, this majority would be very much greater if large sections of the population were not disfranchised by poll taxes and other regulations.

In spite of these restrictions, we have had the examples of Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, and North Carolina, where candidates supporting the New Deal have defeated opponents openly opposed to the Roosevelt program or correctly regarded by the voters as being "yes, but" men. Reactionaries as yet can point only to South Caroline. only to South Carolina.

Very truly yours,

PAUL CROUCH. Editor, The New South.

So Senators see that Mr. Murphy, as well as Mr. Hopkins, whose nomination we are to consider later this week, now have the endorsement of some of the Communists of the country for the office of President of the United States.

I now wish to take up a document called the Great Sit-Down Strike. It is published and distributed by William Weinstone, secretary of the Michigan district of the Communist Party, United States of America. Mr. Weinstone is, in a manner of speaking, the moving spirit of the Communist Party in that section of the country. Let us see what he has to say about Mr. Murphy:

Finally, but of first-rate importance among the reasons for the victory, must be considered the attitude of the Government. By the government I mean, in this case, the attitude of the Governor of the State of Michigan and of President Roosevelt. The defeat of the reactionaries in the last election created more favorable conditions for the winning of the strike, for it gave encouragement to the workers and was the signal that the moment was ripe to start the battle. It brought into office in Lansing and Washington administrations that were committed to the continuation of the democratic form of government and which had promised to assist the workers in obtaining improved standards of living and the right of collective bargaining. Had the Landon Republicans come into office they would have taken the usual hard-boiled tory attitude on labor unionism and strikes.

Then he proceeds at some length to quote Lenin. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to read that quotation, but I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, if there be no

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The quotation referred to is as follows:

Lenin has noted two methods of rule of the capitalist class.

Lenin has noted two methods of rule of the capitalist class. He says:

"The bourgeoisie in all countries in practice inevitably elaborates two systems of governing, two methods of struggle for its interests and for the defense of its domination, and these two methods now replace one another and interlace in different combinations. These are, first the method of violence, the method of refusing all concessions to the labor movement, the method of supporting all ancient and dying institutions, the method of uncompromising rejection of reform. * * * The second method is the method of 'liberalism,' of steps toward the development of political rights, of reforms, of concessions, etc.

"The bourgeoiste passes from one method to another not through the malicious design of individuals and not by accident, but by force of the basic contradictoriness of its own position."

Mr. BRIDGES. Following what I have just referred to, William Weinstone says:

This is the type of government which rules today in Lansing and Washington. And the contradiction which Lenin notes in such a condition was present even in the short period of the

Then I exhibit here a paper which is put out by the State committee of the Communist Party of Michigan, urging the support of Governor Murphy as standing for all their ideas.

I could go on adding other communistic evaluations and endorsements of that gentleman. Those endorsements have not been given without cause.

Let us review the record of Mr. Frankensteen, who was appointed to the Michigan State Welfare Board. Frankensteen was accused by his former friend and chief, Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers, of being a Communist. Murphy showed no concern. He went right ahead and made the appointment.

Let us now look into a few of the other things that may be interesting in Mr. Murphy's record. Did Mr. Murphy concern himself for the decent, law-abiding citizens of Michigan when Communist agitators took over the direction of traffic in and around the Flint area in January 1937 when from trucks containing loud speakers they were directing traffic? No. His voice at that time was not raised in behalf of the decent, law-respecting people of the State of Michigan or of the United States. The New York Times related that Governor Murphy refused the request of the prosecuting attorney, Joseph Josephs, of Flint, to allow State police to serve warrants on 300 persons in connection with the riot at the Chevrolet factory in Flint. Josephs said there were not enough police and the sheriff's deputies to serve warrants when he asked for State assistance. This was not a matter of bloodshed or rioting or trying to remove the people from the factories. This was a matter of serving warrants on persons connected with the riot resulting in injury to more than 25 persons, including officials of the law.

Members of the Senate, Mr. Murphy says that he does not condone sit-down strikes. What did he do? Before the committee of the Senate the other day, 2 years after the sitdown strikes, he said, "They are illegal." He said that he was not for them. Did it take 2 years to make up his mind? Did it take until the time that he was appointed Attorney General of the United States by the President of the United

The President of the United States should have wide latitude in the choice of members of his Cabinet. He should have the privilege, within certain limitations, of picking out whom he cares to serve with him. But the Constitution of the United States provides for Senate confirmation by this body, and a solemn obligation rests on us as Members of this body as to how we cast our vote on this confirmation today. Men took their office here as United States Senators only after having taken an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States and its laws.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator read the hearings before the Senate committee on Attorney General Murphy?

Mr. BRIDGES. I read at least part of them; yes.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator read that part of the hearings in which Mr. Murphy read into the record the statement which he had prepared during the sit-down strikes, showing that he then believed and then was ready to state that a sitdown strike was illegal, and he was prevented from issuing the statement only because the strike was settled?

Mr. BRIDGES. Well-

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator read that?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes, I did; and I think it is very fortunate that Mr. Murphy had a recurrence of memory after 2 years.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator said awhile ago that Mr. Murphy did not find out that a sit-down strike was illegal until just the other day, 2 years after its occurrence.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is the first time that the people of this country had any information that Mr. Murphy had any change of heart in respect to the matter of the sit-down

Mr. MINTON. The people who were negotiating with Mr. Murphy knew it at that time.

Mr. BRIDGES. The citizens of Michigan did not, and the people of the United States did not, and Mr. Murphy very quietly kept it to himself for 2 long years. He thought probably it was safer to do so.

Mr. Murphy is known in Detroit as "the dew and sunshine boy," "the dew and sunshine mayor," and I have no doubt that if he comes to the Attorney General's office, as he undoubtedly is going to, because for various reasons most Senators are committed in their views to vote for him, that we shall have dew and sunshine in the Attorney General's

Mr. President, this question presents a serious issue. Most Senators have made up their minds to vote for Mr. Murphy. Some Senators no doubt will vote for him because they believe the President should have wide latitude in the matter of choosing his Cabinet. Others will vote for him because of obligations to Mr. Murphy, and others because they like him. A few will vote for him because they believe he will make a good Attorney General. I wish to say that I believe that in this appointment the President has deliberately picked out a man who has failed to demonstrate his legal capacity for that great, high office, a man who is a "lame duck," who has been repudiated by the people of his own State.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly. Mr. MINTON. Chief Justice Hughes was a "lame duck," was he not? He was repudiated by the people in 1916, was

Mr. BRIDGES. Oh, yes; that is right.
Mr. MINTON. Former Chief Justice Taft was a "lame duck," was he not?

Mr. BRIDGES. That is right.

Mr. MINTON. A couple of the judges now sitting in the courts of the District of Columbia were "lame ducks" when they were appointed. The Acting Comptroller, Richard Elliott, is a "lame duck." There are many now occupying office who were, at the time of their appointment, Republican "lame ducks."

Mr. BRIDGES. There have been many "lame duck" appointments in the past, I will admit to the Senator from Indiana, but such a practice did not become popular until the present administration, and after November 8, when there was a necessity for it.

Mr. MINTON. But it was all right, was it, in the past, when Republican administrations were appointing Republican "lame ducks" to office?

Mr. BRIDGES. The Republicans will be doing some appointing around here in 2 more years.

Mr. MINTON. That is what the Senator thinks.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have every reason to believe that that statement is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I gladly yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire guarantee that if the Republicans do any appointing 2 years hence that they will not appoint any "lame ducks"?

Mr. BRIDGES. I cannot make that guaranty absolutely, but I do not believe we will have many "lame ducks" on hand, because all of our people will be reelected in 1940.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I oppose the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], for there is great danger that the Senator from New Hampshire will in the near future become a lame duck, because a great newspaper recently quoted a distinguished Republican Member of the Senate as having said that if he could, he would expel the Senator from New Hampshire from the Republican Party.

Mr. BRIDGES. I would appreciate it if the Senator from West Virginia would name the man who made that statement. If the Senator has read it, he ought to be willing to state the name of the man who made the statement that I ought to be expelled from the Republican Party. I will sayand I do not know who made the statement-that my Republicanism and my Americanism probably will equal that of the gentleman to whom the Senator referred. It will probably equal the Americanism of the Senator from West Virginia also, or of any Senator on the other side of the aisle. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, so far as I know, no one has challenged the Americanism of the Senator from New Hamp-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair remind Senators that they cannot enter into discussions in the Senate without being recognized by the Chair and with the consent of the speaker.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I do not think I have more to say on the Murphy appointment, except that I believe that Mr. Murphy should be denied confirmation by this body. I believe the appointment is unwarranted. As I said, I realize that the vote for Mr. Murphy will be in the affirmative by a substantial margin. Please remember, however, that Mr. Murphy may be a noose around the neck of the administra-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.
Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall be through in just a moment.

I am opposed to the nomination of Mr. Murphy, and I hope we will have a roll call on the vote when the time comes.

Mr. BROWN obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BROWN. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that following the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire, the testimony in the hearing before the subcommittee on Mr. Murphy's nomination be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NOMINATION OF FRANK MURPHY

UNITED STATES SENATE

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,

The subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary,

Washington, D. C., January 13, 1939.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to notice, in room 318, Senate Office Building, Senator M. M. Logan (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators Logan (chairman), Hatch, Burke, Norris, and

Senator Logan. The committee will come to order. Senator PITTMAN requests me to say that he has been called to the White House and is unable to be present.

The nomination of Attorney General Murphy was favorably reported by this subcommittee earlier in the week, or the subcommittee voted to make a favorable report to the full committee. On yesterday I received this communication from the Attorney General which I desire to read into the record: eral, which I desire to read into the record:

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, January 12, 1939.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I wanted to indicate to you my willingness and desire to appear before your committee for the purpose of giving it any information with respect to my qualifications for Attorney General.

I have communicated with Senator Ashurst who informs me I have communicated with Senator Ashoust who informs me that, despite the fact that your committee reported unanimously in favor of my confirmation to the Judiciary Committee as a whole, it would be proper to address this communication to you. I will, of course, be willing to accommodate myself to the time set by the committee for such hearing should this request be in order, and would be greatly obliged if you would notify me when the same could take place.

the same could take place.

Sincerely,

FRANK MURPHY.

STATEMENT OF HON. FRANK MURPHY, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Senator Logan. Mr. Attorney General, immediately upon receipt of the letter which I have just read, I consulted with the members of the subcommittee, and we decided to hold a hearing this afternoon at 2 o'clock. I understand you have a prepared statement. You may read that into the record without interruption, and after you have concluded any member of the committee who desires to ask you any questions will be given that opportunity. You may now proceed.

Attorney General Murphy. Thank you, Senator.

It is, I know, unusual for a nominee for high office to ask to raise an issue before a Senate subcommittee sitting to judge his qualifications for office, after that subcommittee has approved his nomination.

There has been much public discussion concerning my conduct as Governor of Michigan during sit-down strikes in Flint and other Michigan cities in the winter of 1937.

Since that issue has not been raised and discussed before the subcommittee by anyone else I have asked your permission to raise it myself.

With the subcommittee's permission, I should like first to read this prepared statement explaining briefly the labor situation in Michigan which confronted me when I became Governor and what I did to meet it. I believe that such preliminary explanation on my part would save the time of the committee by making it possible for me to answer more clearly and concisely any questions which any members of the committee may thereafter wish to ask.

Which any members of the committee may thereafter wish to ask.

I took office on January 1, 1937. The General Motors strike was already on. It had begun at Fiint 2 days before, on December 30.

The General Motors strike which greeted me in office was not an isolated phenomenon. I inherited a general atmosphere of tense labor unrest. During 1936 there had been a number of other important strikes—some of them sit-downs—in Michigan and elsewhere and to the best of my recollection force had not been used by the public authorities to cure the situations.

Special conditions in Michigan made labor relations generally

Special conditions in Michigan made labor relations generally more difficult than anywhere else in the country.

Michigan industry—in the great automobile factories and parts plants—is more highly organized on a machine basis than anywhere else, and until very lately irregularity in employment was sharper there than in other parts of the Nation.

The depression had probably hit industrial labor harder in Michigan than anywhere else; I know that when I was mayor of Detroit the relief problem hit us much earlier than anywhere else. The speed of operations in the automobile industry requires that its workers be comparatively young men. They are well educated and very conscious of what they consider their rights as American citizens. They are high-spirited and not easy to discipline. When I took office, their union organizations were only a few months old, and the natural discipline problems of newly organized unions were accentuated by the fact that the employers had refused to recognize these unions.

That points up the most salient fact in the situation when I took office.

There was no operating legal machinery for settling labor dis-

There was no operating legal machinery for settling labor disputes; the Wagner Act was at that time practically out of operation under decisions of lower Federal courts. As a Governor faced ation under decisions of lower Federal courts. As a Governor faced with the fact of unprecedented strikes which had to be handled, I had to devise ways and means of handling them as I went along. Many employers—acting under advice of counsel—had refused to bargain collectively and had maintained that the Wagner Act was wholly unconstitutional, and a number of lower Federal courts had upheld their contentions. This created a keen feeling on the part of labor that workers were being deprived of the benefits of the duly enacted National Labor Relations Act. Labor was further embittered by the feeling that their efforts at self-organization were being frustrated by industrial espionage.

In many industries organized labor was something new; it was not recognized but was bitterly fought by the employers; in turn it had not fully acquired a sense of its own responsibility and was not readily amenable to the discipline of its more seasoned leaders.

nt had not fully acquired a sense of its own responsibility and was not readily amenable to the discipline of its more seasoned leaders. Misguided, inexperienced, and undisciplined workers were undoubtedly fascinated by the novelty of the sit-down as a new industrial weapon and seized upon it as a method of self-defense and reprisal against what they in many instances believed justifiably or unjustifiably were lawless tactics upon the part of employers. employers.

Against this background thousands of otherwise peaceful, lawabiding, hard-working citizens went on strike in Flint, Detroit, and other cities. They had determined that their right to bargain colother cities. They had determined that their right to bargain collectively should be recognized. They were determined to occupy their employers' factories until their employers recognized their right to bargain collectively. They were not a handful of common criminals who might be dispersed by a few police. They were thousands of honest citizens.

Of course, they were guilty of violating the law. Their conduct was unlawful and unjustified. But in their own minds they believed that they were only defending their own rights against what they believed to be the lawless refusal of their employers to recognize their unions.

their unions

In that situation, with no recognized machinery to settle the dispute, I faced a condition and not a theory.

As the chief executive of the State of Michigan it was my duty to

As the chief executive of the State of Michigan it was my duty to see that the laws were faithfully executed. But I conceived it to be my duty as Governor to see that the laws are executed in the manner best calculated in my judgment to serve the original and the ultimate purpose of all laws—to preserve public order and insure public safety. To have executed the laws in a manner calculated to cause further breach thereof, further disorders, and even riot and bloodshed would have been false to my own oath of office and to be low. and to the law.

In the first instance, of course, law enforcement is a matter for the local authorities. If they require aid in addition to the regular police force, they may call upon the Governor for assistance or themselves swear in additional deputies.

Whenever the local authorities did call upon me for aid, not only

Whenever the local authorities did call upon me for aid, not only were they authorized and directed to swear in additional deputies but in many cases members of the State police were sent to aid them, and in one case a large detachment of the National Guard.

In only one case was I called upon by local authorities for assistance in the enforcement of a court writ. That was at Flint.

There the technical legal situation was badly complicated from the practical emotional viewpoint by the fact that counsel for General Motors obtained their first court order from a judge who was discovered to be a substantial stockholder of the company.

When this fact was disclosed the company promptly withdrew its application before that judge and sought its relief from another, and I am convinced that the company officials had no prior knowledge of the disqualifying interest of the first judge. But, however innocent the mistake, it was difficult to eradicate the impression from the minds of the workers that the company had tried to secure a court order from a judge who was not disinterested.

a court order from a judge who was not disinterested.

When the writ of attachment was finally obtained, on a Friday, negotiations between the company's officials and the union representatives were progressing, and I had reason to believe that a set-tlement would be reached over the week end.

I did not ignore the writ of attachment. On the contrary, I warned the union representatives that I would enforce it. But I knew, as did the union representatives and the company's officials, that the literal enforcement of the writ at that moment would not only disrupt negotiations, but could not be carried out without the gravest risk of property damage, riot, and even bloodshed, which would leave bitterness and ill feeling between the company and the men for years to come.

I realized that on the law of averages troops could not be turned loose in such a situation without risking the lives of some misguided, ordinarily peaceful citizens.

Having been a captain in the World War I could not look upon young men of the age of these strikers against whom these troops young hen of the age of these strikers against whom these troops would be sent and forget that there might come a time when we might be asking them to be troops themselves.

Consequently, when the sheriff asked for additional deputies to help execute the writ, I told him that I thought he would be wiser to delay action over the week end, as settlement appeared to be imminent

On the one side the company knew of my action and did not

On the other side the union representatives knew that if a settlement was not reached and the plants peacefully evacuated, the writ would be executed.

And at the plants I had a large detachment of the National Guard continuously on duty prepared to preserve order and ready for any emergency.

I believe that I did my duty to "see that the laws are faithfully executed," and to preserve the peace and dignity of the State of Michigan believe that "faithful execution" by the Governor of a State includes wise administration of the law and not merely its literal instantaneous application at any cost.

I conceived it my duty as the Governor of the State not only to see that the writs of the courts were executed but also to see that peace and order were maintained.

I conceived it to be my duty as the Governor of the State not only to see that the law was enforced after it was broken but to see that the law was observed before it was broken.

To safeguard not only the enforcement of the law but its ob-servance, I conceived it my duty to exert every effort to replace industrial strife and unrest which would wreck the economy of my State with industrial peace and order which would preserve the economy of my State.

I have never condoned the sit-down strike or countenanced disobedience of a court order. From the very beginning of the labor trouble in Michigan, I warned the union representatives that the sit-down strike was illegal, and, further, that its use would alienate public opinion.

I believe in vigorous law enforcement. However, when there is widespread disobedience to law, it is not enough to enforce the law; it is also necessary to discover and eliminate the causes of that widespread disobedience.

So the Michigan labor situation with which I had to deal inso the Michigan labor situation with which I had to deal involved something more than law enforcement. I was dealing not with a few vicious lawbreakers, but with thousands of self-respecting workers who felt that they had genuine grievances of long standing. It was my duty to enforce the law, but it was also my duty to hold their respect for the law. And that I could do only by making them feel that the State was not indifferent to what they honestly felt were their grievances.

When a settlement was finally reached, the course I had followed was widely approved by the local press and by responsible spokesmen on either side.

At this point I would like permission to read some of these letters and editorials.

Senator Logan. Very well.

Attorney General MURPHY. The first one is from the President: "Hon. FRANK MURPHY,

"Governor of Michigan, Detroit:
"Accept hearty congratulations upon your splendid work in connection with the automobile-strike settlement. Not only the interests directly concerned in the dispute owe you a debt of gratitude but the general public has reason for rejoicing that an acute situation, which threatened serious disorder and dislocation, has been amicably adjusted through negotiation. Yours has been a high public service nobly performed for which I desire to express the thanks of the Nation.

"FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT."

On February 12, 1937, Alfred Sloan, Jr., stated to the New York Times the following:

"General Motors is gratified that, by the unremitting efforts of Governor Murphy, an agreement has been made under which the General Motors plants now illegally held by strikers will be evacuated forthwith, the strike terminated, and production resumed at once at once.

"After reviewing the terms of settlement and giving text of the letter to Governor Murphy, the statement concluded: The corporation, its workers, and the public are indebted to the Honorable Frank Murphy, assisted by Federal Conciliator James F. Dewey, for his untring and conscientious efforts, as well as the fairness with which he has handled a most difficult situation. Only his efforts have made it possible to resume work at this time."

I would like to read two letters written to me on February 12

I would like to read two letters written to me on February 12 by distinguished members of the profession.

Senator Logan. Very well.

Attorney General Murphy. The first is from Mr. Newton D. Baker. In justice to Mr. Baker I think I should say that he subsequently criticized my conduct on certain occasions connected with strikes. I would like the record to show that. But this is the only letter he ever wrote to me, and this was his judgment on the strike that involved the only court order that was made.

It was written the day following the settlement of the General Motors strike and reads as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 12, 1937.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY. Office of the Governor,

My Dear Governor Murphy: I beg leave to express my deep satisfaction at the result of your intervention in the so-called General Motors strike. The settlement of that tremendous controversy has afforded relief to a multitude of workers and their families who allorded relief to a multitude of workers and their families who may or may not have been misled into an extralegal position about their rights, but that question can be debated and settled under circumstances involving less passion and less suffering than would have been entailed but for the happy adjustment brought about through your influence. No humane person could have desired to see the struggle harshly fought through even though he believed, as I do believe, in the entire illegality of the sit-down strike.

But quite apart from the details of the settlement and issues left to be worked out, I venture to rejoice that the settlement has been effected through the influence of a Governor of a great State. There was a time in our history when men resigned from the Sarate from Cabinet positions and even from the Chief. State. There was a time in our history when men resigned from the Senate, from Cabinet positions, and even from the Chief Justiceship of the Supreme Court of the United States to accept the responsible and dignified office of Governor of their States, No office could be more important. Both its influence and its authority in the maintenance of order and progress in society are impossible of exaggeration. The preservation of Michigan as an indestructible State in an indestructible Union is involved in the retention by the record of services of their forms of leaf and the services of confidence in their forms of leaf and the services of the service retention by the people of confidence in their form of local government and its efficiency to solve local and domestic problems. By your intervention and success you have heartened all of us who believe in the dignity of your office and in the necessity of preserving efficient and responsible State governments as indestructible components of a Federal Government dealing with Federal rather than local concerns.

With great respect, Sincerely yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER.

On the same day I received the following letter, written February 12, 1937, from Felix Frankfurter:

LAW SCHOOL OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY, February 12, 1937.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY

Hon. Frank Murphy.

Dear Governor Murphy: I know enough about such major industrial controversies as the General Motors strike to know how little an outsider like me knows of the real complexities and difficulties that had to be resolved. But I also know enough to know what pertinacity, sagacity, and a profound sense of fairness were necessary to prevent an ugly situation from turning into open violence on a large scale, and finally to bring the parties to a peaceful adjustment. And, therefore, I express to you gratitude and admiration from the bottom of my heart.

Very sincerely yours.

Very sincerely yours,

FELIX FRANKFURTER.

There are two editorials I should like to read into the record. Both were written on the 12th of February 1937, the day following the settlement of the strike. One is from the Detroit News, reading as follows:

"THE STRIKE ENDS

"Governor Murphy's wise and unrelenting insistence has brought the General Motors strike to an end without bloodshed. That is the salient fact to those who have faced in imagination what might have happened otherwise.

have happened otherwise.

"As for the details of the settlement, it is hard to see what has been accomplished by the 43-day tie-up of one of the country's largest industries. General Motors at long last has agreed to bargain with the U. A. W. on wages, hours, and conditions of work. But it has been ready to do exactly that almost from the outset of the strike.

"So far as we can see the positions of the union and of the corporation remain virtually where they were 43 days ago. Nothing has been accomplished and nothing proved—unless it be that a handful of strikers can close up the largest mass-production industry, as long as official forbearance allows them to remain in illegal possession of its plants. The forbearance of the corporation also had a good deal to do with the strike's success from that standpoint. that standpoint.

that standpoint.

"In saying that nothing has been accomplished by this strike, one exceedingly important exception must be noted. This is the provision in paragraph 7 of the agreement, included at Governor Murphy's insistence, for settlement by negotiation of future disputes. Once the corporation and union have come to terms on wages, hours, etc., they engage to exhaust 'all opportunities to achieve a satisfactory settlement' of future demands or grievances before another strike is called.

"The Governor's balanced handling of the strike situation and negotiations throughout has merited description as statesmanlike. His position as Governor of the State and embodiment of its legal sovereignty was far from an easy one under the circumstances. Yet he was able at the same time to refrain from recognition of the sit-down strikes and to insist that they be ended without the necessity of forcible ejection. He demanded, above all, that an end be reached without forfeiting in senseless violence the lives of Michigan citizens. the lives of Michigan citizens.

"That was the humane and wise thing to do. But it required of the Governor a feat of balancing that scarcely can be expected of official authority every time a group of workers in the name of collective bargaining seizes possession of another's property." The other is from the Detroit Free Press.

Senator Brown. May I interrupt you to call your attention to the fact that the Detroit Free Press vigorously opposed you in the 1936 campaign for the governorship?

Attorney General Murphy. Yes; but it ran an accurate report of the strike. That editorial is as follows: "That was the humane and wise thing to do. But it required of

"THE STRIKE ENDS

"The agreement under which the U. A. W. sit-down strikes in General Motors Corporation plants at Flint and elsewhere are called off comes in a welcome form at a moment when hope of an early conclusion of the prolonged negotiations in progress before Gov. Frank Murphy seemed at an ebb.

"The adjustment has been reached under conditions suggestive of mutual forbearance, and amid concessions to reason and

"It puts an end to a highly destructive situation which ought never to have arisen, which has hurt many people and which has brought no benefits that could not have been secured in a much less costly way.

"Collective bargaining between men and company can now commence in an orderly way through accredited representatives of both sides; and meanwhile the wheels of industry will turn, and men will be earning wages for the support of their families; considerably increased wages, too, since General Motors, coincidentally with announcement of the agreement, also announces a considerable revision upward of its pay scale.

"The public, which has been one of the chief sufferers during the last 43 days, will fervently echo the hope of Governor Murphy that the adjustment reached may prove to be a contribution to the promotion of peaceful and reasonable labor conciliation in all America to the exclusion of violent, peremptory methods.

"That the long-drawn-out blockade of industry in a vital field

"That the long-drawn-out blockade of industry in a vital field finally has reached a happy conclusion under conditions justifying such a hope, unquestionably is due in large degree to the part the Governor has played in the emergency.

"Mr. Murphy made it clear at the start that he would tolerate neither violence nor disorder. Before all else, good order would be maintained and society given protection, he declared. The support of National Guardsmen called out to make this stand effective, was costly; but the results have justified the expense.

"There is no black tragedy to mourn over today; no bitter aftermath that will rankle.

"At the same time the Governor showed neither bias nor passion. He manifested a good understanding of the situation; and maintained a helpful attitude of impartiality between the parties maintained a helpful attitude of impartiality between the parties to the controversy which earned for him the confidence of both sides and made the good offices he tendered effective.

"Governor Murphy labored hard and patiently, refusing to give up even when the prospect for success in bringing about a peaceful agreement appeared very small and he won out. What he has done deserves recognition throughout Michigan and in the country generally."

generally."

There were other statements and editorials following the strike. I have a number of them, if the members of the committee care to see them.

In subsequent cases I pursued the same policy that had been

In subsequent cases I pursued the same policy that had been followed with approval and wide satisfaction in the General Motors case. I think I prevented some strikes; I know I settled many. I am not saying that later developments were not sometimes disappointing to my hope that industrial peace had been permanently achieved. But I do feel sure that the sit-down strike has now been thoroughly discredited, and I believe we have seen the end of it. Because it is an instrumentality that would undermine and destroy the vital right of the ownership and possession of private property—one of the main pillars upon which our form of economy and indeed our democracy is based.

In the meantime, what all of us in Michigan at that time—management, labor, and government—were trying to achieve by patience with each other has been achieved. The factories of Michigan are running full time—with workable relations between management and labor. Cars are coming off the assembly line, men and women are drawing down wages, investors are making profit and orders for materials are going out through the rest of the country. In comparative terms, that is a peace which few people on the ground in Michigan in the first week of 1937 ever believed could be achieved.—That is what I wanted—that is what we achieved—and that is a result of which no one who believes in the reign of law need be ashamed.

Senator Logan. Does that complete your statement, Mr. Attor-

Senator Logan. Does that complete your statement, Mr. Attorney General?

Attorney General Murphy. Yes; thank you, Senator.

Senator Logan. The opportunity is now afforded to any members of the committee who desire to ask any questions of the Attorney General. I will first ask Senator Norris if he has any questions.

Senator Norris. No questions. Senator Logan. Senator Austin?

Senator Austin. Mr. Chairman, I received a letter from Representative Hoffman this morning, asking me to call to the attention of Attorney General Murphy a letter to him written by Mr. Hoffman, and asking him if he will kindly answer certain interrogatories contained in it. I have observed that the statement the Attorney General has made answers the substance of that letter fully. I now ask Attorney General Murphy if he will kindly put in the record those statutes that are referred to in that letter. I submitted the letter referred to to Attorney General Murphy.

Attorney General Murphy. I have read it, and I am glad to place those statutes in the record, and answer specifically any one or all of the questions contained in his letter. They are generally covered by the statement I have made.

Senator Austin. I believe they are covered by the statement you have made. I think in your statement you have answered those interrogatories.

Attorney General Murphy. Yes. Senator Austin. But in order that we may have that covered in the record, I would like to have included with the statement the statutes Senator Logan. That may be done.

Senator Logan, Senator HATCH?

Senator Harch. I have one question. I have received information that you had some correspondence from the Ford Motor Co. concerning the strike situation. Do you have such correspondence?
Attorney General Murphy. A letter reached me yesterday concerning my appointment as Attorney General.

Senator Harch. Do you have that letter with you?
Attorney General Murphy. Yes.
Senator Harch. Would you mind putting it in the record?
Attorney General Murphy. Not at all. It is dated at Dearborn, Mich., January 10, 1939, and reads as follows:

"The Honorable Frank J. Murphy,

"Attorney General of the United States, Washington, D. C.

"Attorney General of the United States, Washington, D. C.

the supreme office of Attorney General of the United States.

Senator Harch. What is Mr. Bennett's connection with the Ford Motor Co.?

Attorney General Murphy. I believe his title is personnel director of the Ford Motor Corporation. He is a very important official of the company.

Senator Logan. Senator Burke, have you any questions?
Senator Burke. Mr. Attorney General, would you feel at liberty to state what, if any, communications you have had or did have with the leaders of organized labor at the time of the sit-down strike?
Did you have any communication with such leaders?

Attorney General Murphy. Yes.
Senator Burke. Would you care to state anything on that subject?

Attorney General Murphy. Very much has been said that is inaccurate about disregarding a court order. I mentioned in my statement that only on one occasion was a writ of the court brought directly to the Governor for execution. The circumstances under which that was brought to me likewise have not been accurately stated in the record on several occasions in the

We had been in session since Tuesday. Mr. John L. Lewis and Mr. William Knudsen and associates were meeting with me. On January 15 the strike was apparently settled. Then an incident happened that undid all the work that we had accomplished. The negotiations regarding the settlement were brought to Washington. We remained here a week or 10 days. The negotiations at that time were not successful.

On February 2 I wrote a letter insisting that both sides meet at that time were not successful.

On February 2 I wrote a letter insisting that both sides meet with me in Detroit. We were in conference on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. On Thursday Mr. John Smith, chief counsel for General Motors, stated to me that on Friday morning he expected to be in Detroit and ask for a writ of injunction. I regretted that action and so advised Mr. Smith. He was very cooperative, as were all his associates. I told him I believed we could settle it without judicial action. That was Thursday night.

He called me on the telephone on Friday morning at 8 o'clock and stated that in view of the objection I had made the night before he wanted me to know the matter had been reviewed during the night but felt obliged to go ahead. I asked him to defer action until the afternoon of Friday. He said that he would, but due to conditions that I am sure were beyond his control an associate went to Flint and appeared before the judge there and got an order, which reached me at 11 o'clock on Friday night, after we had been in conference all week. The court order arrived in the midst of that conference, and it completely changed the atmosphere. It came at 11 o'clock, and the sheriff sent a wire saying the judge had placed the order in his hands, and asking me to send the military to enforce the order or suggest to him that he deputize enough men to enforce it.

Without delay I sent word to him that, in my opinion, peace was imminent; that I felt we could reach a settlement; and suggested that he defer action over the week end. At no time did I say he could not take action or that I would stand in the way. I would not do that, and did not do it. I asked him to defer action for the reach I stated. reason I stated.

the reason I stated.

We continued in conference Friday and Saturday night. I stated to Mr. Lewis and his associates that it was reaching the point where no one in the conference must be in the position of disobedience of an order of the court. On Monday it appeared there would be a settlement. We talked to officials here on that day. We worked Monday morning, afternoon, and night. On Tuesday it looked less likely. it looked less likely.

On Sunday this document was prepared, and on Tuesday night it was read to Mr. Lewis. At the time I asked him to come into an adjoining room. Mr. Dewey, the Federal conciliator, went with us. I read the statement to him, explaining that if we were unable to arrive at an immediate settlement I would read the statement to the entire conference the next morning and make it public. That did not become necessary, because on the night of the next day the strike was settled. This is the statement, and I would like to

"Mr. JOHN L. LEWIS,

"Chairman, Committee for Industrial Organization.
"Mr. Homer Martin,
"President, United Automobile Workers' Union.
"Gentlemen: During the last few weeks, as you know, I have made earnest and conscientious efforts on behalf of the people of Michigan to bring about a peaceful settlement of the unfortunate controversy that has arisen between the United Automobile Workers' Union and the General Motors Corporation. It has been my hope that an amicable understanding might be reached that would permit prompt reopening of idle plants in Flint and elsewhere, to the great advantage of the general public and the mutual advantage of the parties converged.

the great advantage of the general public and the mutual advantage of the parties concerned.

"It has also been my desire and purpose to avoid and prevent any action that might precipitate violence and rancor so long as there existed the possibility of peaceful settlement of matters in dispute. Such a course has seemed to me to be in the highest interest of the public and of those immediately concerned. In an industrial conflict, where the safety and welfare of American workingmen are involved, every means should be employed to prevent needless bloodshed or loss of life. My energies have been and will continue to be steadily directed toward this end.

"After conferring with the parties separately for several days

"After conferring with the parties separately for several days without success, I was able to bring representatives of both parties together in my office at Lansing on January 14 and arrange what seemed to be a satisfactory basis for negotiations to commence on January 18 and for evacuation before that date of plants occupied by striking employees. Although this arrangement subsequently fell down, due to events beyond my control, and a temporary empasse followed, in accordance with the wish of the President I again requested representatives of both sides, Mr. Lewis and Mr. Knudsen, to join me on February 2 in an effort to bring about a satisfactory agreement that would be fair and just to both parties and the public After several days of progription between the satisfactory agreement that would be fair and just to both parties and to the public. After several days of negotiation, however, the parties have been unable to agree upon a basis of settlement, and pending any further negotiation I deem it incumbent upon me to make clear to you in writing, as I have already done verbally on several occasions, my position as chief executive of this State.

"As you are aware, in an action instituted by the General Motors Corporation several weeks ago in the Circuit Court of Genesee County, an order has now been entered finding that the occupation of the company's plants at Flint by employees on strike has been unlawful, and requiring those in occupation to vacate the plants.

Further picketing of the plants was also enjoined.

"With this order, lawfully entered after fair and open hearing had been accorded to both parties, it is the clear duty of all persons to comply. The constitutional authority of the courts must be respected if we are to have orderly government and an orderly peaceful society with security for persons and property and free-dom from arbitrary action and coercion. This is as important to workers as it is to employers. It is essential to the preservation of democratic principles.

"While it is also important and my firm conviction, as everyone knows, that we should employ all legitimate and lawful means to advance and protect those larger human interests which are com-monly called 'human rights,' and thereby secure wider enjoyment monly called 'human rights,' and thereby secure wider enjoyment of personal liberty and individual happiness among our people, it should not be forgotten that personal liberty will be of little value to our people if the authority and integrity of our courts are not preserved and property rights are not protected.

"During the course of negotiations and judicial proceedings, proper measures have been taken, including the calling out of the State militia, to preserve the peace and protect individual citizens, both strikers and nonstrikers, from physical harm and undue impairment of any legal rights, actual or supposed, pending a decision of the questions at issue. While the continued occupation of the plants by striking employees and the actions of certain of their leaders and supporters in offering and inciting resistance to public authority have not at any time been viewed as lawful or right, the Government has nevertheless sought to preserve a patient and impartial attitude in the interest of industrial peace and hope of a friendly outcome of the present controversy. The people of Michigan also have on the whole shown admirable restraint under difficult conditions and a helpful disposition to permit reasonable opportunity for a peaceful settlement.

"It has been and still is my earnest belief that the matters in dispute should be settled by the peaceful methods of conference and negotiation, by the application of calm reason and broad principles of justice without the use of force or violence. It is my hope that this yet may be done. It is realized that what today may hope that this yet may be done. It is realized that what today may be a mere claim or equity tomorrow may obtain recognition of law. Inasmuch, however, as the parties have thus far been unable after extended negotiations to find a basis of agreement, the time has come for all concerned to comply fully with the decision and order of the Court and take necessary steps to restore possession of the occupied plants to their rightful owners. The Governor of the State may properly exert the influence of his office to bring parties together in conference and endeavor to bring about a settlement. But he has no authority to decide issues and force a settlement on either party without regard for legal rights and court decisions.

"I am sure that you and your associates will agree with me that the law should be observed and there should be no willful disobedience of the court's orders or defiance of the public authority.

obedience of the court's orders or defiance of the public authority. While I should have been happy to be instrumental in bringing about a satisfactory settlement, and regret deeply that this has not yet been possible, it would be still more unfortunate if I were to permit the laws of the State to be virtually set aside in the interest of ather party.

"Every consideration and assistance that could be given to the parties in conformity with the law and the public interest to bring about a peaceful settlement by way of conference and negotiations have been given cheerfully and conscientiously. As Governor of the State, however, it is my constitutional duty, in accordance with my oath of office to 'take care that the laws are faithfully executed.' have no alternative but to perform this duty to the best of my ability.

"It is not the function of the Governor to make the laws, nor is "It is not the function of the Governor to make the laws, nor is it his prerogative to review the action of the courts and determine for himself their meaning and effect. As the chief executive, it is his duty to demand and require obedience to them on the part of everybody. I shall exhaust every means to obtain such obedience peacefully, but I must and will be faithful to my oath of office. In the performance of my duty I shall expect the full assistance and cooperation of the members and responsible leaders of the United Automobile Workers' Union, believing that they share with me and the people of this State a strong desire to avoid further unnecessary injury either to persons or to property.

"Yours respectfully."

Senator Burke. Under date of November 25, 1937, the New York Times carried an account of a statement purporting to have been seems to me to be an important addition to the record. I will ask you if it states substantially the views you then held and now hold. This is the statement:

"Governor Murphy in a statement at Lansing, Mich., warned labor against hasty and unjustifiable strikes over minor grievances, and at the same time called on industry to recognize its responsibility to labor. He declared that sit-down strikes were illegal and would not be tolerated or permitted. He said, in part:

"Conditions have changed since last winter. In large measure intelligence and reason have been substituted for the rule of force in the solution of labor troubles. The right of workers to bargain collectively has now been definitely affirmed. Through agreements entered into by their own organizations and because of new governmental agencies, facilities have been provided for the orderly presentation and settlement of grievances. * * *

"The proper way to settle grievances is not to suspend the authority of law by taking possession of a shop or factory. That is not collective bargaining. The proper way and the American way is the way of friendly conference and negotiation in a spirit of reason and good faith. The other way leads to anarchy and eventually to arbitrary and despotic rule. * * *

"It is noted with satisfaction that the men in the Fisher Body labor to possession of a story with the termore."

ally to arbitrary and despotic rule. * * *

"It is noted with satisfaction that the men in the Fisher Body plant at Pontiac have decided to resume work while their grievances are being considered in conference by the representatives of the union and the management. Their decision is commended.

"The Government has shown every consideration for the rights and interests of workers, and this Government will continue to do so. But it also has a duty to see that the laws of the land are observed and governmental rule is maintained. Otherwise democratic rule will not endure and individual liberty will perish in the land of its birth."

Is that a correct statement of your views?

Is that a correct statement of your views?

Attorney General Murphy. That is a correct statement of my Senator Burke. I have no further questions. Senator Logan. Attorney General Murphy, the committee thanks you for your frank and comprehensive statement.

Attorney General Murphy. Mr. Chairman, I thank you and the committee for the privilege of appearing.

Senator Logan. The hearing is now closed, and the subcommittee will hold an executive session.

(Whereupon, at 3 o'clock p. m., the hearing was closed.)

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to make a brief statement at this time.

I was chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which considered the nomination of Mr. Murphy. The subcommittee, which was composed of seven members, met. No one had asked a hearing, and very few protests had reached the subcommittee, so the subcommittee decided to report the nomination favorably to the full committee.

A few days ago some of the friends of Mr. Murphy suggested that he should be given an opportunity to be heard, and that we again should call the subcommittee together and invite him to appear before it. On the same day Mr. Murphy sent to me a letter in which he expressed the hope that the subcommittee would allow him to come before it. We granted his request, and he came before the subcommittee and made a statement. I believe anyone who will read that statement will agree that the subcommittee acted correctly in favorably reporting his nomination to the full committee.

Mr. Murphy impressed the subcommittee as being a very conscientious, high-class man, who loves law and order, and who has always sought to do that which would best promote the peace and happiness of the people with whom he dealt. So the subcommittee made a report to the full committee last Monday. Mr. Murphy's statements were explained. Then we had a roll-call vote in the full committee. Sixteen members of the committee were present and two were absent. All 16 members of the Judiciary Committee who were present, including some of our ablest Senators, both Republicans and Democrats, voted favorably to report the nomination of Mr. Murphy to this body for confirmation. There were 16 affirmative votes and no negative votes. Two were absent.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield. Mr. NEELY. Did the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bringes] appear before the Senator's subcommittee, or did he later appear before the full committee, and object to the nomination, as he has objected today?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from New Hampshire did not appear before the committee; and it seems to me, if I may be pardoned for saying so, that the Senator from New Hampshire was afraid to find out what the facts really were, fearing, perhaps, that he would change his mind and vote for confirmation.

That is the only statement I desire to make.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Is it not a fact that no person appeared, or requested permission to be heard, in opposition to the nomination of Governor Murphy?

Mr. LOGAN. In reply to the Senator from New Mexico, I will say that an opportunity was given for anyone to appear who might desire to say anything. No one requested an opportunity to appear before the subcommittee or the full committee in opposition to the nomination of Attorney General Murphy. So far as I know, no one made any request of any member of the committee to be given an opportunity to appear so that a statement might be made; and so far as I know, from talking with the Members of the Senate who are interested in such things, no one outside the committee, other than the Senator from New Hampshire, has made any protest.

The Senator from New Hampshire differs not only with those on this side of the Chamber but with those on the other side of the Chamber. However, he has a perfect right to do so if he so desires.

I have been asked by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANK-HEAD] whether certain members of the committee were present. All I know is that every member was present except three, one of the absentees being the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], who authorized the chairman to cast his vote favorably. The other two who were absent were the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. King]. If there are more than 18 members of the committee, I may be in error. My recollection is that the committee consists of 18 members and that only 2 members were absent.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Inasmuch as the Senator from Nebraska has asked to have inserted in the RECORD following my remarks a copy of the hearings, I ask that the questions which were addressed to Mr. Murphy by Representative Hoffman, of Michigan, be placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I shall not object; but in a matter of confirmation, which is purely a senatorial prerogative, I doubt the propriety of inserting in the Record questions propounded by a member of a legislative body which has no jurisdiction to pass on the nomination. If the Senator insists on the matter going into the RECORD I shall not object, but I seriously doubt the propriety of such a course.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Michigan will yield further, I shall make a further statement.

Mr. BROWN. I yield. Mr. LOGAN. We have two great Senators from Vermont. One of them [Mr. Austin] I regard as one of the hardest working Senators in the Senate. He was on the subcommitee. The Senator from Vermont had a copy of the communication to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers, and so did I. The Senator from Vermont called the attention of Mr. Murphy to that statement, and the record will show that the Senator from Vermont said that he thought the general statement which was made by Mr. Murphy covered all the questions which had been asked by Representative Hoffman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, to insert in the Record the questions of Representative Hoffman, granted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not so understand. It was my intention to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the Senate can be reconsidered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I move that the action of the Senate granting permission to insert in the Record the questions of Representative Hoffman be reconsidered. I do not think it is proper to insert in the Record matter which has already been discussed in the House of Representatives, where Representative Hoffman has a right to be heard.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, let me explain that the letter, asking a series of questions of Governor Murphy, was addressed to Governor Murphy by Representative Hoffman. Copies of the questions asked were in the hands of some members of the Judiciary Committee, so the questions play a part in that particular hearing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, Representative HOFFMAN has the undoubted right to be heard in the House of Representatives, the body of which he is a Member. He was heard in that body at very great length the other day, and his observations were published in full in the Congressional RECORD, to the extent of several pages. It does not seem to me to be proper again to inflict upon the Congressional RECORD the remarks of Representative Hoffman made in the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the action by which permission was granted to insert in the RECORD certain questions asked Governor Murphy by Representative HOFFMAN be reconsidered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his motion. The record of the hearings will show that the letter offered by the Senator from New Hampshire was in the possession of the members of the committee. The record will also show, as the chairman of the subcommittee has said, that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin] had a copy of the communication. I presume he expected to submit the questions to Mr. Murphy. However, I think the record will show that at the conclusion of Mr. Murphy's statement before the committee the Senator from Vermont said he thought all the questions asked had been answered by Mr. Murphy, and he would not submit them. The questions were not submitted. They were not a part of the record.

However, I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that if objection is made to inserting in the RECORD what the Senator from New Hampshire desires to insert the cry will at once arise that some of the evidence has not been submitted. I should like to have the questions inserted in the RECORD. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that the questions have already been answered by Mr. Murphy. Whether they have or not, it is only fair to let the reader judge. It is not customary to insert in our Record debates or hearings from the House of Representatives. However, I think it would be unfair and unreasonable to keep out of the RECORD the matter offered. In order to give a perfectly clean bill of health to Mr. Murphy, so that even those who are bitterly opposed to his confirmation may be completely satisfied, I should like to have inserted in the RECORD anything that any Senator desires to put in. I think the hearings themselves will show a complete vindication of Mr. Murphy. I should not like to have word go out that anything has been suppressed. Let it all go in.

For that reason I am opposed to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, certainly I have no disposition to insist on any course which would seem in any degree to preclude the printing of the whole record in this case. My motion was based upon the fact that the House of Representatives is the sole judge of its own RECORD and the Senate of the United States is the sole judge of its own RECORD. But an intemperate, vituperative, libelous attack having been printed once in the RECORD of the proceedings of the House of Representatives seems to me to be no justification for repeating that same sort of an intemperate, libelous attack in the RECORD of the Senate. However, lest there be any suggestion that anybody is trying to conceal anything in connection with the record, I will be glad to withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like it distinctly understood also that Representative Hoffman did not ask to come before either the subcommittee or the full committee. The hearings were open to the public; we invited everyone who had anything to say to come forward and say it; but Mr. Hoff-MAN never appeared, or, if he did, he did not make himself known.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] having withdrawn his motion, the matter presented by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., January 13, 1939.

Hon. FRANK MURPHY.

Attorney General, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C DEAR SIR: The Washington press this morning carries the information that you will appear before a Senate committee this afternoon to make a statement concerning the sit-down strikes which noon to make a statement concerning the sit-down strikes which occurred in Michigan in 1937.

As the congressional representative of some 300,000 citizens residing in the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, may I respectfully ask, and will you kindly answer, the following questions.

1. While you were Governor of Michigan during 1937, did not section 3 of article VI of the State constitution contain the following statement: "The Governor shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed?"

2. Did you not take and subscribe to an oath of office which contained, among other things, this statement: "I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of Governor of Michigan according to the best of my ability?"

3. While you were Governor of Michigan during the year 1937, was not section 352 of act No. 328 of the Public Acts of Michigan of 1931 in full force and effect?

4. Did that section of act No. 328 read as follows: "Any person The that section of act No. 328 read as follows: Any person or persons who shall, by threats, intimidations, or otherwise, and without authority of law, interfere with, or in any way molest, or attempt to interfere with, or in any way molest or disturb, without such authority, any mechanic or other laborer in the quiet and peaceable pursuit of his lawful avocation shall be guilty of a misdemeanor?"

misdemeanor?"

5. Did not persons, by threats, intimidations, or otherwise, and without authority of law, occupy factories in Flint during January or February 1937 for a period of more than 30 days?

6. During January 1937 were you not in Flint, Mich.?

7. During January 1937, in Flint, did not sit-down strikers by threats, intimidations, or otherwise, and without authority of law interfere with or molest, or attempt to interfere with or molest or disturb, without lawful authority, mechanics, laborers, workers, in the automobile factories in the quiet and peaceable pursuit of their lawful avocation? lawful avocation?

8. Did you not know during all of January 1937 that men and women who wanted to work in the automobile factories in Flint were being prevented from doing so by the sit-down strikers?

9. Did you not know that this interference continued for a period of at least 30 days?

10. Was not such interference a violation of the law?

11. Was it not your duty as Governor of the State, under the constitutional provision which reads that the Governor "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed," to see to it that this care that the laws be latthfully executed," to see to it that this interference was ended?

12. Does not section 17253 of the Compiled Laws of the State of Michigan, which was in force during the year 1937, read as follows?—
"Every person concerned in the commission of an offense, whether he directly commits the act constituting the offense or procures, counsels, aids, or abets in its commission may hereafter be prosecuted indicted tried and on conviction shall be presented as if he counsels, and on conviction shall be punished as if he had directly committed such offense."

had directly committed such offense."

13. Did you not, by failing to use the State police or the National Guard to faithfully execute the laws, aid those in possession of those factories who were keeping men from their work?

14. Did you, during January 1937, take care that the laws were faithfully executed, and did you take care during that period to see to it that those who violated section 352 of Act No. 328 of the Public Acts of Michigan for the year 1931 were (a) either punished, or (b) prevented from continuing their violations?

15. If for any reason you did not enforce section 352, herein before referred to during the month of January 1937, will you advise as to how long a period you believe you might rightfully suspend the enforcement of that statute?

16. The press carried the information that you made a state-

16. The press carried the information that you made a statement which is as follows:

"Whatever else may happen, there is going to be law and order in Michigan. The public safety and public interest are paramount. There will be maintenance of public order and protection of private property in Flint."

Is it not true that during the month of January 1937-

(a) Armed men who were not officers held possession of private property in Flint, in violation of the law?

(b) Laborers were kept from their employment by the sit-down strikers during that period, in violation of law and order?

(c) Men who had committed no offense against the laws of the State were prevented, in violation of law, from going to their employment in the factories in Flint?

17. Did you during the same period make this statement, which was reported in the press?—

"It should not be forgotten that personal liberty will be of

It should not be forgotten that personal inserty will be of little value if the authority and integrity of the courts are not preserved and property rights protected."

18. If you made the foregoing statement, will you kindly state what you did to see that the order of the Circuit Court of the County of Genesee, calling for the eviction of the sit-down strikers,

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I was admitted to the bar of the State of Michigan along with my friend Frank Murphy in 1914. We were not members of the same class in law school, but we were admitted to the bar the same year. We have been close, fast friends from that time to this, a period of over 20 years. I have been much interested in his public career, and I believe that I have aided, in my small way, in bringing to him some of the honors that have come to him. In 1914 Frank Murphy started the practice of law in the great city of Detroit. He practiced law there until the World War broke out. In 1917 he enlisted in the Army of the United States. He rapidly advanced in military life, as he has advanced in political life, and became a captain in the Army of the United States. He served in France ably and well. When he came home he again took up the practice of law in the city of Detroit, the largest city in my home State.

President Wilson, as will be recalled, was then President of the United States. The Honorable John E. Kinnane, of Bay City, Mich., was district attorney, and he appointed Frank Murphy his chief assistant district attorney. Mr. Murphy made an outstanding record in that office. He holds the distinction of having been the only assistant district attorney in my State who before a jury in a Federal court convicted war profiteers and sent them to jail for their violations of the Federal law.

Mr. Murphy continued in the position of assistant district attorney, I think, until 1921, when he was elected a judge of the recorder's court of the city of Detroit, which is the highest court of the city that has jurisdiction over criminal matters; and, contrary to what my uninformed friend from New Hampshire says, it has civil jurisdiction. Among other matters, it handles cases involving the condemnation of land, and in a city such as Detroit, prosperous as it was then, and, as, thank God, it is now again, there is handled in that court litigation running into the millions of dollars, civil litigation, respecting the condemnation of lands.

Frank Murphy continued as judge of the recorder's court until 1930, when, as a result of a recall of a man who had been elected mayor of the city of Detroit, he was importuned by many to stand as a candidate for mayor. He did so; he was elected and reelected as mayor of the city of Detroit.

Members of the Senate recall that in 1933 he was selected by President Roosevelt as Governor General of the Philippine Islands. Many Senators within the sound of my voice went to the Philippine Islands and saw how he conducted the government of the 10,000,000 Filipino people. His record there was such that many people in Michigan and others throughout the United States thought that he should come back and give his services to the American people. We Democrats in Michigan thought so, and I was one, then a Member of the House of Representatives, who urged upon him his candidacy for Governor of the State of Michigan. He likewiseand I think we may properly refer to personal mattersurged upon me my candidacy for the Senate of the United States. I supported him in his primary race and he supported me in my primary race. We were selected for the respective offices as the candidates of the Democratic Party, and, of course, were both elected in 1936. Mr. Murphy then took up his duties as Governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator from New Hampshire has stated, that Governor Murphy was defeated after he had been Governor of Michigan for the space of 2 years; it is true that the people of the State of Michigan indicated thereby disapproval of some of his acts as Governor of the State; but you know, Mr. President, and I know, that my State has been predominantly Republican; we have only elected four men on the Democratic ticket as Governor of the State of Michigan, and only one has been reelected, since 1858. Frank Murphy received over 46 percent of the total vote of the people of the State of Michigan in the election of 1938. His opponent, Governor Fitzgerald, received a little over 52 percent.

There were many issues in that campaign other than the sit-down strikes and other than the labor record of Governor Murphy. I am frank to say that he did not have the solid support of his own party. Why? Because he put into effect a civil-service law which alienated the support of many Democrats, particularly those who were close to the State government. Senseless, baseless charges were made against him by what I now characterize, as I have heretofore, unfair testimony before the Dies committee connecting this man, who is a great Christian and a great Catholic, with communistic organizations. Frank Murphy is not responsible for the fact that people who call themselves Communists in the State of Michigan supported him for Governor; he could not help it; he made it plain that he was not of them and did not subscribe to their principles; but he could not compel them to put up a candidate for Governor on their ticket. He said that he in no way or manner subscribed to communistic principles; but many radical elements supported my party in 1936 as well as in 1932.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina. Mr. BAILEY. Since the Senator is undertaking to explain the course of Governor Murphy in Michigan, I should like him to explain the failure of Governor Murphy in that campaign to produce the letter which he produced before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from North Carolina may think that I am going to sit down in just a moment or so, but I am not. I expect fully to cover that situation further on in my remarks.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to assure the Senator that I had entertained no hope whatever of him sitting down at any time soon. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. I have listened to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, whom I very much admire, many, many times for long, long periods.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator, and I am sure he took what I said wholly by way of pleasantry. I am delighted to hear him, and I hope really that he will speak at great length

Mr. BROWN. I call the attention of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges] to the fact that in 1938 many radical elements in the State of New Hampshire supported the Republican Party, and not only was that so in New Hampshire but throughout New England and in many other sections of the country.

I am one of those who have been openly and from the beginning opposed, and I am proud of the fact that I was the first Member of the House of Representatives to be proscribed by, those who advocate the $200-a-month Townsend plan. I do not think the Republican Party approves the $200-a-month Townsend plan; but I say to you that in the State of Maine, and in the Senator's own State of New Hampshire, and in other New England States, and in many places in the United States, the Republican Party was successful in 1938 because of the support of the particular group whom I characterize as radicals. You and I know that the Republican Party is not going to be able to bring into effect a $200-a-month Townsend plan even if it comes into office in the distant future. So a man is not always responsible for the people who support him.

The Senator from New Hampshire takes the position that a man whom he characterizes as a "lame duck" should not have political office. There are some "lame ducks" on the other side who came back into the Senate in 1938. The people change their minds now and then.

The man who was defeated for Governor by Frank Murphy in 1936 was a "lame duck"; but he came back, and the people of Michigan elected him in 1938.

Many of us admire the great Chief Justice of the United States; but in 1916 the people of the United States placed upon him the imprint "lame duck." If the Senator's view were taken, Chief Justice Hughes would not be on the Supreme Bench today.

The same thing may be said of the former Chief Justice, William H. Taft, whom we all honor and admire and revere. He was a "lame duck," but he was placed on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Even the great leader of my party was, if we may use that phrase, repudiated by the people of the United States in 1920, when he ran for Vice President of the United States. He was a "lame duck"; but he went into national office twice since that time, 12 and 16 years afterward, respectively, with the greatest majorities in the history of the American Republic.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Those who may be termed "lame ducks" are not all political "lame ducks." There are professional and business "lame ducks" who cannot succeed in every enterprise upon which they embark but who have rendered just as important service to mankind and the world as those who never were "lame ducks."

I think it was Cyrus W. Field who made 13 efforts to lay a cable across the Atlantic Ocean, and I suppose 12 of those times he might have been called a "lame duck."

Abraham Lincoln was a "lame duck" in the sense in which that term is used by the Senator from New Hampshire, because he was defeated for the United States Senate by Stephen A. Douglas.

Warren G. Harding in the same sense was a "lame duck," because he was defeated for Governor of Ohio and later became President of the United States.

So in the history of our own country and in the history of mankind many great men who have been defeated in some enterprise of their own have later been called by the people to great service, either in politics or in some other calling.

Mr. BROWN. This name is not on the Senator's list, but William S. Knudsen, president of the General Motors Corporation, was factory superintendent of the Ford Motor Co. He was let out. It is commonly reported in automobile circles in the city of Detroit that Mr. Knudsen is the only man Henry Ford ever tried to rehire after losing him; and he went on to head one of the greatest industrial enterprises in the history of our country. Mr. Knudsen likewise was a "lame duck" at one time.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator, I think, is putting undue emphasis on the "lame duck" question. I referred to the President making a specialty of appointing "lame ducks," which is, I think, an accurate statement; and I made the inquiry whether or not the President could find anybody out of that field. I did not say, however—and if the Senator will read my statement, I think he will find that what I am now saying is correct—I did not say that I was against Mr. Murphy for Attorney General because he was a "lame duck" or because he had been repudiated by the people of Michigan. I said I was against him for the same reasons which caused him to be a "lame duck" and to be repudiated by the people of Michigan. There is a distinction.

Mr. BROWN. I am sorry the Senator does not like my emphasis on the "lame duck" argument now. I did not like his emphasis upon it a few moments ago.

The Senator then gets into a subject which I cannot characterize by any other statement than as small; and I think what he says and the fact that he brings out redounds to the credit of Attorney General Frank Murphy rather than to his discredit. The Senator says that from November 4—the election was on November 2 in 1936—Frank Murphy started again to draw his salary as High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, a salary which he had voluntarily given up when he became a candidate for Governor of the State of Michigan.

I could name to the Senator many persons who did not give up their places on the public pay roll when they became candidates for high office. Governor Murphy did refuse to accept his pay as Commissioner to the Philippine Islands for the period of time during which he was a candidate for Governor of Michigan. I am intimately acquainted with the Governor. I saw him immediately after November 3, 1936, when he was elected Governor of Michigan. We take office there on the 1st day of January; and I know that the Governor devoted practically all of his time from election day until he became Governor of the State of Michigan to his duties in closing up his affairs as High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands. I say he was entirely justified in taking that pay; and I think we ought to place on the honor roll his action in refusing to accept salary which he very well could have taken while he was a candidate for Governor of Michigan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know whether there are now any Members of the Senate who became candidates for the Senate while they were Governors of their States who did not give up their salary?

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is absolutely right in the implication of his question. I do not think any Member of the Senate takes the trouble to resign after he has been renominated for his position in the United States Senate; and I venture to say that the conscience of the Senator from New Hampshire is such that he will not resign his place in the Senate and refuse to accept his salary when he devotes all of his time to his reelection in 1942.

I think we have said enough about the personal side of this matter. I now wish to devote a little time to Governor Murphy's actions.

I am not going to detail the high character of men whom Governor Murphy put into office, but I am sure my eminent and distinguished colleague from the State of Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] will bear me out when I say that it was commonly conceded in the State of Michigan that the character of men whom Governor Murphy put into key positions was of the highest class; and I say to the Senator from New Hampshire that one of the reasons why my party lost in 1938 was because Frank Murphy appointed too many Republicans to key positions during his term of office. The heads of several of the important commissions are Republicans. They are excellent men. When the civil-service law went into effect Governor Murphy did not pick a Michigan Democrat to head that service. He did not pick a Michigan Republican. He went away out to the State of California and picked a man whom none of us had heard anything about and brought him in to administer the civil-service laws of the State of Michigan. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire did that when he was Governor of the State of New Hampshire.

I could give the Senator many more examples. When Governor Murphy had the opportunity to pick the head of the hospitals of the State of Michigan he sent down here and asked who was the most distinguished doctor he could place at the head of the State hospitals of Michigan. He did not pick a Michigan Democrat. He did not pick a Michigan Republican. He took the advice of the Bureau of Public Health and picked a distinguished New Englander, who, so far as I know, had never been in the State of Michigan.

I could give the Senator from New Hampshire many more reasons why some Democrats did not support Governor Murphy, because of their difference with him over the matter of political appointments. I do not say that I agree with all of his activities in that respect; but I know that through them all there shows clearly the high political conscience that Frank Murphy had—a conscience as fine and as high as that of any man I know in the State of Michigan or the Federal Government of this country.

Mr. President, I said that I supported him because he was my personal friend, and he is; but if I had never known him personally, I could stand here and affirm to my fellow Senators that I would support him because of the record he has made as a lawyer, as a captain in the World War, as a judge of the recorder's court of the city of Detroit, which is the same in every respect as a judge of the circuit court in my State, with the same standing and the same salary; because of his record as mayor of Detroit; because of his record as High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands; and because of his record as Governor of Michigan. But let us discuss a few of these acts about which the Senator from New Hampshire speaks, although I know that what I say here is going to affect very few, if any, for I know that confirmation of this nomination is reasonably well assured, but I wish to speak a little about the industrial trouble in my State in 1937.

As Governor Murphy well said in his testimony before the Committee on the Judiciary, the labor situation in my State was tense. The unskilled labor in the automobile industry in Michigan had never been organized. During 1936, while I was going about the State in my campaign for nomination and election as a Senator from the State of Michigan, the U. A. W. was organized. We often ran into situations where part of the crowd would be at the U. A. W. meeting and part at our political meeting, both on the Republican and the Democratic side. Homer Martin, a man of very high character, a former minister of the gospel, and others were going about the State organizing the automobile workers.

On December 30, 1936, while Frank D. Fitzgerald, who is now Governor of the State of Michigan, was Governor, the General Motors sit-down strike occurred. It was not the first sit-down strike in the State of Michigan, and was not the first sit-down strike in the United States, and, as those who have studied the labor problem know, it was not the first sit-down strike throughout the world, because sit-down strikes had been fairly common in France before that time.

The strikers were in and sitting down before Frank Murphy became Governor of Michigan.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Prior to the sit-down strikes in France, sit-down strikes began, as I have been informed, as a part of the essential technique of communism in Russia. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BROWN. I am not informed, but I know there were sit-down strikes in France long before there were sit-down strikes in the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has heard of the sit-down strikes in Russia prior to that?

Mr. BROWN. I have.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator has always understood, has he not, that they are a part of the technique of communism?

Mr. BROWN. I am not informed on that subject, I will say to the Senator, and I will take what he says as true.

The condition which I have described faced the Governor of Michigan when he was inducted into office on the 1st of January 1937. Immediately Governor Murphy took action. He called upon the leaders of labor and upon the leaders of industry and summoned them to his office. They were conferring from that time until the 12th of February the same year, when the strike was finally settled.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the Senator at this point whether Governor Murphy, being a lawyer with the record which the Senator has described here, at that time advised the parties to the strike that the sit-down strike was unlawful?

Mr. BROWN. On February 12 or 13 the Governor issued a statement in which he characterized sit-down strikes as unlawful and illegal.

I will say further to the Senator—and I wish the Senator from New Hampshire were here, because he discussed this particular proposition—there appeared in the Congressional Record, on page 2486, volume 81, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, a statement which I caused to be inserted in the Record at that time, in which Governor Murphy in unmeasured terms condemned the unlawful seizure of property by labor, by the U. A. W. union, in the city of Flint, the specific case which we are discussing at the present time. So evidently the senior Senator from New Hampshire is not a close student of the Congressional Record.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Does not the statement of the Senator from Michigan now place Governor Murphy in the position of having known that the sit-down strike was unlawful, and then not having taken any lawful action within the powers of his office to suppress the unlawful action of the sit-down strikers? How can that be explained?

Mr. BROWN. The Governor brought the parties together, he labored with them for a period of 5 weeks; no legal action was brought, and, so far as I know—and I take it to be a fact—no action was desired by the automobile company involved looking to the ejectment of the strikers until later. The order for their ejectment was signed on Friday, February 5. The following Wednesday they evacuated the plant. I think the Governor facing the situation confronting him in 1937 acted about as the Senator from North Carolina would have acted under similar circumstances.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

Mr. BROWN. I say that because I know the Senator to be a reasonable man.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator. I like to be reasonable, and I think I was reasonable in stating my views about this matter, which I am going to see are placed in the Record before this discussion closes.

The question does not arise upon the action of the Governor in view of a proceeding in ejectment. The question arises upon the action of the Governor as the chief of all enforcement officers of the State, and the chief magistrate to preserve peace, when a mob take the law into their own hands. When people form a mob to take possession of my property by force and arms, I have a right to look to the Governor without going to the courts.

As I see this matter, the Governor temporized, and on the statement of the Senator now he delayed 5 weeks to deal with this situation.

Mr. BROWN. I think it is unfair to say he delayed.

Mr. BAILEY. That may have been reasonable from one point of view, but I do not think a chief executive, or a sheriff, or any other law officer—I do not think the President of the United States—has the right to delay in the enforcement of law against the action of a mob acting with force and arms; and if there is delay, the consequence is to enable the mob to dictate terms of peace with the private individual or the corporation, independent of their rights in a court. That seems to me to be a very serious thing. I am sure the Senator will agree with me in that.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator think that the instant the Governor learned that 500 to 1,000 employees were in the factory—and I do not know just how many there were—understanding that they went in lawfully, that they entered in the first place as employees, it was his duty instantly to order out the National Guard and order them to shoot those men down if necessity required it in order to drive them out of the plant? If the Senator entertains that view, I totally and wholly disagree with him.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure the Senator would; but he has asked me a question, and I am going to ask leave to make a perfectly frank statement. The Governor of a State, or a policeman around this Capitol, or a constable in a town must preserve the peace. He must act reasonably, I agree. He must first make the demand for the peace. He does not act "instantly" in the sense in which the Senator used that term. Once he gives a command for the preservation of the peace. once he attempts an arrest or succeeds in an arrest and is resisted, then the law of this land is that he must exhaust the powers vested in him by the people to restore and preserve the peace. Now, I quote from the Supreme Court of North Carolina, "and his actions in the premises are not to be weighed in golden scales. He must use whatever force may be necessary, and that use of force is within his discretion, and it must be sufficient to assert the majesty of the law and preserve the peace."

If that involves bloodshed it involves bloodshed. I am sorry to say that bloodshed is a necessity in the preservation of the law. We electrocute people. That is bloodshed. It is very regrettable. It horrifies us. But still it is bloodshed. When mobs become riotous the law officer must suppress them. It is not up to him to consider whether there be bloodshed or not. It is up to him to consider whether the law is to rule the population or not. Ours is a government of law, not of men, and the ministers of the law must preserve the law, even though the preservation involves bloodshed.

If I should walk out in the hall now and some policeman on the outside should see some man who was, as he had good reason to believe, about to commit a felony upon my person, it would be the duty of the policeman to shed the blood of that man, not for my sake, and not because he wished to shed blood, but because this is a government of law, and not of men, and you cannot temporize with men who take the law into their own hands. Otherwise you surrender to them, and surrendering, you surrender the flag, the courts, the country, the peace, the order, and all those other constituents which make what we call our civilization.

I hope I have answered the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. Perhaps I can appeal to the Senator on another ground. He does not seem to care how much blood is shed as long as the majesty of the law is upheld. I think the majesty of the law was upheld in that situation. But I think I can appeal to the Senator on another basis. Here were, let us say, 500 men in the General Motors plant. The Senator knows that the machinery which is used by those men to stamp out parts of cars is very expensive, very finely made. Some machines cost as high as $100,000. Can the Senator believe that the General Motors Corporation would prefer to let those men stay in the plant until, through the orderly processes of the law and a court order, their ejectment could be effected?

Mr. BAILEY rose.

Mr. BROWN. Let me finish.

Mr. BAILEY. I rose simply to answer the question. The Senator's statement is in the form of a question addressed to me.

Mr. BROWN. I am asking the Senator a question, and I refuse to yield until I have completed the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan refuses to yield.

Mr. BROWN. Would the Senator desire to modify his view if he considered the property rights of the General Motors Corporation rather than the human rights of the labor unions? These machines were expensive; they cost money, and General Motors did not want them to be broken up and destroyed as the result of the riots which would inevitably have occurred in those plants. The Senator is an advocate of property rights. Perhaps upon that basis, then, he would justify a little delay of the interest of justice, even if he does not care so much about the human bloodshed which would certainly have occurred if this action, which he advocates, had been taken.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I now proceed? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I answer the question emphatically, no. I hope no one will ever think that I would put property rights above human rights; that I would prefer the destruction of human beings to the destruction of the most valuable machine on earth. The implication there I think is unworthy of my good friend. I think he would not insist upon it; but, if he did, I flatter myself, I think he is the only man on earth who would insist upon it with reference to me.

Of course, it was not the duty of the Governor of Michigan to consult with the General Motors or any other people. He was not to consult with flesh and blood, the power of money, as to his duty in enforcing the law. Certainly he was not to consider whether the mob had taken hostages in the form of machinery. If his attention were brought to that, then all the more it was incumbent upon him to act instantly and regardless of the consequences either to the mob or to the machinery.

That is not a matter of being willing to shed blood. That is a matter of being willing to preserve the peace. The preservation of the peace is the prevention of bloodshed. Temporizing with the mob is not preventing bloodshed. It is inviting bloodshed. That is my position.

I am going to make a few remarks on this subject after the Senator from Michigan completes his remarks, and when I get an opportunity, but I hope I have cleared his mind of any suspicion or of any rhetorical imputation that I am arguing here that the General Motors people had a right to say to the Governor, "Do not do anything about this because our machinery is at stake." If the General Motors people took that position, they are absolutely to be condemned. And if Governor Murphy yielded to considerations of that sort, he is absolutely to be condemned.

The State and the rights of the population of the State rise far above the rights of the General Motors, the value of the machinery, or the simple question whether or not in the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of the peace, the chief executive and the chief magistrate of a Commonwealth would hesitate to exert all the powers vested in him by the people in order to maintain his oath of office, fully perform his duty, and preserve those muniments of civilization without which civilization itself cannot exist.

We are here not thinking about the property on one hand or the striker on the other. We are thinking about the duties of the Governor of a State, or sheriff, or constable, or policeman, or any other law officer, to see to it that the law prevails in America, in order that the Government of this country may always be what it has had the distinction of being up until now—a government of law and not of men or mobs.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I wish to absolve the Senator from any charge of mine that he would be in favor of shedding blood under these circumstances, because I am satisfied that if the Senator from North Carolina had been Governor of Michigan in 1937 he would not have taken the position that was taken by a famous character in Shakespearean literature that he was going to have his property or his forfeit because "it is so nominated in the bond."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I may suggest to the Senator that he is talking about a civil contract which was wrongful in the outset. I am talking about the contract that underlies all civilization—not a civil contract, but the contract that constitutes the State. There is a complete difference between Shylock's bond and the Constitution of the State of Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator from North Carolina take the view that the Governor should have sent the authorities into the plant, regardless of whether General Motors wanted it done or not?

Mr. BAILEY. Why certainly. General Motors had nothing to do with it—nothing on earth. The preservation of the peace is not a matter to be referred to the General Motors or any other corporation.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator believe that when all of those involved, the representatives of labor and the representatives of the corporation, believed that each following day would bring a settlement of the strike, that there should be some delay in the execution of the strict authority of the Governor?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I regret to say that I have taken the opposite view. I have taken the view that the way to prevent bloodshed in America is to enforce the law. The law is the only thing that I know of that saves us now from being slaughtered. Whenever we yield and temporize with the situation, we invite general disaster to all of us.

Let me say to the Senator, by way of concluding—because I do not wish unduly to interrupt him—that when the same sort of situation was threatened in the State of Connecticut, and was also threatened in the State of North Carolina, the Governor of Connecticut and the Governor of North Carolina issued public statements saying "the sit-down strike is unlawful. It will not be tolerated; and we will use such force as may be necessary to suppress it."

The consequence was that in those two States there were no sit-down strikes.

I am not saying that I shall vote against Governor Murphy; and I am not saying what I now say by way of undertaking to prejudice him. However, I am saying what I say because I do not want anyone to think that his appointment by our President or his confirmation by the Senate is in any degree a condonation of the sit-down strike, or of what others may conceive to be temporizing on the part of the Government with the sit-down strike.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator and I will have to disagree as to our view of the situation which faced our Governor in 1937.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that the Governor did consult with the military authorities. He consulted with the National Guard. The National Guard was called out by him very early, and he went to Col. Samuel D. Pepper, Judge Advocate General of the Michigan National Guard. Samuel D. Pepper is a Republican. He was for many years a distinguished assistant attorney general of the State of Michigan. Shortly after the settlement of the Flint strike, the General Motors strike, Colonel Pepper said:

Any attempt on the part of National Guard troops to forcibly eject sit-down strikers from General Motors plants in Flint during recent labor troubles there would have resulted in bloodshed, delayed peaceable settlement-

Which I think is an important considerationand provoked a riot which the troops could not have handled.

Colonel Pepper was one of the responsible military officials. In 1938 he said to Frank Murphy:

DEAR GOVERNOR: As your term of office is drawing to a close, permit me to express my personal obligations to you for the distinguished friendship you have shown me. I was deeply touched by your campaign references to my attitude in the affair at Flint. You were certainly welcome to use anything I had said publicly on the matter. I have never hesitated to discuss your conduct of the the matter. I have never hesitated to discuss your conduct of the extremely difficult situation that developed during the sit-down strikes. I have never believed that the State should be a party to unnecessary violence in such matters. It is very easy for those who do not have the responsibility to criticize and denounce whatever is done; it is quite another matter for those in immediate authority. * *

ity. * *

I hope to see the day, however, when the public will more fully appreciate your services in preserving peace in the most trying domestic situation this State has ever faced.

I wish to conclude with the views of the men who were most intimately concerned.

William S. Knudsen was then, and is now, the president of the General Motors Corporation. He said:

We express our sincere thanks and appreciation to the Honorable Frank Murphy, Governor of Michigan, for his unremitting efforts to bring the parties together on a basis of lawful bargaining, in the hope of a speedy settlement of a strike that is doing unnecessary and irreparable damage to hundreds of thousands of innocent

That was not after the strike was settled. That was on January 9, when the difficulty was at its height.

Alfred P. Sloan, chairman of the board of General Motors then, and now, said on February 12, 2 days after the strike was settled:

General Motors is gratified that, by the unremitting efforts of Governor Murphy, an agreement has been made under which the General Motors plants, now illegally held by strikers, will be evacuated forthwith, the strike terminated, and production resumed at once.

The corporation, its workers, and the public are indebted to the Honorable Frank Murphy for his untiring and conscientious efforts, as well as fairness with which he has handled a most difficult situation. Only his efforts made it possible to resume work at this time.

I take it that the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from New Hampshire would have preferred it if in the middle of January the Michigan troops had been ordered in, with the resultant and certain destruction of valuable machinery and of human life. However, the General Motors Corporation, the owner of this property, says that the Governor did a grand job in settling the strike.

Walter P. Chrysler, who formed the great Chrysler Motor Corporation when everyone said that the motor industry was so full that there was no room for anyone else, a great success as an engineer and businessman, said after the settlement of the Chrysler strike:

My DEAR GOVERNOR: Now that we are off your mind, I want to MY DEAR GOVERNOR: Now that we are on your mind, I want to take this means to write you and tell you how much I appreciate your splendid help in bringing about the settlement reached last night. I meant every word I said to the press about your work in this situation. You did a great job and I am happy to have been associated closely with you in the negotiations which ended so successfully and so fairly to all concerned.

Chrysler does not criticize, but the senior Senator from New Hampshire does, and the senior Senator from North Carolina does. However, the men whose property was involved were satisfied with the handling of the situation.

I also wish, Frank, to thank you for your attitude toward me personally and toward my associates in Lansing.

You have performed a real public service and you can well be proud of it.

There were other strikes in Michigan. The same general testimony was given by A. E. Barrett, the head of the Hudson Motor Corporation. He said:

I am sure that the arrangement made will make for better understanding and better harmony between men and the management. I wish to extend my whole-hearted thanks—to the Governor of Michigan for his interest and efforts to promote a settlement.

To whom?-

The Reo Motor Co., the Graham Motor Car Co., the Consumer's Power Co., and the Crowley-Milner Co., institutions which faced industrial trouble in the early months of 1937, have without exception commended the present Attorney General for his actions in bringing about industrial peace in Michigan.

Everyone in my State knows that the Detroit Free Press is closely affiliated with and sympathetic to the conservative in the Republican Party. After the settlement of both the General Motors and the Chrysler strikes the Detroit Free Press warmly commended the Governor's handling of the situation.

The Detroit News, which is an independent newspaper, also warmly commended the handling of the situation by the Governor of Michigan. I wish to take the time to read a short portion of an editorial from the Detroit News, the newspaper having the largest general circulation in the State of Michigan.

The strike ends. The Governor's balanced handling of the strike situation and negotiations throughout has merited description as statesmanlike. His position as Governor of the State and embodiment of its legal sovereignty was far from an easy one under the circumstances; yet he was able at the time to refrain from recognition of the sit-down strikes and to insist that they be ended without the necessity of forcible ejectment. He demanded, above all things, that an end be reached without forfeiting, in senseless violence, the lives of Michigan citizens. That was the humane and wise thing to do. It required of the Governor a feat of balancing that scarcely can be expected of official authority every time a group of workers, in the name of collective bargaining, seize possession of another's property.

Later the same paper said:

The Chrysler strike finally has been settled in a spirit of mutual forbearance and good feeling. And, now that it is ended, we suppose there will be few who will hesitate to agree that this was better than enforcing the letter of the law against the sit-downers at the risk of bloodshed and a great deal of bad feeling. Governor Murphy has handled another awkward situation in a way that does him and the State credit. It is true the law has been held in abeyance, but we think there is no lack of understanding on the part of anybody as to why this was so. So long as the law's supremacy is not in doubt, it will not lose necessarily by tempering its rigors to fit the circumstances, as was done in this case. this case.

However, we have further testimony. If Senators were as familiar with Michigan affairs as I am, they would know that the labor problem has been acute for some years in our greatest industrial enterprise, the Ford Motor Co. Mr. Harry H. Bennett is in charge of all their labor relations.

For some 2 years there has been an effort made to organize the employees of the Ford Motor Co., and that the Ford Motor Co. has resisted that effort, successfully resisted it, to this hour, taking the position that their employees should be free from any form of persuasion. There have been some difficulties at the gates of the Ford plant. Governor Murphy is known throughout Michigan and throughout the country as being sympathetic with the cause and efforts of organized labor to better their condition. It is known that he is a firm believer in the organization of labor, and very few people in the United States take a different position today. I say these things to emphasize the attitude of the motor industry, which was chiefly affected by the situation to which reference has been made.

I am free here to state the fact that Mr. B. E. Hutchinson, chairman of the finance committee of the Chrysler Motor Corporation, came to my office about 10 days ago and said:

We want no fight made, so far as we are concerned, against the confirmation of the nomination of Frank Murphy, because we think he did a good job in settling the Chrysler strike.

Would you like to have me tell that to your colleague, Senator VANDENBERG?

I replied:

Yes; I would be delighted to have you tell that to Senator Van-DENBERG.

And so far as I know he did so.

But to recur to the Ford Motor Co., which has not been free from labor troubles, as I have heretofore stated, Mr. Harry H. Bennett said in a letter to Hon. Frank Murphy on January 10, 1939, a week ago today:

Permit me to congratulate you upon your appointment to the supreme office of Attorney General of the United States.

This, I repeat, is a letter from Mr. Bennett, of the Ford Motor Co.:

We feel that in appointing you President Roosevelt has selected a man who completely comprehends the requirements of the employed and those of the employer, who can distinguish between the rights of capital and the demands of labor, who can recognize the justice in the claims of each and mediate between them.

You have in the past, and particularly as Governor of Michigan, shown a keen and ultimately fair understanding of what the separate obligations of capital and labor should be and where each should have a beginning and ending.

Regardless of what expressed opinion may have been, we personally have always felt that your actions—

That is, Governor Murphy's actions in labor troubles in Michigan-were guided and prompted by a spirit of fairness and justice. We never regarded you as being unfair to either side, and it is our firm belief that in viewing your record while you were in our midst the United States Government has secured in your appointment a member of the Cabinet who will promulgate the spirit of righteousness, equality, and justice as provided by the Constitution of the

We congratulate you, but we even more congratulate the President upon the wisdom of his selection.

Wishing you every success and assuring you of our cooperation, I remain, Sincerely yours,

I will not detain the Senate longer upon this subject. I wish to leave just this one thought, that not one single individual, not a representative of a single Michigan corporation involved in the labor troubles of 1932 has intimated in the slightest any objection, that has come to my ears, as to the confirmation of the nomination of Frank Murphy as Attorney General of the United States, and we have here from the largest employer of labor in my State strong commendation of the selection made by the President of the United States.

Yesterday, Mr. President, there appeared in the Washington News a very fine editorial upon the subject. I ask that it be inserted in this place in my remarks, but I am going to read first the last paragraph of it, as follows:

And the record, we believe, shows that Governor Murphy did function with great effectiveness as a mediator—a peacemaker in situations of extreme difficulty and danger. He retained the confidence of the unions and, as many of them attest, of the auto manufacturers. And if, as he says, "the sit-down strike has now been thoroughly discredited," he seems fairly entitled to part of the credit. In short, we think Mr. Murphy's attitude toward the sit-down strike has been shown as reason why he should, rather than why he should not, be confirmed as Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial referred to by the Senator from Michigan will be printed in its entirety in the RECORD.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

MURPHY AND THE SIT-DOWNS

Critics have pointed to Frank Murphy's attitude toward sit-down strikes while he was Governor of Michigan as reason why he should not become Attorney General of the United States. He has given these critics an answer which, in our opinion, ought to silence them.

The Senate subcommittee which unanimously approved his nomination did not raise the sit-down issue. So he raised it himself, asked that hearings be reopened, and detailed the situation that had confronted him and the methods by which he had tion that had confronted him and the methods by which he had dealt with it.

Far from condoning the sit-down strike, he said that from the first he warned union leaders against use of this illegal weapon. "Of course" the conduct of the strikers was "unlawful and unjustified." But they were no "handful of common criminals who might be dispersed by a few police. They were thousands of honest citizens." Called upon to enforce a court order to eject strikers from a Flint plant, he did not refuse. Instead, asking brief delay in the use of troops—which would have involved grave risk of property damage, riot, and bloodshed—he enforced the order's intent by peaceful means. He served written notice on John L. Lewis and Homer Martin, union president, that the order must be obeyed. And that sit-down strike ended the next day.

Asked later why he did not use the Lewis-Martin letter in the recent Michigan campaign, when charges of partiality to the sit-

Asked later why he did not use the Lewis-Martin letter in the recent Michigan campaign, when charges of partiality to the sitdowners contributed to his defeat for reelection, Mr. Murphy said: "There was no point in making that letter public while I was Governor—except in defense of myself, personally. And my personal fortunes are a secondary matter." His whole thought, he explained, was to avoid doing anything that might lessen his effectiveness, while Governor, as a mediator of labor disputes.

And the record, we believe, shows that Governor Murphy did function with great effectiveness as a mediator—a peacemaker

And the record, we believe, shows that Governor Murphy did function with great effectiveness as a mediator—a peacemaker in situations of extreme difficulty and danger. He retained the confidence of the unions and, as many of them attest, of the auto manufacturers. And if, as he says, "the sit-down strike has now been thoroughly discredited," he seems fairly entitled to part of the credit. In short, we think Mr. Murphy's attitude toward the sit-down strikes has been shown as a reason why he should, rather than why he should not, be confirmed as Attorney General.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, in the hearing before the Judiciary Committee there appeared in the testimony a very illuminating letter which was drafted by Governor Murphy and read to John L. Lewis, the head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, the day before the General Motors strike was settled at Flint. That letter then, in unmeasured terms, condemned the sit-down strike as unlawful and as illegal.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention, in closing, to the fact that when, on March 19, 1937, I spoke in the Senate upon the settlement of the Chrysler strike I inserted in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD a statement at the conclusion of my remarks in which the Governor of Michigan, contrary to what the Senator from New Hampshire has said, then, in 1937, publicly, in a statement widely printed throughout the United States, condemned the sit-down strike. That condemnation appears at length on page 2486 of volume 81 of the Congressional Record of the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session. I quote a brief extract from that statement:

There is probably no need for stating at length the conditions that exist in Detroit and to a less extent in other communities in Public officials and, I believe, the great majority of our people, regardless of political faith or affiliation, are gravely disturbed by the prevalence of disputes between workers and employers, and a disposition in some quarters to ignore the law and violate the security and freedom of individuals and corporations in the exercise of ity and freedom of individuals and corporations in the exercise of their personal and property rights.

Public authorities have shown a disposition to be reasonable and patient. It has been the aim and hope of the State government to avoid needless violence that might result in rancor and bitterness, in the hope that peaceful and prompt settlement of disputes might be facilitated, to the advantage of the innocent and neutral public as well as the parties directly concerned.

For it must not be overlooked that more important even than the interests of the parties directly involved and the prompt settlement of particular disputes is the maintenance of public order and respect for public authority, as represented by the police and the judicial for public authority, as represented by the police and the judicial tribunals.

When the authority of governmental agencies is continually flouted or defled confidence in government is impaired and outraged citizens prepare to take the law into their own hands; democratic rule is endangered and the way is prepared for the rule of mobs or dictators; worst of all, labor movements and organizations are discredited, faith in liberal democratic government is permanently impaired, and social progress is impeded.

That is a lawyer's condemnation of the sit-down strike as I conclude, Mr. President, by urging upon my colleagues in the Senate the confirmation of the nomination of my good friend, Frank Murphy, and I wish to assure the Senate and the country that if his future measures up to his past he will make a great Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this nominee for Attorney General is a distinguished citizen of my State. The controversy over Governor Murphy's course in the labor difficulties of Michigan will be argued as long as memory lasts, and it never will be settled. There are violent differences of opinion upon the subject. I certainly do not intend to go over the whole thing again this afternoon. The whole record stands clear. I know the Senate has its mind completely made up in respect to what it proposes to do. I have little interest in debating futilities. I rise solely to state in half a dozen sentences my position upon this roll call.

In my opinion, at the chief base of the recent significant November elections in Michigan were much the same lawand-order issues that are inevitably involved in the confirmation of the nomination of ex-Governor Murphy to be the chief law officer of the Government. I participated actively in that referendum, and I concurred in its outcome, which defeated Governor Murphy for reelection. I have not changed my mind. Since Michigan settled this issue for herself so recently I have come to the conclusion, despite my belief that the President should have wide latitude in the choice of his personal agents, that Michigan's popular vote by those who lived intimately with these terrifying problems, rightly should and must control my own vote as their representative in this closely related instance and issue. It seems to me that Michigan's majority has a right to be recorded. Therefore, for this indicated reason, I shall vote "no."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, for the past 2 days I have been saying that I intend to vote for the confirmation of the appointments of Mr. Frankfurter and of Mr. Murphy.

I decided that I would vote for the confirmation of Mr. Murphy only after his testimony in which he denounced the sit-down strike. In the collecty today I brought that subject forward because I do not think the Senate ought to dispose of this matter without some of us, at any rate, making it perfectly clear that the vote for him today is not by way of condoning or passing upon the merits of his action during the sit-down strike period in Michigan.

Mr. President, I think three of the most unfortunate events in our recent history—limited, say, to the past 3 years—were the following:

First. The statement by the Secretary of Labor early in the spring of 1937, when the sit-down strikes were becoming epidemic, that the legality of the sit-down strike had not been determined. One could make allowance for the Secretary of Labor, because she is not a lawyer, and on numerous occasions she has tended to convince us that there were a great many subjects concerning which she knew nothing.

Second. When the Governor of Michigan in the great crisis of the sit-down strike delayed, tarried, dallied, and, as I thought at the time, flinched. I considered that extremely unfortunate.

Third. But equally unfortunate, in my judgment, was the failure of the Senate of the United States to denounce the sit-down strike in the same period. I refer to the defeat of the Byrnes rider, concerning which I made a speech on the floor of the Senate.

The consequence was that the impression went over the country that the sit-down strike was to be tolerated, and it permeated the country. It went everywhere; and whereas up to that time we had had what may be described as a rising economy, a general tendency—

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he leaves that part of his address?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish the sentence, and then, of course, I will yield. Whereas up to that time we had had what may be described as a rising economy, a general tendency in the direction of recovery, there was a pause and a recession, and men almost universally became afraid to invest their money in industries which would employ people when they were uncertain whether they would be allowed to operate those industries; uncertain whether Governors and other law officers would protect the rights of property, and, protecting the rights of property, protect the rights of persons to work. It was not just a matter of property, but of persons and property; and I do not think any great distinction can be made between personal rights and property rights, because if you can destroy my property you can starve me to death.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. I do not want the Senator to leave the implication that those of us who voted against the Byrnes resolution by any means upheld the legality of the sit-down strike. I took part in that debate, and I then specifically stated that the sit-down strike was illegal. I very distinctly remember that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] took the same position. Our view was that it was nothing more than or very similar to a resolution condemning the sit-down strike, but there was nothing that we could do with respect to the situation in Michigan; that was a matter for the Michigan State Legislature to handle.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, to be sure, in making a remark of the character that I have made, I raise no implication concerning any Senator, or his motive, or his vote. I have been here now for quite a time, and I not only understand the rule which requires us not to question the motives of a man's vote, but I understand its value. I intend always to observe it. I may say at this point that I also understand the value of the necessary courtesies in the Senate, and I intend always to observe them, as I am sure the Senator from Michigan does.

Now to go on:

I think Governor Murphy did delay under very serious circumstances, and he delayed knowing that he was delaying with an unlawful situation. The record shows that he knew that the sit-down strike was unlawful.

What was the character of that unlawfulness? It was the seizure of great industrial plants with force and arms. That is a very serious thing. If we can tarry with a mob that seizes a mill and says it shall not operate, that the members of the mob will not work and no one else shall work, we might tarry with a mob that seized the Senate. The principle is the same. None of us would want to tarry with a mob that seized the Senate; but if a mob came in here and took their seats, or if our friends who come here by courtesy and are now in the gallery, having gained entry lawfully, should undertake to maintain an unlawful possession, we would not hesitate to take all steps necessary to restore the Senate to possession of the Senate in order that there might be law.

So I was dealing with the great principles which underlie our civilization and our country. I am not concerned about Mr. Murphy. I think he is a good man. Every one who has spoken to me about him has said that he is a good man. I think he is a capable man. I think he is honest. I have no reason to say that he does not believe in the Constitution as fully as I do. I shall wish him the utmost success in his course. Whether or not I am in the Chamber when the vote is taken, I want it understood that I am voting for his confirmation.

In the whole history of our Senate there have been only 10 instances in which nominations to a Cabinet position have been rejected. It is rather singular that three of those instances were rejections of the same nominee for the same position, and all within a short time; and there was another instance in which one nomination was rejected twice. It might be said, therefore, that in the whole history of 150 years of the Senate there have been only seven rejections; and I understand why that is. I would not say that we are under obligation to confirm, but we do recognize that it is the right of the President to appoint almost unchallenged the members of his official family. It is probably a courtesy almost universally to be respected, certainly not to be disregarded except upon the most serious grounds.

Now, another matter, about the question of bloodshed: I do not like to talk about myself, but I suppose I am as little inclined to bloodshed as any man who ever lived. I do not even like to put a live bait on my hook when I am fishing. Sometimes I feel like making a little speech of sympathy to the worm before I stick the hook in him and put him in the water to catch a perch. I think we all have those feelings, and as we grow older we grow more that way. A boy does not hesitate to shoot a squirrel, but I see around me Senators who would not shoot a squirrel, and I know it has been many years since anybody could get me to shoot a squirrel. So I am not for bloodshed; but I am for law. I am for order; and while I do not like to boast in these respects, I hope I may say that I am like the new dealers in some respects; I am a realist. I am afraid that they have almost ruined that word; but we will let that pass.

The realities of the matter require us to recognize that there are occasions when bloodshed prevents greater bloodshed, and the suppression of the mob is always necessary to prevent greater bloodshed. The law itself is the antidote to bloodshed. When you temporize with the law, you cultivate bloodshed; you sow the seeds. We ought to recognize that.

I remember the last chapter in Carlyle's great history of the French Revolution. He told that story of blood and horror more graphically than it was ever told before or since. In the last chapter he described the mob coming down the street, and, to use his expression, "a whiff of grapeshot," and the mob dispersed. And there was silence and order in Paris, order for the first time in 5 years. Lady Guillotine ceased to reign. Heads were safe on shoulders. Homes were secure once again. The Little Corporal had found the cure for all the horrors of the French Revolution. With the "whiff of grapeshot" he had asserted the majesty of the law and established peace and laid the foundation of the empire. That is an argument for the law; that is not an argument for bloodshed. It was a pity for Napoleon's "whiff of grapeshot" to strike down the mob, oh, yes; and every one of us here could have wept; but he ended the reign of terror, and he saved tens of thousands of lives.

We may not like the billy of the policeman, or the pistol, we may not like the electric chair, or the gallows, we may not like the sword, and the bayonet, and the rifle, and the cannon, and the battleship, but as long as the world is as it is, as long as men there are who do desire to take the law into their own hands, we must recognize that these things are necessary. When the time comes to use them, I cannot use them, I am not a law-enforcing officer; my little girl cannot use them, she is not capable; it would not be right for my boy to use them, he is not vested with power. We must look to the officer of the law, the policeman, the constable, and the Governor.

Mr. President, that is all I wish to say. When we had this matter up in the Congress in the matter of the strikers seizing the mails of the United States, actually telling the United States Government what mail it could send through to its destination and what it could not, we had an investigation. I filed a report expressing my individual views. They were not the views of a moment, they were the views of a lifetime. So I ask unanimous consent that I may send forward this report and have it printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S. Rept. 885, pt. 3, 75th Cong., 1st sess.]

INVESTIGATION OF THE DELIVERY OR NONDELIVERY OF MAIL TO ESTAB-LISHMENTS WHERE INDUSTRIAL STRIFE IS IN PROGRESS

Mr. Balley, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, submitted the following individual views (to accompany S. Res.

"The undersigned does not agree with the report of the committee on Senate Resolution 140. The report of the committee states—"That by reason of the strike and the attitude of the strikers on the outside and the armed conditions existing on the inside of the several steel corporation plants, the unusual service demanded of the Post Office Department could not be safely carried on; that to have done so would have subjected the postal carriers to jeopardy of life and limb."

"It is true that by reason of the strike and the attitude of the strikers and so-called picketers the unusual service demanded of the Post Office Department could not safely be carried on, and that to have undertaken to carry it on would have subjected the postal carriers to jeopardy of life and limb. However, the fundamental conception of the Government is that the Government will make it safe for its servants to perform their duties in the functioning of the Government. Agreed that armed men threatened to kill carriers of the mail, it was the duty of the Government of the United States, primarily the duty of the Post Office Department, so to protect their postmasters and carriers as to make it safe for them to carry the mail, notwithstanding the threats of violence.

"A government must function notwithstanding men in violation of the law make it depresses to so the law make it depresses to so."

of the law make it dangerous to do so. The primary obligation of a government is safety. It is no excuse for failing to carry the mails to say that it was unsafe to carry them. If it was unsafe on the first day, it should have been made safe the second day, and it was the clear duty of the Post Office Department to call upon the Department of Justice for the means of preserving the law, and thereafter upon the President, to the end that the full power of the thereafter upon the President, to the end that the full power of the Government should be employed without delay to make it safe to carry the mail. This might have required the calling out of the Army, but if this were necessary, the Army itself should have been called out in order that the mail might be carried. If it be said that such a course might have caused bloodshed, the answer is that any other course is likely to cause much more bloodshed.

"Attention is called to the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States In re Debs (158 U. S. 564), from which I quote:

"But there is no such impotency in the National Government. The entire strength of the Nation may be used to enforce in any part of the land the full and free exercise of all national powers part of the land the full and free exercise of all national powers and the security of all rights entrusted by the Constitution to its care. The strong arm of the National Government may be put care. The strong arm of the National Government may be pur-forth to brush away all obstructions to the freedom of interstate commerce or the transportation of the mails. If the emergency arises, the Army of the Nation, and all its militia, are at the service of the Nation to compel obedience to its laws.

"When a Government suspends its functions simply because lawbreakers make it unsafe to perform them, it is surrendering the law to violators of the law. It is abdicating in favor of those who would take the law into their own hands.

"Suppose the example set here by the Post Office Department should be followed. Of what function of the Government would we be assured?

"A government can afford to weaken before a mob no more than it can afford to weaken before a highwayman.

The proper course for the Post Office Department was to have "The proper course for the Post Office Department was to have had warrants sworn out for the known offenders and have them brought at once before a United States commissioner and placed in jail or placed under bond pending trial, and if this procedure failed, then it was the clear duty of the Post Office Department to call upon the President of the United States to exert such force as was necessary to overcome the violent interference with the functioning of the Government. The evidence shows it delayed action 2 weeks, having in the meantime agreed to withhold lawful mail which the picketers objected to. The action in refusing to take the mail, taken under circumstances of duress, was calculated to encourage others to demand that the Government proceed with its functions according to the will of private citizens rather than its functions according to the will of private citizens rather than according to law. The strike leaders first made it unsafe to carry the mail, then stipulated what mail might be carried.

the mail, then stipulated what mail might be carried.

'I have little patience with the effort to make a distinction between normal mail and abnormal mail, but if made, it must be made freely by the authorities and not under duress. An American citizen has a right under the law to transmit mailable matter through the post office upon the payment of the postage required by law. A citizen pays his taxes, renders his general service as a citizen, in order that he may receive the benefits of the Government, and the carrying of the mails is a monopoly enjoyed by the Government for the benefit of its citizens. It is a benefit to which they are entitled as a matter of right.

"Wives were undertaking to send nackages of food medicine and they are entitled as a matter of right.

"Wives were undertaking to send packages of food, medicine, and clothing to their husbands, who were in industrial institutions making their livings. The wives were peaceful. The husbands were peaceful. Men who had taken the law into their own hands undertook to say what mail should go through and what mail should not go through. This was in violation of the law. Agreed that the amount of mail was abnormal on account of the unusual conditions, agreed that the character of the mails was abnormal, it is nevertheless true that the carrying of the United States mail is a function of the Government and the mail was lawful. No one else may carry the mail. An American citizen has a right to mail a package of food or clothing to another citizen, designating his address, and upon paying the postage has a right to demand the delivery of the mail. If it is unsafe at the moment to deliver it, it is the clear duty of the Government to make it safe to deliver it, and that without delay.

"The failure of the Post Office Department to take steps to make it safe to deliver the mail cannot be condoned and ought not to be overlooked by the Congress. We have at our command not to be overlooked by the Congress. We have at our command always the processes of the courts, and when these fall we have the armed power of a great Government. If we shall not use this armed power when necessary to preserve order or to enable the Government to function, when do we propose to use it? Under what desumetance is it to be used?

what circumstances is it to be used?

what circumstances is it to be used?

"The heart of the matter is not the carrying of the mail but the preservation of law by the Government charged with the duty of preserving the law. Civilization is always struggling for its life. There are many lawless men at large, and there are many men who ordinarily are law abiding, but who become lawless under exciting conditions. It is always the duty of the Government to cope with those who take the law into their own hands. It is always the duty of the Government to maintain the public peace. It must command respect for itself and its statutes. This is fundamental. It is true that it is primarily the duty of the State governments to maintain public peace within the States, but the carrying of the mails is a function of the Federal Government, and the last particle of power of the Federal Government must be employed whenever occasion demands. If men taking the law into their own hands make it unsafe for the humblest servant of the Government to perform his functions, it is the duty of the Government instantly to make it safe and to exhaust its powers to make it safe for him to function.

duty of the Government instantly to make it safe and to exhaust its powers to make it safe for him to function.

"The humblest man in America, as well as the greatest, has the right to have his mail carried upon the payment of the postage required by law, and it is no excuse that men taking the law into their own hands have made it unsafe to carry the mail, or that the mail was unusual in quantity or character. The Government may wait when floods destroy roads or bridges until the roads are restored and the bridges shall have been rebuilt. In event of war, the Government may have to win a war in order to event of war, the Government may have to win a war in order to carry mails to its citizens, but when a mob or individual, whether a picketer or a highwayman, makes it unsafe for the Government to function, the Government must without a moment's hesitation make it unsafe for him and safe for itself and its citizens. To do less is to invite the destruction of the Government, is to destroy the faith of the people in the capacity of their Government to perform its functions and to maintain order, and the maintenance of order is the fundamental function of the Government. When-ever it fails, others must meet violence with violence. They have ever it falls, others must meet violence with violence. They have no choice.

"I hope that the Post Office Department will never again undertake to excuse itself before the Congress by the plea that lawless men had made it unsafe to carry the mails. On the other hand, I hope that hereafter when lawless men or highwaymen or picketers or others interfere with the mails, instant action will be the rule and all the power necessary will be invoked in due season.

"I may say that the evidence showed that the men who were "I may say that the evidence showed that the men who were interfering with the mails and making it unsafe for the post-office officials to carry them were representatives of a labor organization known as the C. I. O. If this organization is to invoke the law, it ought to respect and obey the law. It cannot expect to be recognized as an agency for collective bargaining under the law unless it proposes to observe the law in other respects. An organization which makes a rule of disregarding the law cannot ask for the recognition of the law, nor may it expect the recognition of men and women who respect the law and look to it for their security. Government employees ought not to join an organization that does not respect and observe the laws of the Government. Government.

"Under the amendment to the resolution the committee heard testimony as to the Chicago riot. The testimony was consistent with the verdict of the coroner's jury that the homicides in that riot were justifiable. No representation is made here that it was all the testimony that might be produced. The police were dealing with an armed mob, proceeding to a plant where peaceful men were at work. The police warned the mob as required by law. It would not yield, but continued in an attitude of menace. Missiles were thrown. A shot was fired. Then the conflict. A mob must disperse upon orders from police authorities. To refuse to do so and continue in an attitude of menace is to invite and become responsible for consequences. In this view the question of which side first attacked is of secondary importance.

"Peaceful citizens expect peace officers to maintain the peace. Their actions as to the use of force are not to be 'weighed in golden scales,' to use a phrase from the Supreme Court of North Carolina. In stopping the progress of the mob and then in breaking it up, the question whether they used excessive force arises; but this is a question whether they were charged with "Under the amendment to the resolution the committee heard arises; but this is a question which is referred in the first instance to the discretion of the police officers. They were charged with the duty of employing all the force necessary. They were on the ground, they had to deal with the situation as they saw it. Opinions may differ as to the amount of force necessary, but the police officers are entitled to the benefit of the presumption that they acted in good faith and were in the best position to determine what was necessary. In such a position 'judicial temperament' is not expected.

determine what was necessary. In such a position 'judicial temperament' is not expected.

"Suppose they had run before the mob. If this is intolerable, who will say that in resisting and subduing it after fair warning, they did more than their duty? Bloodshed is deplorable, but if the public peace requires it, we must pay the price.

"I may add that I question the policy of congressional investigations in matters of this character. Are police officers under Federal supervision? Are they to be informed that their actions are to be reviewed by us? Congress investigates solely with the view to legislation. What legislation is in contemplation concerning police officers in Chicago or elsewhere? What legislation is in contemplation concerning civil servants in the State of Illinois? And if there are wrongs to be remedied, what is proposed to be done? If murder is committed in Chicago, does Congress propose to take jurisdiction? to take jurisdiction?

"Is the power of Congress to be invoked under the fourteenth amendment? If so, it may be well to recall the famous Slaughterhouse case (16 Wall. 36) and to quote the following:

"It would be the valuest show of learning to attempt to prove by citations of authority, that up to the adoption of the recent amendments, no claim or pretense was set up that those rights depended on the Federal Government for their existence or protection beyond the very few express limitations which the Federal Constitution imposed upon the States—such, for instance, as the prohibition against ex post facto laws, bills of attainder, and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But with the exception of these and a few other restrictions, the entire domain of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the States, as above defined, lay within the constitutional and legislative power of the States, and without that of the Federal Government. Was it the purpose of the fourteenth amendment, by the simple declaration that no State should make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, to transfer the security and protection of all the civil rights which we have mentioned, from the States to the Federal Government? And where it is declared that Congress shall have the power to enforce that article was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States?

'All this and more must follow if the proposition of the plaintiffs in error be sound. For not only are these rights subject to the control of Congress whenever in its discretion any of them are supposed in error be sound. For not only are these rights subject to the control of Congress whenever in its discretion any of them are supposed to be abridged by State legislation but that body may also pass laws in advance limiting and restricting the exercise of legislative power by the States in their most ordinary and usual functions as in its judgment it may think proper on all such subjects. And still further, such a construction followed by the reversal of the judgments of the Supreme Court of Louisiana in these cases would constitute this court a perpetual censor upon all legislation of the States on the civil rights of their own citizens, with authority to nullify such as it did not approve as consistent with those rights as they existed at the time of the adoption of this amendment. The argument, we admit, is not always the most conclusive which is drawn from the consequences urged against the adoption of a particular construction of an instrument. But when, as in the case before us, these consequences are so serious, so far-reaching and pervading, so great a departure from the structure and spirit of our institutions; when the effect is to fetter and degrade the State governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character; when in fact it radically changes the whole theory of the relations of the State and Federal Governments to each other and of both these Governments to the people the argument has a force that is irresistible in the absence of language which expresses such a purpose too clearly to admit of doubt.

"We are convinced that no such results were intended by the doubt doubt.

"We are convinced that no such results were intended by the Congress which proposed these amendments, nor by the legislatures of the States which ratified them."

"I disavow the remotest reflection upon any other committee, but bring the matter forward to suggest that the power of Congress to sit in judgment upon acts of local police—or, for that matter, of Governors or mayors—is very slender indeed. As yet, this is not a centralized government, and the principle of local self-government is yet a fundamental principle. The Federal Government may interfere only where Federal functions are involved, or strictly Federal rights are in question, by reason of State action, or the maintenance of a republican form of government in any State requires the exercise of Federal powers. As to what are the Federal rights—i. e., one's rights as a citizen of the United States as compared with his rights as a citizen of a State—I suggest a reading of the Slaughterhouse case cited above.

"The assembly was manifestly unlawful. It had gathered for an ing of the Slaughterhouse case cited above.

"The assembly was manifestly unlawful. It had gathered for an unlawful purpose and was proceeding to execute that purpose, to wit, to invade the property of others, take charge of it and expel workers from their posts of duty. It was armed with deadly weapons. The police had no choice; they had to uphold the law; to resist the mob and to disperse it. It was their duty to protect peaceful citizens at their work—in their right to work. They exhausted peaceful methods, and then met force with force. They are not responsible for the consequences, but the responsibility rests clearly upon those who were proceeding outside the law. If blame must be imposed for the bloodshed, it must be imposed on the mob that resisted the law and made bloodshed unavoidable. "To take any other view is to impose upon the guardians of the law condemnation for doing their duty, and to encourage the lawless accordingly. So long as this is a government of law, and not of men, those who uphold the law, and those who execute it, ought to be supported.

to be supported.

"There is nothing in the Wagner Labor Relations Act to justify or encourage violence. That act was intended to encourage lawful procedure. It is to be regretted that some agitators operating in the name of the organization known as the C. I. O. seem to have taken the opposite view. There is nothing to be not to encourage afforms of strikers to present others from working nothing in it to efforts of strikers to prevent others from working; nothing in it to encourage agitators to compel workers to join any organization or their organization; nothing to justify the resort to violence for the purpose of compelling employers to agree to or to sign contracts, Workers who desire the benefits of the act must proceed lawfully Workers who desire the benefits of the act must proceed lawfully and within the clear spirit of the legislation. Those who proceed otherwise are doing more than any others to destroy the legislation. If workers desire the repeal of the Wagner Act, the sure way to proceed is to interpret it as authorizing methods which some of their leaders have persisted in following since it was enacted. If any labor organization would have the sympathy of law-respecting citizens, it must uphold the law.

"I am fortunate in being able to conclude this expression of my views with a clear statement of the elementary law upon these matters by a distinguished North Carolina jurist, the Honorable N. A. Sinclair, supporting a judgment of his court in a recent case,

"There is nothing in this case that calls for injunctive relief. The law is plain. Employees have a right to stop work, to join a labor union, and to strike. On the other hand, employees have a labor union, and to strike. On the other hand, employees have the right to work and to refuse to join a union or a strike. And it is the duty of the police authorities to protect both classes of employees in the exercise of such rights. Members of the union have a right to persuade other employees to join the union or to join a strike by use of methods that are peaceful and not calculated to disturb the peace, but they do not have the right to resort to methods of intimidation or annoyance. An employee is antitled to the same protection in his right to work as another is entitled to the same protection in his right to work as another is to his right to strike. The strikers have the right to picket in a lawful manner and they have the same right to the public streets for that purpose that any other citizen has, but they do not have a right to intimidate or obstruct or annoy an employee going to or from his work or while he is actually engaged in work, nor do they have any right to invade or trespass upon any property or premises of the employer.

"'It is the duty of the police authorities to protect striking employees in their effort to induce other employees to join a strike or that of members of the union to persuade others to join the union, as long as they pursue lawful means to such ends, but it is no less their duty to protect every man in his right to work and to protect such workers from insult, intimidation, obstruction, or annoyance while at work or when proceeding to or from their work. They are entitled to free ingress and egress to and from their work without interference, intimidation, or annoyance from work. They are entitled to free ingress and egress to and from their work, without interference, intimidation, or annoyance from anyone. If any member of the law-enforcing authorities refuses to furnish such protection to the rights of any employee, whether a member of a union or not, and whether a striker or not, he would be amenable to the law and subject to prosecution for neglect of official duty—and the courts are always open to anyone who has a complaint to make.

who has a complaint to make.

"But it is the duty of the police authorities to maintain peace and order upon the streets and prevent any conduct calculated to produce a breach of the peace, and this must be left to their sound discretion. It is not only impossible but the courts have no power under the Constitution to control or direct the police authorities as to when and how they shall exercise their discretion in the performance of these duties. If for any reason the local authorities, after exhausing their resources, cannot maintain law and order and protect the lawful rights of all concerned, both workers and non-workers, as well as the property owners, then it will become their duty to call upon the State to furnish such force as may be necessary for that purpose. sary for that purpose.

But in the midst of the industrial strife and bitter controversies with which certain portions of the country are torn today, it is well to remember that North Carolina has not abdicated its duty nor surrendered its power to protect the rights of all alike—the employee and the employer, the union member and the nonunion member, the striker and the worker; others may do as they may, but in North Carolina the law is supreme and the State must exercise such authority as may be necessary to maintain law and order within its borders and to protect human rights and property rights and the right of every free man to work without molestation or hindrance by anyone.

"A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is essential to the preservation of our liberties (Bill of Rights, Constitution of North Carolina).

"Respectfully submitted.

"JOSIAH W. BAILEY."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to say a word in regard to this nomination.

When the nomination of Frank Murphy was submitted to the Senate and was before the committee, it seemed to me at once that there was only one question which could be raised about it. Anyone who knows the nominee, who knows the splendid character he is, who knows his sterling worth, could have no question about anything in his entire career or anything in his qualifications for the office to which he has been appointed, other than regarding what we know as the sit-down strike epidemic in Michigan as it might be developed. And in that connection there was only one phase of the matter which interested me.

I should not want to cast a vote today in favor of confirmation of this nominee if I felt that by so doing I would lend the slightest encouragement to those forces in this country who are willing to flout law and order, who are willing to take the law into their own hands to accomplish their purposes. I would speak against confirmation and vote against it if I thought any person could justly say that a vote today in favor of confirmation could have that effect.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that exactly the opposite is true, that as the result of the examination of this nominee, and of the statement he made before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, the country now has before it a clear, definite, and positive statement from one who has become the highest enforcement officer in the Government that sit-down strikes are illegal, and that any organization of labor which indulges in that practice, which seizes the property of others, is rendering a disservice not only to itself but to the entire cause of labor. We had in the statement of this nominee before the Senate committee as eloquent a plea in favor of law enforcement and order as has ever come from the lips of any citizen of this country.

Therefore, instead of a vote for confirmation of this nominee being construed anywhere as a vote in favor of sit-down strikes, or a vote in favor of disregard of law and order, I say that we have a right to feel that a vote in favor of confirmation is a vote in strongest terms in condemnation of sit-down strikes and in favor of strict enforcement of law and order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator who has been so kind as to yield was a member of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary which conducted the investigation in this case.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator's statement is correct. Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BURKE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has spoken of the appearance of Attorney General Murphy before the subcommittee when he gave positive testimony as to his views in regard to sitdown strikes. But does not the Senator agree that the statement made by Attorney General Murphy to Mr. Lewis at the time of the sit-down strike speaks far more eloquently of his attitude than even his testimony before our committee?

Mr. BURKE. Yes; I agree with that statement fully. Every one trained in the law would recognize that statements made at the time of an occurrence are of far more probative force than those made after events have developed.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BURKE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. BRIDGES. I have great admiration for the views of the Senator from Nebraska, but the statement he just made, that a vote for Murphy is a vote for law and order, is based on what Mr. Murphy says now rather than on what the record shows. Is that not true?

Mr. BURKE. I think that statement would have to be connected with the query just propounded by the senior Senator from New Mexico, that the nominee has not changed his position; that he is not now, in the interest of his confirmation or of his standing in the country, making a statement contrary to something he believed a year and a half ago, or whenever these disturbances happened in Michigan.

It seemed to me very important that the statement to which the Senator from New Mexico referred should be brought out in the hearing. The nominee did not bring the matter forward at first. It happened that I was familiar with the statement which had been prepared at the time of the event, and it was in response to my inquiry that the nominee produced from his papers the statement made at that time. He was not bringing it forward in his own behalf as evidence before the committee. It was brought forward in response to a question I propounded to him, and it seemed to me of tremendous importance as showing clearly that this nominee at all times desired to do exactly the right thing in the right way.

We may differ as to the correctness of the decision he reached at the time. I think that is a matter open to argument. In fact, I was very much opposed to the way the situation was handled, my judgment being based upon the newspaper reports at the time, which were accurate, so far as I know; but, looking at it just from the outside and from a distance, it seemed to me then that the Governor should have reached a different decision and should have proceeded, with whatever ruthlessness was required, to enforce the law literally and correctly.

Being interested in the matter I took occasion to go a little more deeply into it at the time, and became convinced that there was at least as much to be said in favor of the decision that Governor Murphy reached as against it. I am fully satisfied, as is the chairman, Mr. President-and this is all I care to say—that any Member of the Senate today can vote in favor of confirmation of Governor Murphy as Attorney General and be entirely clear in his conscience, so far as any statements have heretofore been made, or may be made hereafter, that by so doing he is not giving encouragement to those who do not believe in strict enforcement of the law. In fact, for myself, I go even further, and say that in voting for confirmation, I do so because I believe we are in that way making a real contribution to the complete extermination of the sit-down strike method in this country, and toward raising the standards of law and order to a higher level than they have attained heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the question of the confirmation of the nomination of Frank Murphy to be Attorney General of the United States the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE—AUTHORITY TO REPORT DURING RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce will vote tomorrow on the nomination of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins to be Secretary of Commerce. There is no business that need call the Senate back tomorrow, if we may have an understanding that the committee may file its report, and that the nomination may go on the Executive Calendar, so that it may be taken up on Thursday. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be authorized to file its report during the recess or adjournment of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that request. It will permit us to have a holiday tomorrow in which to attend to other matters. May I ask the Senator, if we conclude the consideration of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins on Thursday, whether or not it is the intention to adjourn from Thursday until Monday?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that it is contemplated that if we shall conclude consideration of Mr. Hopkins' nomination on Thursday, which I hope we may, we shall then adjourn until the following Monday. Would the Senator be willing now to enter into an agreement that we shall vote on Thursday on Mr. Hopkins' nomination?

Mr. McNARY. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the Commerce Committee be authorized to report during the recess or adjournment of the Senate, and that whatever report it makes with reference to Mr. Hopkins may be taken up on Thursday? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, this day may we hallow Thy holy name by thought, word, and deed; forbid, gracious Lord, that we should ever take it in vain. We rejoice that Thy fatherhood makes the whole world akin; it deepens in the minds of men right and truth. We fervently pray Thee that where chaos reigns order may prevail and where lawlessness runs riot there may come recovered strength of well-organized society. Most blessed Spirit, inspire us with Thy guidance, cleanse that which is sordid, heal that which is wounded, and may we ever cherish that which is right and just. Come, our Father, be our repose in labor, our support in conflict, and our sweetest refreshment in affliction, and thine shall be the praise. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 16, 1939, was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, on last Monday the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania dedicated to agricultural pursuits the largest building that was ever dedicated in the United States to that cause. It is 40 feet longer and 20 feet wider than the arena in Madison Square Garden.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert in the RECORD an address I made on that occasion.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in regard to the proposed Puget Sound, Grays Harbor, Willapa Harbor, and Columbia River Canal, and to include excerpts from a report prepared by the Pacific Northwest Waterways Association.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE EDWARD P. COSTIGAN

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to inform the House of the death last evening, at his home in Denver, Colo., of Hon. Edward Prentiss Costigan. former United States Senator from Colorado.

Senator Costigan was born in King William County, Va., July 1, 1874. When a boy he moved with his parents to Denver. He attended the public schools and later attended Harvard College, from which he was graduated in 1899 with the degree of bachelor of arts. He studied law and was admitted to the bar of Utah in 1897. He began the practice of law in Denver in 1900. In 1903 he married Mabel G. Cory, of Denver, who has been his helpmate, counselor, and inspiration throughout the years.

He has been a leader in all reform movements in Denver, in Colorado, and indeed throughout the Nation.

From 1903-6 he was an organizer and attorney of the Honest Election League in Denver, and 1906-8, of the Law Enforcement League. He was attorney for the Anti-Saloon League in local option litigation before the Colorado Supreme Court, and was chairman of Dry Denver Campaign Committee in 1910. He was an organizer of the Direct Primary League and Direct Legislation Leagues of Colorado. He served as president of the Civil Service Reform Association of Denver, and was an organizer of the Citizens Party, which carried the Denver municipal election in 1912. He represented Colorado merchants, the Denver Chamber of Commerce, and Arizona commercial interests in freight-rate litigation before the Interstate Commerce Commission. In 1914, at the time of the congressional investigations of the Colorado coal strike, he was attorney for the United Mine Workers of America, and in the murder trials growing out of this strike, in the last case tried, secured acquittals, in March 1916, for all defendants.

He was a founder of the Progressive Party in 1912, and its unsuccessful candidate for Governor of Colorado in 1912 and again in 1914. He was a staunch supporter of President Theodore Roosevelt and later of President Woodrow Wilson.

In March 1917 he was appointed by President Wilson a member of the United States Tariff Commission. In September of 1918 he was reappointed by President Wilson to this Commission, on which he continued to serve until his resignation in March of 1928.

In 1930 he was elected on the Democratic ticket as United States Senator from Colorado. He was an ardent and effective supporter of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Gifted with an exceptionally rich, clear, and impressive voice, having complete command of our language and possessed apparently of infinite capacity for painstaking work, Senator Costigan, soon after taking his seat, came to be recognized as one of the ablest Members of the Senate.

But he had never had a robust constitution, and his unremitting work began to impair his health. In March 1936 he suffered a physical break-down, which made it impossible for him to continue his duties in the Senate or to undertake the arduous work of a campaign for renomination and reelection in Colorado, which is always a doubtful State. For months death seemed imminent each day. But, tenderly and constantly cared for by his noble and devoted wife, he fought for his life for almost 3 years. Of late he appeared to be slightly improving, so much so that his friends were encouraged to hope that he would fully recover. Last night he succumbed to an attack of pneumonia.

To me, and to thousands of other citizens of Denver, of Colorado, and of the Nation at large, the death of Senator Costigan is a personal bereavement. I personally have known him for 37 years and have known him well. Whatever differences of opinion anyone may have entertained concerning any of the views of Senator Costigan on public questions, no one could question his ability, his sincerity, or his courage. Although never yielding one iota from his principles, or deviating a hair's breadth from his determined course, he was always, despite the greatest provocation, courteous, considerate, and charitable to everyone. In all things and at all times he was, in the truest sense, a gentleman.

No problem of any individual was so insignificant that it failed to command his personal attention and conscientious consideration. No public question was too large or too important for him to be appalled by its magnitude, or for him to fail to address to its solution his indefatigable industry and all the powers of a well-trained and supremely able mind.

Senator Costigan devoted himself exclusively and unreservedly to unselfish public service. In that service he sacrificed his health and his life. He wore himself out in the service of the people of his city, of his State, and of the Nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Wigglesworth] is recognized.

THE LATE RICHARD OLNEY, FORMER MEMBER OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time for the purpose of announcing to the House the death at his home in Boston of Hon. Richard Olney, of Massachusetts, formerly a Member of this House.

Born in 1871, bearing the name of an illustrious uncle who served both as Attorney General and as Secretary of State under President Cleveland, Mr. Olney was to enter upon a public career himself almost 35 years ago and to devote himself for many years to the public service both in his native State and in the Nation.

In Massachusetts his service included a number of years in the legislature, membership on the minimum-wage commission, chairmanship of the State parole board, and more recently the chairmanship of the State Division of the Necessaries of Life. In Washington his service included 6 years, from 1915 to 1921, as a Member of this House, and at a later date membership on the World War Foreign Debt Commission, to which he was appointed by President Harding and reappointed by President Coolidge.

As a Member of the House of Representatives, Mr. Olney represented the people of the district whom I have the great honor to represent at this time. The older Members of this body will remember the splendid service which he rendered here, particularly during the period of the World War.

Personally, though of different political faith, I shall always be grateful for the unfailing friendship and consideration which he was good enough to give me at all times during my service here in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, Dick Olney will be missed, and deeply missed, by the wide circle of friends which was his in every walk of life as a result of his devoted and distinguished service to State and Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting in the Record a timely and challenging statement on the question of preparedness, delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Youngdahl] over the Mutual Broadcasting System on Monday evening last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the conclusion of the legislative business for the day, I may address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a resolution from landowners of Mississippi County, Mo., mailed to me in reference to the sharecropper uprising in that section, which has been so grossly exaggerated by the newspapers throughout the Nation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the Appendix of the Record the address of our new colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Mundt], delivered last Saturday before the Women's Republican Club of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. Fish and Mr. Landis asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by including therein an address I delivered over the radio in December on the state of the Nation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a brief which I filed recently with the Army engineers at a hearing on the White River at Harrison, Ark.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of libel and slander over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on January 7, at the Jackson Day dinner at Dallas, Tex., Hon. William O. Douglas, Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, made an address, parts of which might not be of interest to all Members, but other parts of which I know will be of interest to the majority of the Members.

I ask unanimous consent to insert this speech at this point in the RECORD, and my reason for doing so is that for the most part it is a very informative discussion of the duties and functions of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object-and, of course, I shall not object to the request-for information may I ask if the gentleman will tell us what is going to be the program for Thursday and Friday of this week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. The Appropriations Committee will report the first deficiency bill, and I think that committee will want to take the major part of Thursday and Friday for the consideration of this bill. That will be all the legislation that will be presented to the House this week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the vote will probably come on Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; the vote will probably come on Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I note the first thing the Congress seems to be requested to do is to take up a deficiency bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to yield to the gentleman, but I do not see any reason for the gentleman's remarks going in between my remarks and Mr. Douglas' ad-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I am not going to object—when we adjourn on Friday will we adjourn over until Monday; and may I inquire further whether the House will be in session on Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. The only thing that will be done in the House this week so far as legislation is concerned will be consideration of the first deficiency bill.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will we be in session on Monday and Tuesday of next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think so.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Address of William O. Douglas, Chairman, Securities and Ex-CHANGE COMMISSION, AT THE TEXAS JACKSON DAY DINNER, DALLAS, TEX., SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1939

Though this is the first time I have been in Texas, I have felt ever since stepping off the train like him who, long absent, has at last come home. Your inimitable hospitality alone was sufficient to create that feeling. There is also a close resemblance between the climate of opinion, the frank and outspoken manner, the two-fisted attitude, the progressive idealism of Texas and that part of the far west which I still claim, along with Connecticut, as home. But there is even more to it than that, for the Securities and Exchange Commission and Texas have had a long and a close associations. change Commission and Texas have had a long and a close association.

The advent of the S. E. C. is closely associated with the activities of two statesmen from Texas. The Commission administers the Fletcher-Rayburn Act of 1933, the Fletcher-Rayburn Act of 1934, and the Wheeler-Rayburn Act of 1935. That is how the S. E. C. acquired its Sam Rayburn hallmark. And we are proud of it, as I know you are. Your great Congressman's part in this typically Texas program to restore to finance the old-fashioned standards of conservatism, honesty, and fair play is well known. Less familiar, perhaps, is the fact that when the fight for the Stock Exchange Act was at its hottest in 1934 and the outlook for its passage was dark, a fellow Texan supplied the final ounce of pressure necessary to put a fellow Texan supplied the final ounce of pressure necessary to put the measure through on the Senate side. He also remained steadfast on the firing line, as respects the other acts, and never retreated. I refer to Jack Garner, Vice President of the United

So when I talk about the S. E. C. in Texas I am talking about it in its home State.

For these various reasons I almost feel entitled to salute you this evening as "fellow Texans."

There is another reason also why I mention the S. E. C. on this Andrew Jackson anniversary. In common with a host of other Roosevelt and Democratic accomplishments, its history is strong in the Jacksonian tradition. The struggles which preceded the advent of the statutes it administers are reminiscent of the battles which Old Hickory had with the financial powers.

The first of the laws under which the S. E. C. operates is sometimes called the "truth in securities" bill. It was passed to give the investing public honest and complete information about new issues of stocks and bonds. It was passed to restrict the illegitimate enterprise; it was passed to protect the honest business and the investor. Nobody could object to the principle of this measure. Neither could its need be questioned—at least not by anyone familiar with the uninforming and misinforming salesmanship by which new issues were often marketed in predepression days. Yet which new issues were often marketed in predepression days. Yet the cry was raised that corporations and underwriters, no matter how well intentioned, would not dare to issue new securities, howhow well intentioned, would not dare to issue new securities, however sound; that the restrictive influence of that act would be so severe as to paralyze the capital markets. Yet corporations today accept the new requirements as a matter of course. The ultimate source of most complaints, as still are made today, is to be found in the proponents of questionable schemes which we have scotched. Honest business, through the machinery of the act, has offered more than ten billions of securities for sale. And the public has been saved hundreds of millions of dollars through the Commission's refusal to allow fraudulent or shady offerings to be made to the public. The Securities Act of 1933 has not only been a protective influence for investors; it has also taught many managements tive influence for investors; it has also taught many managements many things about their own companies.

Thus one of the important influences in bringing to light the Coster-Musica scandal was the fact—not generally known—that McKesson & Robbins was planning a new bond issue, and that the necessity for presenting an honest picture of the company in the registration statement was the occasion for Mr. "Coster's" associates asking him many questions to which he was not able to give a satisfactory reply.

Here again the objective of the act was conservative and old-fashioned. It sought to regulate stock exchanges, to prevent pool operations, to control "insiders" abuse of their positions, and to eliminate many other inteferences with the natural flow of security markets. Here again the purpose of the act was unassailable, both from the point of view of honest business and from the standpoint of protection of the public. But ness and from the standpoint of protection of the public. But again there was protest, and again false issues were raised. Thus Richard Whitney, testifying against the bill, gave this dire prediction if the margin requirements were included:

"We believe we will have panic and an absolute break-down of the security markets of this country, naturally to the great detriment of those investors holding these listed securities."

There were many other objections, but most of them came down to the argument that if professional traders were not allowed a free could not be kept alive by the unstimulated orders of legitimate investors. But events, both before and after the act, have demonstrated that a free and open market for American investors is preferable to a sizzling, boiling market for Wall Street operators.

The reactionaries and the inactionaries objected even louder and longer to the act of 1935. This measure, as you know, deals with public-utility holding companies and their widely scattered operating companies. It has particular impact on holding companies separated from their operating companies by whole mountain ranges of intermediate holding companies.

separated from their operating companies by whole mountain ranges of intermediate holding companies.

The holding-company bill proposed that these systems should be geographically and financially integrated. Some ingenious person, with a gift for picturesque description but not for accuracy, labeled the integration provisions of the act the "death sentence." By the use of this misinforming title an attempt was made to create the impression that the S. E. C. was going after the utility industry of the United States like St. Patrick went after the snakes of Ireland. The impression is, of course, entirely false. The law is designed to eliminate only the superfluous or injurious intermediate company, which has no real economic function but lends itself to manipulation of securities the premiding of control the abuse of manipulation of securities, the pyramiding of control, the abuse of minority interests, and the milking of operating subsidiaries. The act is designed, by limiting the geographical expanse of any one holding-company system, to put some ceiling on size; to place some curb on concentration of financial power in the electric and gas

As has been the case with most liberal measures, these acts were all forged in a furnace of intense heat. Jack Garner was telling me the other day that they even labeled him as a Communist. The opposition to the enactment of these laws was reminiscent in quality and intensity to the opposition confronting Andrew Jackson in his encounters with Nicholas Biddle and the Bank of the United States. But today most of the heat has gone up the chimney and most of the opposition fires are burning low, and those like Jack Garner, who were carrying the brunt of the battle and who were dubbed as Communists, have been given well-deserved recognition for their constructive leadership in a liberal

Today the basic principles of these acts are thoroughly accepted by conservatives and liberals alike. Few could now be found who would wipe them out and restore the anarchistic system which preceded them. Certainly there are those who think this legisla-tion can be improved upon. But, over all, these laws stand as permanent milestones of a broad liberal advance and a strengthening of the capitalistic system under the leadership of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

And so I smile when an occasional critic complains that the ob-

And so I smile when an occasional critic complains that the objectives of liberal or reform government are not compatible with the objectives of honest business. I smile because the daily work of the S. E. C. belies this empty claim. Business accepts these acts. Its representatives sit at our round-table with us. Many of our accomplishments are joint accomplishments—demonstrations by liberal government and honest business that they can live and progress together. There are many evidences of this. I need cite only two. The first reflects a new sentiment in Wall Street, best stated by one of its most progressive leaders, the new president of the New York Stock Exchange. Recently he said:

"The stock exchange welcomes Government regulation and supervision. * * We have a joint responsibility with the Government to see that the people of this country have as sane, as honest, and as efficient a market as it is humanly possible to provide. The old maxim, "To govern well, govern little," will not be applied by thinking people today as our problem. We do not regard government as a necessary evil. Our Government should be our greatest pride and a part of the very fabric of our lives. * * * There are some who find any supervision of business by government repugnant. We have no patience with that attitude. Such a view-point is unreal and is not likely to attract any substantial followrepugnant. We have no patience with that attitude. Such a viewpoint is unreal and is not likely to attract any substantial following among practical men and women."

The second is illustrated by a step which marks the dawn of a new era in the attitude of the public-utility industry toward Government supervision. In the closing days of 1938 the utility industry, unanimously and without coercion, filed with the S. E. C.
their tentative plans for complying with the integration provisions—the so-called death sentence—of the Holding Company Act. To be sure, we asked them to submit such plans to us, but the request was by no means an order. But they did not take the position that it was our part to submit the suggestions and their part to oppose them; instead, they replied in a cooperative spirit. And we are now holding round-table discussions with them in a common endeavor to mold these plans to fit the law, to reconstruct those systems along sound conservative lines, and to preserve the financial integrity of those systems in the process.

Thus history repeats itself. That which was once deemed radical becomes the strength of conservatism. It has been true of banking legislation of financial legislation. When the becomes the strength of conservatism. It has been true of banking legislation, of financial legislation, of social legislation. When the heat of battle is lifted and emotions cool off, reform of yesteryear becomes the standard and accepted practice of today. The workaday world translates into practical realities the liberal's ideals.

This depicts in miniature the function of the liberal in our Gov-

This depicts in miniature the function of the liberal in our Government. His function and the function of the Democratic Party have been identical. It is the function of supplying the energizing and directive force to keep government abreast of economic and social change. It is the task of making democratic government effective by making it responsive to social and economic change. It is the undertaking of making certain that government, as the agent of a free people, is able and willing to serve the needs of the people at those points where self-help breaks down. That was the service rendered by Andrew Jackson. That is the significance of the great leadership of Franklin Roosevelt. Those men and other Democratic leaders have been the pioneers in keeping our Government a servant of the common man. They are responsible for keeping democracy a living force rather than a ritualistic form. They have been capitalism's best friend by continuously endeavor-

Government a servant of the common man. They are responsible for keeping democracy a living force rather than a ritualistic form. They have been capitalism's best friend by continuously endeavoring to keep it conservative, respectable, and honest. No leaders have done more to preserve the vitality and strength of both capitalism and democracy than have Jackson and Roosevelt.

Both Jackson and Roosevelt took office when democracy was at a low ebb; political democracy in 1828; economic democracy in 1932. Both Democratic leaders were bitterly opposed by those who, having gained for themselves privileges and emoluments through their domination of the old system, were bitterly against any renaissance of the democratic ideal as revolutionary and destructive. The work of Jackson is over, and history has returned its verdict upon it. The work of our President is still unfinished. But so much has been already accomplished that we may face the judgment of the future years with confidence. The Roosevelt administrations will take their place beside the administrations of Jefferson and Jackson as the greatest periods of peacetime advancement in American history. To those who believe in democracy, the years of greatest significance are the years in which democracy has moved forward the most.

On the surface the 1920's had much to recommend them. But everyone knows how little genuine progress was made in the years between 1920 and 1930. When we look back upon those years, what accomplishment can we discover that has stood the test of the few years between that time and now? To be sure the old guard of business and finance were busy taking care of themselves. Their financial machines located in far distant finanthe cless of the few years between that time and now? To be sure the old guard of business and finance were busy taking care of themselves. Their financial machines located in far distant finan-cial centers were siphoning off the wealth of this and other regions of the country. They erected certain monuments by which to remember them, although the memories are hardly happy. The intricate holding-company structure of incorporated pyramids such as the Insull and Van Sweringen systems was perhaps the most conspicuous of their accomplishments. The investment trusts, which in 1929 alone attracted some $2,000,000,000 of public money, were perhaps the most costly. There was little of lasting value, even to industry itself, since immediate profit was made only at the price of future loss. I do not think it partisan to describe the 1920's as a barren period from the standard of describe the 1920's as a barren period from the standpoint of described the 1920's as a barren period from the standpoint of democracy. Certainly what the decade produced was crumbling even before the decade was over. Nor did the 1920's ever hold out much more than empty promises to the ordinary citizen. The old guard were never more than incidentally interested in the welfare of the common

In the Jacksonian period, however, progress was fundamental. Andrew Jackson was greeted by no bull market. At his inaugural a Supreme Court Justice remarked that "the reign of King Mob is with us." Daniel Webster, amazed because the inaugural had atdays to get from 500 miles around—at a time when it took 4 days to get from Philadelphia to Washington—said, "One might have thought that the country had actually been saved from some great danger." But Jackson was never popular with those in the high places. Following the vital administrations of Washington. have thought that the country had actually been saved from some great danger." But Jackson was never popular with those in the high places. Following the vital administrations of Washington and Jefferson, political control had settled in the hands of an aristocratic clique. The Presidency appeared likely to become the permanent property of the first families of Virginia and of Massachusetts. It was Andrew Jackson, from Tennessee, who broke this tradition—Andrew Jackson, the border captain, elected by the poor men of the cities and the rough men of the frontiers. As one historian has put it: "With the election of Jackson the people of the United States may be said to have come into the possession of the powers which had been held in trust for them by the founding fathers." fathers.

And as it was with the man who founded the Democratic Party, so it is with the man who now leads it. I need hardly remind this audience of the circumstances under which Franklin D. Roosevelt delivered his first inaugural. Nor is it necessary to review in detail the progress made since that forbidding day. Like Jackson, the President has allied himself with the interests of the common man.

President has allied himself with the interests of the common man. Both political democracy and economic democracy have by tradition become Jacksonian and Rooseveltian principles. Both principles are fundamental to the general welfare. It is the privilege and the responsibility of all real Democrats to see that those principles are kept alive, as they were by the triumph which Democracy won a hundred years ago, 6 years ago, and 2 years ago.

The requirements for such a triumph make it plain that the Democratic Party must continue to be, as it has been for more than a hundred years, the pioneering party of the Nation. Never has there been a greater need than at the present time for the frontier spirit, which thrives upon attacking barriers and extending boundaries. Never has there been a greater need for a strong, united front by all liberals. The nature of the opposition demands it. I do not mean to denounce opposition. I would be the first to defend it. It occupies a high place where free speech and democracy flourish. But let us not be deluded by the specious form which it currently is beginning to take.

Even the old-line Republican is trying to appropriate the progress which has been already made by taking it over and putting his own label on it. The enemies of the New Deal no longer openly advocate its destruction. Now they are paying lip service to its principles.

which has been already made by taking it over and putting his own label on it. The enemies of the New Deal no longer openly advocate its destruction. Now they are paying lip service to its principles. Knowing that they cannot destroy this advanced social program, they hope that they may be able to get control of it. On its face the issue thus presented raises no basic difference between the two parties. On the surface Democratic liberalism is adopted by the Perublicans.

Republicans.

Such an attitude is, in its way, a compliment to the New Deal and to its endorsement by the people. We Democrats may be pardoned for taking pride in the fact that our traditional opponents are seeking to identify themselves with democratic objectives. They are seeking to identify themselves with democratic objectives. They admit that our program is working. They concede that it is practical. The inactionary impliedly confesses that the hobgoblins which he detected in these laws at the time of their passage were merely examples of what President Roosevelt has referred to as "seeing things under the bed." But although we may appreciate the compliment, we should not be deceived by it.

For we know that although lip service may be rendered the basic principles, danger lurks at two points. The first is the risk of amendments to these laws which will emasculate them; the second is a perfunctory administration of this broad social program. As much is to be feared from those who claim to endorse the principles but who question the laws and attack the agencies which administer them, as is to be feared from those who reject the principles themselves. We would not entrust a program for improving our highways to the person who has all along insisted that the old dirt roads are good enough. When any program is adopted by those who have been its traditional enemies, that program is really endangered. They want it merely for their political prospectuses.

But the basic issues are even more fundamental. The New Deal But the basic issues are even more fundamental. The New Deal has not come to the end of any road. The Democratic Party has never been willing to be completely content, along with the conservative party, with accomplishments to date. Its force, its virtue, its contributions to our national life lie in its willingness to meet change and to defy inaction.

Certainly the present is no time in which to make a compact with inaction or to take counsel with reaction. Here and abroad the world is moving so rapidly that no one can keep up with it by standing on the ground he has already won. In Europe today some nations have already been forced to choose between reaction and revolution. In this country we have a better choice—a choice between reaction and progress. The Democratic Party has the tradition, the brains, and the courage to supply a progressive leadership under liberal banners without which that choice cannot be long preserved. The function of the Democratic Party has always been to supply that leadership. This is its Jacksonian tradition. Let us keep democracy strong and united in that tradition. If we are successful, it will remain the party of progress, making neither concessions to nor compromises with any foe of capitalism and democracy—whether he be on the extreme right or on the extreme left. If we are successful, we can have progress with law and order, with respect for private property, and with reverence for individual liberty, without the lawlessness characteristic of the extremists on either side.

In this way I am certain that the progress we have already made will be preserved and extended. And I know that no more enthusiastic support can be found for such program than the support

In this way I am certain that the progress we have already made will be preserved and extended. And I know that no more enthusiastic support can be found for such program than the support given it by the people of Texas, a coming industrial State of the Union. I know, too, that the Lone Star State, so long committed to the principle of Democratic unity, will not countenance any attempt of any third party to take from the Democratic Party its stalwart espousal of the liberal movement.

So tonight we pledge ourselves to keep our Democratic Party genuinely progressive; never to allow it to become contentedly reactionary. Tonight we hall the New Deal not as an experiment but as an accomplishment—an accomplishment which has deservedly earned the approval of the people. Tonight we look back on the 1930's as a period of tremendous progress—a progress not measured by mergers and ticker tape but by the common welfare and the general good. Tonight we salute progressive and enlightened business which recognizes that the principles of liberal government and the principles of modern business are wholly compatible. Tonight we hall the ability of liberal government and honest business to work together harmoniously and constructively to a common end. Tonight we acclaim the New Deal as a milestone in the advancement of democracy—advancement under the party of democracy, which Andrew Jackson founded and which Franklin of democracy, which Andrew Jackson founded and which Franklin D. Roosevelt leads today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a comment by Heywood Broun, the columnist, on the appointment of Mr. Harry Hopkins.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to ask the majority leader a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the majority leader if it is going to be the policy of the majority leader and those in control of the House to keep within the Budget estimate of the present administration and if they are going to try to stay within the income of the Federal Government? This is a very pertinent question, and it seems to me the leader of the majority party should try in every way to cut down the expenses of this Nation so that at some future time we may balance the Budget.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for sufficient time to allow the majority leader to give us some idea along these lines.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] desire recognition for that purpose?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minority leader relative to the recommendation so far as the minority members of the various committees are concerned. How soon will the gentleman be able to submit a list?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] that we have already agreed to the members of four of the major committees, namely the Committee on Rules, the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. We expect to complete the list this afternoon. We will have a conference on Friday following the session of the House and expect to be ready to report the full list on Monday next.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, immediately following the address of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]?

There was no objection. The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a few short letters from people throughout the United States who are interested in this highway proposal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, for 4 consecutive years I have called to the attention of the House a bill to construct a system of transcontinental and north and south highways in the United States.

The first time I introduced the bill, the dominating factor seemed to be transportation—that is, that such a system would aid the transportation of commodities so that they could be distributed to the different parts of the United States where they are consumed at a much less cost, and at the same time we would be taking care of the increased traffic on our highways-thus making travel safer.

The second time I introduced the bill 3 years ago, another commendable factor seemed to be embodied by many of my colleagues. It was pointed out by many individuals and groups of individuals and the newspapers throughout the country, that such a system would help to solve the unemployment problem, by putting several hundred thousand men to work on a worth-while project.

Two years ago when I presented my bill to the House with some adjustments and added features, a third important factor was embodied not only by myself and other Members of the House, but by many of the newspapers throughout the Nation.

That factor was that it would aid our national-defense program, both in flexibility and economy.

It is generally agreed that all three of these major merits of such a system have grown in importance since I first presented my bill. That is, the use of such highways for transportation—the advisability of taking large numbers of men from unemployed rolls-and the strengthening of our national-defense installations.

Building roads is not a new adventure for our Government. In 1806, Thomas Jefferson asked Congress to appropriate $30,000 to be spent on perfecting the old National Highway, now known as route 40, running from Baltimore, via Cumberland, St. Louis, Cheyenne, Salt Lake City, and San Francisco. For 40 years following that, Congress appropriated money for the improvement of that highway. President Tyler vetoed a similar bill in 1847.

My bill calls for, as I will show you on this map in a few minutes, a system of three transcontinental highways and six north and south highways; the highways to be 100 feet wide, providing eight lanes of traffic, and to be built of concrete or similar permanent material designed to last as long as the Appian Way.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Who is going to build this highway? Is the Federal Government going to build it?

Mr. SNYDER. I shall come to that feature in a few minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Who is going to maintain and police the highway?

Mr. SNYDER. I shall come to that in a few minutes.

They would have a right-of-way 500 feet wide, leveled off on a level with the highway with no obstruction whatever on the rights-of-way. These highways would not pass through any cities and would be built as straight as possible. The highways would be divided into different lanes for different classes of traffic and there would be no barriers, such as shrubbery between the lanes, that would be over 20 inches high. The lighting of the highways would be done by cables laid at the same time the highways are built, along the edges, so that the lights would not be any higher than the curb. One of the purposes of this would be to make the highways emergency landing fields for airplanes. Each of these highways would be divided off into sections of, we will say, 5 or 7 milesand at the end of each section we would have a service station and modern radio equipment so, if an airplane flying over this main street across the Nation, day or night, would be in trouble the pilot could radio to the station over which they were flying and tell the radio operator they would land in section so and so, in 3 or 5 minutes, or whatever the time might be. Thus the traffic would be shut off at each end, and a safe landing would be assured. Of course, this feature is not new, as a similar plan was carried out in Germany in building a road. At each of these sections, 18 in all, we would build large airports not less than 8,000 feet square.

Now as for transportation of everyday commodities for civil use, I am and always have been a strong booster of the railroads.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the gentleman prepared any estimates, or is he able to advise the House with respect to the cost of constructing this highway?

Mr. SNYDER. That question will be discussed in a later paragraph of my statement.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am very much interested in the fact the gentleman has included in his bill provision for emergency landing fields. May I say I have noticed in this morning's paper that one of the air lines out of Washington in the last 3 years has increased its handling of revenue passengers by 103 percent; in other words, from 176,000 in 1935 to 357,000 in 1938. This indicates the importance of provision for emergency landing fields such as the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the gentleman worked out any plan of acquiring the land required for right-of-way purposes?

Mr. SNYDER. I have not.

Mr. HOUSTON. What I have in mind is that the Government might acquire the right-of-way for, say, half a mile on each side of the highway and then sell portions of that right-of-way as space for hotels, filling stations, or tourist cabins, and so make the project productive, instead of simply going to the expense of constructing a highway.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman's suggestion is worthy of consideration. Personally, I believe his idea has a lot of merit.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the way it has been worked in England.

Mr. SNYDER. May I repeat these words, because I know you are all very much interested since I mentioned the word "railroads" and are saying to yourselves, "I wonder what he is going to say about railroads in connection with advocating the construction of a great system of roads like this, which will take business away from the railroads."

This is what I have to say for the record: I "am and always have been a strong booster for the railroads."

However, the railroads in the last 15 or 20 years have done away with hundreds of their branches and thousands of miles of service. They have done away with hundreds, if not thousands, of small intermediate passenger stops, and they have also done away with their local freight that used to stop and pick up freight at every little town. By observation we must conclude that they themselves have been building toward transportation of heavy commodities for long hauls. My belief is that we will always have use for a number of first-class railroads. This system of highways would not interfere with railroad transportation. In fact, many think that it would stimulate railroad transportation. One of the big problems we have been trying to solve for 50 years is the problem of distribution of commodities from one part of the country to the other at less cost to the consumer, and at the same time give the producer a margin of profit.

In consulting with fruit growers associations, textile manufacturers, and the like, they think that such a system of highways would reduce the cost of foodstuffs such as fruits, vegetables, and textile material and similar commodities 10 to 15 percent for the consumer—and at the same time the producer would make a larger profit than he is making now.

The land on either side of these highways would immediately increase in value. We have all observed that when you build a good, permanent road from one city to another, where there was a bad road, that many homes begin to spring up all around the new road.

For instance, one traveling the road between here and Baltimore 40 years ago would have found the countryside bare, with nothing but a few farmhouses in the territory beginning a few miles outside of Washington and extending to within a few miles of Baltimore. Now we have city almost the entire way between Washington and Baltimore, and eventually this area will be built up solid.

If these highways were built, hundreds of thousands—yes; millions of people in the space of years to follow—would move away from city centers. They would get small acreages out close by these great highways and build their homes there, feeling that for all time they would be on a permanent road.

Now the unemployment feature.

These nine highways would total about 16,000 miles. Therefore, the total cost of constructing such highways would be $8,000,000,000. Now, if we would set out with an 8-year program to build these highways, using a billion dollars a year—thus constructing 2,000 miles of such highway each year—we would at the same time be putting to work approximately a million men for that year, and each of the 8 years, on a project that would not only be used all the time but would be a Nation-building project.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. Would the gentleman refer again to his statement concerning the approximate cost per mile of constructing this highway? Did the gentleman say it would cost $500,000 a mile?

Mr. SNYDER. An average of approximately $500,000 a mile.

Mr. STEFAN. Is not that an increase in the estimated cost of a concrete slab? The present approximate cost of a mile of concrete slab 20 feet wide is $20,000, is it not?

Mr. SNYDER. I am including in this estimate the cost of the right-of-way also.

Mr. STEFAN. Has the gentleman given consideration to feeder roads, farm-to-market roads?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

Mr. STEFAN. How does the gentleman propose to take care of the farmer who wants to bring his produce to market? Will not this be a toll road?

Mr. SNYDER. It is not provided in my bill whether or not it is to be a toll road.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman recalls that when he appeared before our House Committee on Roads we discussed this question?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. If it were to be a toll road, the farmer would have to pay the same toll as any one else using the road. How does the gentleman propose to take care of the farmer, who today is fighting against the construction of some of the tourist roads because their construction reduces the amount of money available for his farm-to-market roads?

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Anderson] asked how the construction of this highway system was to be financed. The gentleman understands that the responsibility of locating or relocating roads is in the hands of the various State highway departments. How has the gentleman got around that situation?

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman for his observation. May I say first that I do not make a definite statement as to whether these highways should or should not be toll roads. That question can be determined at a later date.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. What would be the initial cost of building this highway system?

Mr. SNYDER. The initial cost would be approximately $500,000 per mile.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. How many miles would be involved?

Mr. SNYDER. Something like 16,000 miles.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The total amount would be up in the billions of dollars, would it not?

Mr. SNYDER. About $8,000,000,000.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. What would it cost to maintain these roads per year?

Mr. SNYDER. I have not estimated that, but I believe that if this highway system is put on a toll basis, in the same way toll bridges are built in this country, such as the bridge across the Susquehanna River at Harrisburg, it would pay for itself in 40 to 60 years.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The gentleman said something about this highway being lighted by electric lights at every so many feet; what would be the cost of electricity to maintain such a lighting system?

Mr. SNYDER. Naturally, that could not be estimated, because electric companies give a very low rate on large consumption of electricity. I imagine the cost per kilowatt would be very, very small.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Just one more question, if the gentleman will permit. Does the gentleman believe the Bureau of the Budget would approve the spending of this money?

Mr. SNYDER. I think the Budget Bureau eventually will approve if Congress decided to build them. May I say to the gentleman that according to this map the road may not go through the towns you may think proper; but we have got to have a general plan, and the engineers will determine whether the road should be north of a certain place or 10 or 20 miles south. The engineers would have to determine such matters.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Who set out and determined the original routing of this road?

Mr. SNYDER. I guess I did.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Does any of it go through the gentleman's district?

Mr. SNYDER. It goes very near my district, because route 40, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, is the old Jefferson Road, the first one built in this country, and that route goes near my district.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri, Does the gentleman propose to use T. V. A. electricity?

Mr. SNYDER. I imagine they could bring the T. V. A. power to these roads, or, perhaps, there will be T. V. A.'s in other parts of the country by the time this is built.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman is aware, of course, of the existence of a highway society known as the Super-Dixie Highway Organization, that is sponsoring a highway running from northern Michigan through the industrial section of the United States to Miami, Fla., and New Orleans, La.; and recently, at a meeting of some four or five hundred sponsors and enthusiasts for highways, there was a meeting held in Lexington, Ky. At this meeting someone connected with the American Highway Association displayed a chart showing that Germany had completed what they call a four-lane highway system throughout that country.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. And that their first year's experience in the matter had shown a decline in accidents and death cases on their highways of 60 percent.

Mr. SNYDER. I observed that reduction.

Mr. MAY. In view of the fact that for the year 1937 we killed on the highways of this country some 38,000 people, would not a system of transcontinental four-lane highways in this country pay economically and return huge dividends in the saving of human lives, because if we have the same experience that Germany had in reducing accidents and deaths 60 percent, we would save many, many lives in 1 year?

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman for his splendid contribution.

Mr. MAY. In addition to that, while the economic value thus stressed is great, yet in case of a national emergency the need for such a highway for military purposes would be so great that it would mean an asset even greater than its economic value would indicate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. To keep our own facts straightened out, a project of this kind or projects much smaller, like those under W. P. A. or P. W. A., whether they cost a few million dollars or $4,000,000,000, or whatever the cost may be, that is not a question for the Budget to pass on.

Mr. SNYDER. Not in this instance. I think this would be a question for the Congress to pass on.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But not the Budget Director?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I am correct in assuming that the Budget Director would not deal with a problem of this kind?

Mr. SNYDER. He would not be the "Be all" and the "End all."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Insofar as raising the money is concerned, on a project of this kind, the gentleman does not have in mind that it would pay for itself in a year or two?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman's thought would be to issue tax-exempt Government-guaranteed bonds?

Mr. SNYDER. I am not so strong for tax-exempt Government-guaranteed bonds.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What would be the gentleman's idea about financing it?

Mr. SNYDER. I have a statement to make later on in the course of my remarks, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed, that bears on the matter of financing the project.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Are these roads to be made out of concrete—cement roads?

Mr. SNYDER. The bill provides concrete or material equal to that. We may discover a substance better than concrete some of these days.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it the intention to use Belgian cement under the trade agreement, or to use our domestic product?

Mr. SNYDER. Oh, I would use the domestic product.

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman would favor that?
Mr. SNYDER. I am in favor of using home products as far as possible.

Mr. REED of New York. But the gentleman does not know whether that would be done or not?

Mr. SNYDER. No; I cannot say "yes" or "no."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Gladly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am very much interested in the gentleman's program. I have thought a great deal about it, but unfortunately I did not hear all of the gentleman's speech. Does the gentleman contemplate that these roads will be used by heavy trucks?

Mr. SNYDER. I do. I said that it should be divided into eight lanes, four each way, and they would carry different types of traffic, and I would imagine there would be one lane for the real heavy trucks, and at that time we will have automobiles that will travel 90 miles an hour, and we will travel at that rate, 90 to 100 miles an hour on one of these lanes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If we use these roads for heavy-freight truck purposes, would we not put the railroads out of business?

Mr. SNYDER. I am on that subject now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would like to have an answer to that question. What will become of the railroads if we use these highways for truck purposes? In other words, would it not amount to junking the railroads and throwing a million railway men out of employment?

We are contemplating spending $300,000,000 or $400,-000,000 to rehabilitate the railroads. Would the construction of competitive highways at Government expense make sense with this program?

Mr. SNYDER. As I said a moment ago, the railroads themselves have said, by their action, if not in words-and I would be glad to be corrected when I have completed my statement, if this is not correct—they have said by their actions for 20 years that they want the long haul. I was born and raised alongside the B. & O. Railroad, and I have always been strong for the railroads. In fact, what I wanted to become when I was a youth was a railroad engineer. In my section the railroads themselves have done away with practically every branch within 100 miles of where I was born and raised. They used to have branches running up for a few miles here and there, and there are very few, if any, left. They used to stop at the little town of Casselman and pick up freight every day, and there were five or six passenger trains. There is no station there now at all and none at the next place below, and at least five of these little stations in a row have all been done away with, and if you want to get a commodity now, you have to drive 9 miles one way or 12 miles the other. So they themselves have said by their actions that they do not want the short-haul stuff any more, that they want the long-haul commodities and let the short hauls go to some other form of transportation.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. With pleasure.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The gentleman realizes that in every State there are different State regulations so far as speed is concerned on the various highways. Is the gentleman going to have a Federal speed law?

Mr. SNYDER. On that road I would have a Federal speed aw.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. How can that be enacted? Under what section of the Constitution can we enact such a law?

Mr. SNYDER. I cannot answer that, But I think it could be done.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Some States have a speed law of 60 miles an hour, and the next State may have a State law of 30 miles an hour. Is it the purpose to put up a sign notifying the travelers when they come to that jurisdiction whether or not they should respect the speed laws of the respective States?

Mr. SNYDER. I think the enabling act could take care of that; and I think, furthermore, that all of the different State highway departments would get together and arrive at a general solution acceptable by all concerned.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Who is to patrol this highway? Federal police-the F. B. I.?

Mr. SNYDER. Since that is a matter of minor importance compared to the building of the highway, there is no need to pass on that now. There will be no grade crossings on this highway; there will be ramps from one end of the highway to the other.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to my distinguished colleague from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. As I understand it, the gentleman recommends this program to Congress.

Mr. SNYDER. I do.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. So, therefore, the gentleman must have made a very thorough study of the cost of the program.

Mr. SNYDER. I have been at it for 4 or 5 years. I do not know how thorough the study is.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Did the gentleman not say a few moments ago that he did not estimate what the cost of maintenance would be?

Mr. SNYDER. The cost would be approximately $500,000 per mile for the 16,000 miles.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman think, before he recommends a vast program costing $8,000,000,000, that he should certainly go into the question of the cost of maintenance?

Mr. SNYDER. I would imagine that the cost of maintenance in arriving at the final set-up would be taken into consideration, but up to this date I did not think that that was a factor to be considered as a first factor. The main factor is whether or not we will build these roads and put men to work on a project that we would like to hand down to our children and grandchildren for three or four hundred or a thousand years to come.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman would do all that regardless of the cost of maintenance—he would not consider that?

Mr. SNYDER. Oh, yes; I would consider that. I think the cost of maintenance would be much less than the cost of maintenance of any of the highways that we have in the Nation—all things compared. What we are doing now is merely to manicure the roads all over the country, or the edges of them, or building roads that do not dovetail into an economic system of transportation; and this would be building a real, honest-to-goodness, all-time highway that our children and grandchildren would enjoy for a thousand years, with very little upkeep.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Then, instead of manicuring, there would be a face lifting?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman knows what they do to you when you go into a barber shop, or what is done to the ladies when they go into a ladies' parlor—a face lifting.

Mr. SNYDER. No; I am not familiar with face-lifting activities.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts. Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman proposes a toll to be charged

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman proposes a toll to be charged for the use of these highways which will take care of the amortization of the roads and also the maintenance, does he not?

Mr. SNYDER. Not necessarily so. Many favor toll roads. Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. Do I understand the initial cost to be $8,000,000,000?

Mr. SNYDER. Eight billion dollars.

Mr. THOMASON. I am much interested in the gentleman's statement that a program of that size could be financed without the approval of the Bureau of the Budget. Of course I realize and appreciate the gentleman is a distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. I also want to say that he is regarded as a fiscal expert, in a way.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not regard myself as such.

Mr. THOMASON. Well, possessing considerable knowledge of that important subject. But in these days of large spending I am sure we would be pleased to have the gentleman say just how he proposes to finance this without the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, which is the established agency in these matters. The gentleman has a very constructive idea. I am pleased to note he also gives it an international aspect. Your map shows two of these great highways converging at El Paso, where they could connect with highways to Mexico and South America. I am very much in accord with this part of your great program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania be permitted to proceed for an additional 5 minutes. He is making a very interesting statement and has been frequently interrupted and has been very generous in yielding.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will not the gentleman ask that he be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes?

Mr. KNUTSON. What is 10 minutes between friends? I amend my request, Mr. Speaker, to make it 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I will not object to the extension of time of 15 minutes if the gentleman will make his own speech.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman from Colorado insinuate the gentleman from Pennsylvania is making someone else's speech?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the aspersion cast by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] was improper. The gentleman is intimating that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not delivering his own speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are several other gentlemen who have special orders, and it seems to me it would be proper to ask the gentlemen who have unanimous consent to proceed if they would give their permission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those gentlemen have the right to object if they so desire. Otherwise the gentleman is recognized for 15 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. With your permission I will continue and please do not ask me to yield until I have finished my statement.

The Bureau of Public Roads is making a survey relative to the building of highways. I do not know anything about what this survey will show, but if they follow their usual procedure in determining where highways should be built, it will more than likely call for broad, permanent highways to be built between industrial and population centers. They will point out that so many automobiles and so many tons of traffic pass between these two cities or those two cities. and for this and other reasons they will recommend that the highways be built accordingly. Far be it from me to criticize the Bureau of Public Roads, but we are not only aiming to build highways to take care of present traffic but for all future times. That is one of the ideas in building these highways.

Another is that all of the Government agencies and the administration are aiming to get the population of our country distributed over rural areas and away from city centers. If we would build these highways, then the population would come away from the city centers. Factories that are now stuck on the river banks and in gullies along cities would move out in God's open country along these highways, and the amount of traffic between these cities would decrease. The building of additional highways at this time between these cities would not be necessary to take care of the future traffic.

Now as to the national-defense value of such a road pro-

Please do not ask me to yield until I make this statement, because I know there are some who are going to O. K. this and some who will not.

The day for fixed, stationary seacoast-defense installations is fast passing. We had an example of that around Madrid in the last 2 years. Installations that were there for a thousand years, and, of course, new installations, were destroyed within 48 hours after Franco started to make his air raids. So we would recommend putting the greater portion of our national-defense equipment, such as guns up to 10-inch guns, antiaircraft, service vehicles of all kinds, detecting devices, searchlights, and so forth, on rubber wheels. Zone a large percent of it some place around the middle of the United States, as we are now doing by locating our general headquarters at Scott Field, enlarging Chanute Field, enlarging Barksdale Field in Louisiana, enlarging Selfridge Field in Michigan. Then in case of an emergency, we could get out our wing equipment to the seacoasts and either border within 12 hours, and our rubber-wheel equipment to the same places within 72 hours. By so doing, we would make our equipment more flexible and increase the efficiency of our national defense many percent.

And that is not all. It would be economy. If these roads were completed today, we could spend $200,000,000 less this year and every year hereafter for national-defense equipment, and still have more efficient, more serviceable, and better adopted national-defense protection. So you see, in a space of 50 years, these highways would pay for themselves by the money we would save on this one item alone.

In other words, to be prepared for continuous peace in the United States as long as we have rulers in other parts of the world who are absorbed in themselves and the greed for power and possession, we have only one way out-that is, to have ample, modern, and usable national-defense installations in order that we may protect our own shores in case of an emergency and defend the Monroe Doctrine if need be.

I now yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], because I believe he is one of the men who first thought of a highway system and tried to help and contribute to that end.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I want to say the subject which the gentleman is discussing is one of intense interest; and in connection with the attitude of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, which the gentleman has mentioned in his address. I think it appropriate to say that about 4 years ago, when the agitation was started in Congress for the construction of transcontinental roads, the Chief of the United States Bureau of Roads, Mr. MacDonald, for whom I have a personal affection, but with whom I had a disagreement at the time, rather scoffed or considered lightly the idea that we needed construction of such highways in this country. However, I am pleased to say that when the report comes in from the United States Bureau of Public Roads, around the 1st of February, the Bureau having made a study of this subject due to the action of the Congress in the highway bill of last year, it is my understanding that Mr. MacDonald and his coworkers have changed their viewpoint and now see a real need for action. I thank the gentleman for such a discussion as he enters into here today, and I may say that my interest in this subject remains very keen. I have reintroduced bills on the subject and also a new measure, which I hope will be carefully considered. I feel, as a member of the House Committee on Roads, that practically all members of that group desire to go further into this vital matter.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman from West Virginia for his contribution. I think he had something to do with enlightening the Bureau of Public Roads and causing them to change their opinion.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. SNYDER. I am glad to yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman is a very distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations, and as such his duties have to do with the Military Establishment of the United States. Has the gentleman definitely concluded that a system such as he is advocating here this morning would be of definite benefit to this country in time of emergency or in time of war in the movement of military equipment, munitions, and supplies?

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman for raising that question. Replying to my friend from Pittsburgh, I would say that if we had this system of highways installed today and an emergency arose we would be at least 50 percent better able to take care of ourselves and defend our shores than we would be without these highways.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question.

Mr. SNYDER. I gladly yield to my friend from West

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think it might be important to the discussion to state at this time that the traffic toll in this Nation continues at a high rate year after year, not so much because we have the high-speed automobile on the highways but due to our failure to work out a system of lane roads, the lanes separated by parkways, so that traffic moving in opposite directions is separated.

Mr. SNYDER. That is very true.

And now may I digress a minute with reference to national defense? We have right now more than 1,200,000 boys, graduates of first-class high schools in the United States, who cannot find jobs. We could do nothing more humane or more appropriate than to formulate, let us say, a 3-year program to train at least 50,000 boys a year to be pilots, mechanics, or technicians in the Air Service. It costs the Government $52.50 a month in my State to keep a boy on W. P. A. It would cost the Government about $42.50 a month to train that boy to be a pilot, to have him enlist in the Army and prepare himself for future emergency. At the end of 3 years he would end his military service and be trained in some peacetime pursuit, some line of business.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. The gentleman referred to the W. P. A. I am very much interested in the gentleman's proposition to build these highways. I think it would be a wonderful thing for the Nation. In common with a great many other Members of Congress and a great many people throughout the Nation I have reached the place where I believe that it is absolutely imperative that we take some steps to replace the W. P. A. with a program that will not only afford the unemployed a means to make a living but that will return something definite to the Nation.

I was in the road contracting business for 20 years and used to know quite a bit about the construction of roads. As I have driven over the roads in my own district and neighboring districts I have noticed countless numbers of W. P. A. men out manicuring the highways. That is about the best name I have for it—manicuring the highways. I believe the gentleman's idea might afford some means of keeping these men employed where they would be of more benefit to the Nation and at the same time be able to maintain their self-respect than they are when employed in manicuring the highways.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.
Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Instead of manicuring the highways, would not this be manicuring the taxpayers?

highways, would not this be manicuring the

Mr. SNYDER. I did not make that statement. Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I gladly yield to my friend from Minnesota.
Mr. KNUTSON. I gather from the gentleman's remarks that the primary purpose of building this system of transcontinental superhighways is for national defense. I notice that in his system are three or four roads running east and west. I take it the gentleman's idea is that we could transport military equipment back and forth across the continent, according to which coast needed defending. Is that correct?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; and I may say that I think it would be feasible to have some central place of concentration in the United States where we would keep a certain percentage of our winged equipment and rubber-wheeled equipment. Then, in case of emergency, our winged material could reach either coast in 12 hours, and over these superhighways our rubber-wheeled equipment in 72 hours.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think we should anchor the Navy in the center of the country?

Mr. SNYDER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am just talking about the Army.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman's suggestion is that one of the prime benefits of this highway construction would be to move the factories from the cities to the roadside, and that the method of transportation—

Mr. KNUTSON. I said certain of the factories that could operate as well away from river sites.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman would leave some of them in the cities?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Assuming that the gentleman is correct in leaving some of the factories in the city, this would remove many factories from the city to the roadside in the country?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; away from the roadside, within a half mile, we will say.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the gentleman given any consideration to what effect that would have on the railroads?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; and I spoke of that a minute ago. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

There was no objection,

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, you may ask, "Will the Government build these roads?" That is of secondary importance. I believe, however, that the roads should be built by contract to the lowest bidder per mile, and no contract to be less than 10 miles. The same would be supervised, accepted, and approved by the Federal Government Army engineers.

You may also ask, "Should they be built by private industry or by the Government?" If the bankers would take some of their unused billions and build the roads at a very low rate of interest, perhaps that would be the better way.

You may also ask, "Should they be toll roads?" Well, I suppose those who believe in sales tax would say "yes." Perhaps some think it would be advisable to make them toll roads and keep them as such until they are paid for. However, that, too, is a matter that is of minor importance as compared with the actual building of the highways.

Yes, my colleagues, a system of highways similar to this will be built; whether we build them now, that is the question. But in a space of just a few years—10 or 20—they will be built by those who follow us if we do not build them.

I know it sounds far-fetched, but changes in construction, transportation, and facilities take place rapidly. I was in Harrisburg Monday. They told me that they have done away with the streetcar system in that great city. If you had told the city fathers or the citizens of that city 10 years ago that they would have no streetcar service in 1939 they would have been inclined to send you to a doctor for an examination.

So it is with a program like this. It looks too ambitious to many of us, but I say again a system similar to this will be built before very many years, because transportation, relocation of industrial cities, necessary national-defense facilities, and other developments will make it absolutely necessary.

Mr. Speaker, these roads may not be built exactly as noted on this map. The engineers will determine whether they shall run north or south of a certain line. However, this is a generally acceptable scheme for the building of such transcontinental highways.

I may say in conclusion that if the bankers of the United States who have billions of unused dollars on their shelves will lend this money at a very low rate of interest for a period of years to build these highways they will be contributing to a real nation-building program.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, when the Congress is about to reorganize there are certain groups or societies that immediately start propagandizing the Members on various questions. At the present time we have certain groups in Washington and elsewhere sending out propaganda dealing with the so-called immigration problem and dealing also with the question of European refugees. In every instance this propaganda which you and I have received and will continue to receive day in and day out is not true. You will find that the bulk of the information contained therein is inaccurate. It simply seeks to mislead you when legislation dealing with this very serious problem is presented on the floor of the House so that you may perhaps be misguided when you vote on these questions.

As chairman of the Committee on Immigration, on which committee I have had the honor to serve for the last 10 years, may I say to the Members that I shall be glad to assist them in furnishing information and authentic figures on any questions they may present, so that you may have an accurate and true picture of the situation.

We have certain writers in this country and certain people in the country who have never seen an immigrant, although they write books about them. We have lecturers who go around the various cities of the country, including Washington, and preach the doctrine of hate and intolerance. I think we, as Members of Congress and as legislators, should be fully acquainted with this problem so that you and I and the country at large will know that all of this propaganda is not true and that it is given out in an effort to array hate and intolerance against fair play.

Immigration has been a problem of our Government almost from the very creation of the country. We have references to immigration in our Constitution.

Recent events have brought immigration to the forefront of public discussion and the public press is full of statements to the effect that there is an influx into this country of refugees from Germany and other places, and that as a result the economic structure of the United States is being adversely affected.

It is important for us as legislators to have a clear understanding of what is involved in this situation. For the benefit of the Congress I have taken the trouble to go through these statistics, and I wish to present my findings to you this morning.

We will consider first the following provisions:

1. The number of aliens.

2. The deportation of aliens.

3. Immigration quotas.

My analysis of these figures, as well as the analysis of the Department, leads to the following conclusions:

- A. The statement made by various groups that there is a large influx of aliens is not true. As a matter of fact, there is no influx of aliens to the United States.
- B. The number of deportations is continuously increasing instead of decreasing, despite the charges made by certain Members of the House regarding the attitude of the Department of Labor toward deportation.
- C. The immigration quotas in the past few years in many instances have not been filled.

Therefore, the charge that thousands upon thousands of refugees are coming into the United States and flooding this country is absolutely false and untrue, and the charge that the quotas are now being filled or have been filled in the recent past is not true.

As I go along I will show that this country has done nothing to help refugees and that no persons come into the United States other than those whom the law allows to come. Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not at this point.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman made the statement we are not doing anything to help foreign political refugees.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We are not.

Mr. STEFAN. We have a commission over in Europe now for the purpose of helping foreign political refugees, have we

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No: we are not helping foreign political refugees.

Mr. STEFAN. What is the commission doing there, then? Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know what they are doing there. I am not at the table with them. I am now talking about immigration and the immigration law.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman referred to foreign political refugees and said we are not doing anything to help them.

We have a commission in Europe now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am telling the gentleman we are doing nothing as far as allowing refugees to come into this country is concerned.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman should qualify his state-

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No refugees are coming here other than persons who are entitled to come under the quota law enacted in 1924, and then they must show they will not become public charges, and they must be physically and morally fit.

Mr. STEFAN. I agree with the gentleman as to that. but the gentleman should qualify his statement that we are not doing anything to help foreign political refugees when we have an American commission in Europe helping foreign political refugees.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not intend to modify my statement. I repeat that conferences and commissions do not help people to escape death, because they simply lead to more commissions and more conferences. When I say we are doing nothing to help refugees I mean that we are not allowing them to use up the quotas that are left over every year in this country and that we throw in the basket. I am saying, figuratively speaking, that we are not allowing human beings to save their lives by letting them come in here under the unused quotas. I am not speaking of conferences, wherever they are.

As to the number of aliens, the number of aliens admitted to the United States since the restrictive immigration laws went into effect has been dwindling from year to year. In 1935 the total number admitted was 34,956; in 1936 the total number admitted was 36,327; in 1937, 50,244; and in the last year, 67,895. But against this figure must be charged the number of aliens who left the United States during the years in question, and it will be observed that for 6 years, from 1931 to and including 1936, the number of departures exceeded the number of admissions. So that we have for the years 1931 to 1936 the following figures:

It is only since 1937—in the last 2 years—that immigration exceeds emigration, and, even so, the excess is very slight. In 1937 the net number of immigrants was 7,302, and in 1938 the net number of immigrants was 30,083. So that in the face of all the clamor raised about refugees and others entering the United States we only had a net total immigration last year of little over 30,000.

As to deportations, the number of deportations have been increasing from year to year, and the total of deportations should be further deducted from the amount of net immigration for the years in question. Thus, we find that in 1934 there were 8,879 aliens deported; in 1935, 8,319; in 1936, 9,915; in 1937, 8,829; and in 1938, 9,275. The average deportations being around 8,500 to 9,000 in each year.

As to immigration quotas, the annual immigration quota under the immigration law is 153,774. In not a single year since the law went into effect has this quota been reached, and no immigration quotas in any one year since 1931 were in excess of 50,000. As a matter of fact, the number is far below this figure. In 1931 there were 54,118 aliens admitted to the United States under immigration quotas, but this figure represents the highest total number of admissions in any one year between 1931 and 1938. The following year, 1932, had but 12,983 quota visas issued, and the low was reached in the following year, 1933, when only 8,220 quota visas were issued. In 1934 the number was 12,483; in 1935, 17,207; in 1936, 18,675; in 1937, 27,762; and in 1938, 42,494. So that even in 1938, with all demands by refugees and others, the total quota visas issued was less than that in 1931, and far below the authorized quota of 153,774.

There is an impression abroad to the effect that the passage of the restricted immigration law by Congress was absolutely necessary because of economic conditions then existing in the United States. Somehow or other, right after the World War most statesmen insisted on restricting the number of aliens who would be inclined to enter this country, apparently being afraid that a large influx of immigrants would destroy our economic system. And yet, strange as it may seem, right after the passage of the restricted immigration law, and, in fact, for 7 years or so thereafter, the number of emigrants who left the United States exceeded the number of those who entered this country. The figures also show that only in the last 2 years there has been a somewhat increased number of immigrants as against emigrants; and even so, the number is very slight.

We, as legislators, who are accustomed to analyze and digest facts, must therefore take exception to the promiscuous statements relating to immigration which come from so-called patriotic organizations or the American Legion, even if those expressions be well meaning and intended to convey facts. The record speaks for itself.

I am not quarreling with some of my colleagues who have spoken about the Department of Labor, but figures do not lie. I believe the Department of Labor under this administration has a fine record to its credit in connection with the deportation of aliens.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For a brief question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Of course, the gentleman is not referring to the cases of persons like Bridges and Pritchett, who may be in this country illegally?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know that I understand what the question is. I am referring to deportation of aliens back to their homelands.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman does not mean that he believes the Department of Labor has had a very good record in deporting the Communists who are illegally in this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I mean to say that the Department of Labor has a record for deporting all aliens who have no right to be in the United States, be they Communists or members of any other group that should be out of the country. I assume the gentleman wants me to take up the cudgels for Bridges, but all I can say to the gentleman, without taking up too much of my time, is that I am not in sympathy with Bridges and so far as I am concerned he can leave now, but the Department is proceeding under law and order and when the decision comes down from the Supreme Court dealing with that matter and other questions, I am sure the gentleman himself, in spite of the statement about his alleged charges for impeachment of the Secretary of Labor, will be satisfied that the law is to be enforced.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I think the gentleman from New York is making a very interesting address and I am pleased to see that he is including the statistics he has referred to and I believe they will be very helpful to the Congress. I think if the gentleman will be at the sessions every day next week, he will learn something about the Department of Labor that he does not know now.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not think the Department can teach me any more than I know now, or the gentleman's committee or any other committee of this House dealing with that question.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman has given us figures on those who have entered legally. Has the gentleman any estimate of any considerable number that have entered illegally and are not included in the quota figures the gentleman has given us?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I can do that as I go along with my remarks.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman has said that neither the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Thomas] nor the members of the committee can teach him anything he does not know about the Department of Labor or about immigration. If the gentleman believes that the attitude of the Secretary of Labor has been consistent in the Bridges case, all the gentleman needs to do is to refer to his own record in his own committee, because, as a matter of fact, I had passed through this House a bill involving a case where the Secretary of Labor desired to deport two aliens who were here, who were observing the laws, but one night they simply got into a communistic meeting by mistake, and it was mandatory upon the Secretary of Labor, so she said, to deport these two men, although Mr. Bridges and others are here, who are violating the same law. Apparently it is not mandatory to deport that type of person.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's thought, but you are talking now of the Dies committee—the Dies committee that the Dickstein resolution created.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think the gentleman did a very good job.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I never got any acknowledgment from the gentleman or from Mr. Diss, or anybody else, neither did I get any medals, nor am I seeking any medals, but I think I tried to do a good job.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me say to the gentleman he never made it known to me that he was the creator of the Dies committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well, I am the father and the mother. Mr. DEMPSEY. That is news to me, and I am sure it is to most of the Members.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let me answer the gentleman's question by saying that I always tried in my investigation in the previous committee, under the leadership of John McCormack, to protect character and reputation, no matter who the person may have been. I would not allow a lot of numbskulls and crackpots to come before a meeting of a congressional committee and let them talk their heads off for days and array one group against another. I would not bring in labor strikes, and I would not bring in a million other things; and if I had something to say about the Department of Labor, I would not issue too many press releases without giving the American people absolute facts as to what the charges were. Now the point is that the gentleman says she has deported two aliens in hardship cases, or tried to do so—

Mr. DEMPSEY. I say she tried to do that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And she did not deport Bridges. I have told you, in answer to my good friend from New Jersey [Mr. Thomas]—and he knows my attitude on this question—I am not holding any brief for anybody that ought to be deported, and I do not say that Mr. Bridges ought to get a bouquet of flowers. If he does not belong here, he ought to be deported; but for heaven's sake, let us do it lawfully. Let us do it legally. If there is a case pending in the Supreme Court that deals with that problem and affects the Bridges case, I say wait for the decision in the pending case, and do not issue any statement and do not make accusations but give her a chance to present the facts in an orderly way and in an American way, and I do not think the committee saw that point.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Let me say to the gentleman that the cases pending in the Supreme Court, in the unanimous opinion of the members of the Dies committee, have no bearing upon the Bridges case.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have the highest regard for the gentleman and for Mr. Dies and for every member of that committee. I honestly believe you tried to do a real job. I do not want to go into that question now. I hope to say something about that at a later time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. May I answer very briefly one thing that the gentleman has said.

The gentleman stated that he would not permit crackpots and irresponsible people to come before the committee and testify. My position, as recorded by the press, is very well known on that subject. However, I say this to the gentleman. When the committee came before this body and asked for $100,000 to conduct that investigation, they were told by the membership of the House that they would receive attorneys from the Department of Justice, that they would receive investigators from the Department of the Treasury and the Department of Justice, but if the gentleman out that they were refused these people by the Departments. The committee did the best it could with the money that it had.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I did not read the report.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I thought so.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. But I read the evidence, and I could not find anything in the evidence that any court of law or even a justice of the peace would permit.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I agree with that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then what is your report? The report is based on the evidence in the record, and I am telling you that the report has a lot of fine language in it. I admit that, but it is based on nothing from the documents that were in the possession of the committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is the opinion of one man who says that he did not read the report. The gentleman does not know what is in the report.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I say this. The information which is in the report should be based on the evidence that was in the record.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The report is based on the evidence that is in the record.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. But the report and the conclusions in the report and the record of the documents themselves are inconsistent with each other.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is only the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to finish my speech and I do not desire to yield further. I say again there is no personal criticism to be made against Mr. Dies or the individual members of his committee. I say publicly that they started out to do a job, and I am not in position now to pass judgment on what they did or did not do. This was just brought in during my discussion of an immigration problem. Now, coming right back to the question of deportation-and I am coming back to the gentleman's questionthe number of deportations has been increasing from year to year, and the total deportations should be further deducted from the amount of net immigration for the year in ques-Thus we find that in 1934, under the present administration, there were 8,879 aliens deported. In 1935 another 8,319, and in 1936 over 9,000 or 10,000 people were deported. In 1937, 8,829 were deported, and in 1938, 9,275 were deported. and the average number of deportations by the Secretary of Labor for those years was close to 9,000, and the records will bear me out.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Did we have evidence before the committee at the last session of Congress that there were some 3,000 aliens, who had been ordered deported by the courts, who were still here in the United States and that the Secretary of Labor had either refused or failed to carry out the orders of the court?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. I want to get the record straight, as we say, and I say this to my good friend, the ranking member on the Republican side of our committee. We passed in the last Congress the Dies bill, which would save the deportation of 8,000 aliens of good character who had family ties in this country, but who were technically deportable. We tried to save them by allowing them to stay if the Dies bill became a law. We passed that bill in the House by a vote of 6 to 1, and it got to the Senate during the last week of the session, as all immigration bills do get to the Senate at that time. The bill died there. Under that bill we would have allowed these people to stay. Presently, technically, they are subject to deportation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Not those people who had been ordered deported through court proceedings.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The courts do not order deportation, the Secretary of Labor does that. And the cases which were covered by the Dies bill had not—certainly over 99 percent of them—been before the courts.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. We had information of some 3,000 such cases.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I know; but we get so much information, and if you carry through with it, you find that it is just a lot of propaganda.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I never heard that information challenged.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Let me repeat that. We allowed a lot of these 8,000 fathers to stay here. They are married to American women and have children who are Americans. They have committed no crime involving moral turpitude. At the same time that law would deport 20,000 alien criminals that we cannot deport at all. If there are criminals here, I am willing to do everything I can with my colleague and other colleagues to see that the law is enforced.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, the law makes it mandatory, when an alien is convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, to deport him.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is correct in part.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not a fact that there are in this country today aliens subject to deportation under that law who are still in the United States and should be deported?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have to answer this question in this way.

Mr. COCHAN. Answer it "yes" or "no."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not going to answer it "yes" or "no." This is not a "yes" or "no" proposition. It is too serious a proposition to answer "yes" or "no."

Mr. COCHRAN. When a person has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude and served time in the penitentiary the law says they must leave the country, and they should be made to leave the country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman first ought to understand the law. He is misquoting the law. The law provides that an alien who has committed two crimes involving moral turpitude, and who has been sentenced therefor to a year or more in prison, or who has committed a crime involving moral turpitude within 5 years of entry and sentenced therefor to a year or more in prison, can be deported at any time. We have in this country today nearly eighteen or twenty thousand alien criminals who have been here more than 5 years who have not been convicted of two felonies involving moral turpitude, but who have been convicted of one felony and perhaps 20 misdemeanors. The Department has no power to deport those people. Under the Dies bill that we passed last year, I sought on one hand to allow 8,000 people—decent people to remain here, and with the same law deport eighteen or twenty thousand criminals who should be deported.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Last year the gentleman made statements with reference to people in this country who should be deported, especially when the gentleman was discussing the German bund camps, and that many of those people had not been naturalized. The gentleman stated then that they should be deported and the gentleman criticized the Department of Labor for not deporting them. I am now surprised at the statement the gentleman is making, defending the Department of Labor for not deporting these people.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think the gentleman is misquoting something I was supposed to have said that I have not said. Mr. RICH. No. I was on the floor of the House and I listened to those statements.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No alien who is in this country legally can be deported. If an alien enters properly, does nothing which the immigration laws prohibit after his entry, he cannot be deported. Deportation must be grounded on some provision of the immigration laws as they exist today, so I could not have possibly told you that these people, because they were Nazis, could be deported.

For many years I called attention to the fact that the Quota Act of 1924 discriminates against American families. Because of the fact that quotas are so small for countries of eastern and southern Europe, American citizens whose family ties are with those countries are being discriminated against, while American families whose relatives come from England or northern Europe are in a better position to unite with their families. The fact that the quota law is so arranged that two-thirds of it goes to northern and western Europe and one-third of it goes to southern and eastern Europe is an unjust discrimination against our people.

I therefore suggest that there should not be any increase in the number of immigration quotas, but there should be a redistribution of the unused numbers for the current or next fiscal year to relieve the pressure on the small-quota countries, which are discriminated against. This should not be a permanent policy but only for the current fiscal year, for humanitarian reasons, as stated. Let not American families be discriminated against, and where an American family wishes to accomplish union with one residing on the other side, and there are quota numbers available, let them be distributed so that they may do good to those who need them. This, I am sure, will go a long way in the solution of our immigration problem.

Earnest study and attention will be required by this Congress in order to solve the immigration problem of the United States. I am sure my committee will be glad to entertain any intelligent proposal, and any interested citizen who wishes to be heard will be given an opportunity to appear before the committee and state his facts.

A real problem that has been making itself felt in recent years arises out of the enforcement of the deportation laws with respect to aliens who entered the United States since the enactment of the quota laws. It must be remembered that prior to the time when the principle of numerical restriction was put into effect aliens were subject to deportation only, with a very few exceptions, if found to be of the criminal, immoral, radical, or physically and mentally unsound classes. While in some instances deportation then resulted in a hardship to the individual alien and his family, it was felt that the greater good to the country which was derived by the deportation of an undesirable outweighed the harm done to the individual alien and to the members of his family. However, since the quota laws have been enacted, that no longer holds true. A person may now be deportable because of entry without inspection, residence without permission, or flaw in the record of admission. Inevitably, as the years passed, aliens of good character and good repute, in many instances through error on the part of the Government, found themselves enmeshed in deportation proceedings from which there was no escape. The technical violator of the quota laws is as much deportable as the basest alien

Let me give you an illustration of what I am speaking about by citing one or two cases which have been presented to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives by the Immigration and Naturalization Service. A young Irishman first entered the United States in December 1923 at the port of New York and was admitted for a period of 6 months. He stated, when examined in deportation proceedings later started, that he intended to make this country his permanent home when he first arrived in the United States. He remained here until 1928 when, desiring to go abroad to visit, he applied for a reentry permit. Through error on the part of one of the clerks at Ellis Island, the record of his entry in 1923 was recorded as one for permanent residence and he was issued a permit. He departed and after his reentry into the United States he married a legally admitted Irish girl in 1929. Desiring to complete an application for citizenship, he appeared at the naturalization office in New York in 1933 and then learned that he was in the United States illegally. He promptly and voluntarily sought advice as to his immigration status at Ellis Island. Notwithstanding his apparent desirability, notwithstanding the unfortunate predicament in which he finds himself, through an error on the part of the Government, notwithstanding that he is now established here with a family, he is subject to deportation under existing law.

The case I have cited is typical of many others involving hardships brought about by our deportation laws. The aliens concerned are not criminals; they are not of the immoral type; they are not mentally or physically unsound; they are not public charges. Illegal entry is the sole basis for their deportation. But present law requires that they be deported.

It is because of this unyielding technical aspect of the immigration laws that an attempt has been made in the recent past to enact legislation which would alleviate to some extent the harshness and cruelty of deportation when that deportation is based solely upon the technical ground of illegal entry. That attempt in the last session of Congress culminated in the passage by the House of Representatives of a bill to alleviate this situation. A similar bill will be introduced in the present House.

I shall dwell briefly on the measure. First, it allows the Secretary of Labor, during a period of 4 years, to permit to remain in this country as permanent residents, a maximum number of 8,000 aliens—I wish to emphasize that number—8,000 aliens who are now subject to deportation because of technical illegal entry into the United States.

If they are of good character and if they have resided in this country more than 10 years or have close family ties here—husbands, wives, or children of citizens or legal residents of the country. Second, it permits aliens who entered the United States before July 1, 1924, who are not now subject to deportation, but for whom there is no record of their admission for permanent residence, to legalize their status so that they may become citizens, provided, of course, that they are in all other respects able to meet the qualifications of the naturalization law. Third, because of what has been deemed to be an inadequacy of our present deportation laws with respect to alien criminals, it proposes new classes of deportable aliens removable because of criminal misconduct.

Intolerant of any contrary view on the subject of aliens, extremists have proclaimed their dissatisfaction with the bill that passed the House last year. The proalien groups cry out that you are infringing upon the freedom of aliens; you are adding to the deportable classes and thereby making more hardships; you are not giving to the Secretary of Labor enough discretion to make justice in aliens' cases possible. The antialien groups quite as vociferously state: You are attempting to destroy the principle of numerical restriction; you are nullifying the existing provisions of the immigration laws with respect to alien criminals.

Let us not be intolerant or unreasonable in our views on a subject relating to aliens. Let us not be sentimentalists, so that any hardship to an individual undeserving alien appalls us. Let us not be prejudiced against the foreigner in our midst, so that their very presence is looked upon as a menace to our form of government and to our economic life. Let us seek to do that which is right in keeping with American ideals.

I do not think either of the extremists' views are justified. I believe the bill as a whole is a step forward in the immigration policy of the Nation. It not only will enable the administrators of the law to consider and treat humanely the many aliens deserving of such treatment, it will rid the country of many aliens inherently undesirable. It is an immigration bill drawn with a view to solving our present immigration problem to the advantage, first and foremost, of the American people.

The two bills—one to alleviate hardship cases and deportations and the other to redistribute unused immigration quotas—should engage the earnest attention of the Congress during the forthcoming session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including a few stanzas of blank verse composed by a very distinguished constituent of mine, Hon. J. D. Albright, of Knoxville, Tenn., on existing conditions in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein an address recently made by Hon. Roy Miller, of Corpus Christi, Tex., concerning Mr. John N. Garner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Cummings] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, the largest sugar-producing section in the United States is the Second Congressional District in northern Colorado. This is the district that I represent. We have a quota for 1939 of 157,936 acres. This is more than we grew in 1938. Our acreage has been reduced the last 5 years, due to a shortage of water for irrigation purposes. All of our sugar beets are grown by this method of agriculture. Our beets averaged in 1938 a little more than 15 tons per acre. This would mean a potential crop in 1939 of 2,400,000 tons of beets. During the manufacturing period in the fall more than 100 carloads of pure granulated sugar is produced per day. We thought the low price of sugar had been reached in 1933. Secretary Wallace invited the people who were interested in the sugar industry in the United States to meet in Washington in July of that year. Some 3 months were spent in trying to solve the sugar problem. The stabilization agreement, similar to our present quota plan, was agreed to by those who represented 98 percent of the sugar business in the United States. This agreement was nullified by Secretary Wallace. A year later we passed the Jones-Costigan Act, which measure was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. In 1937 another law very similar to the Jones-Costigan Act was passed. This measure was signed by the President on the first day of September 1937, and its provisions were applicable to the year 1937. Among other things it provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall estimate the amount of sugar that will be consumed in the United States for each calendar year, then proceed to divide that amount between the continental United States, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Philippine Islands, Virgin Islands, and Cuba. This act says that the people of those different countries can import a certain amount of sugar but that does not guarantee them a market. If this estimate should be too large, and it proved to be so in 1938 by some 300,000 tons, it means that the sellers of sugar in the countries named will be each striving to dispose of their quota. If in a community there are 10 houses, or 10 horses, for sale and only 9 buyers, the owners will all be striving to supply those 9 buyers. That is what happened in 1937 and 1938 to the sugar industry.

The average price of raw sugar in 1932 was $2.925 and in 1938, $2.940. Labor represents the principal cost of sugar. Cuba's geographical position, plus her quota and tariff benefits, allows her to dominate the sugar market in the United States. I am told her average laborer is paid $1 per day. The beet laborer on farms under the new schedule imposed by Secretary Wallace receives more than $5 per day. workers in the factories of the processors of beets are being rapidly organized by the American Federation of Labor, and their average wage is several times that of Cuba. If Cuba used her full tariff benefits, it would not make much difference to the continental producers of sugar, but from April 12 to September 22, 1938, their sacrifice of duty varied from 90 cents per ton to $6.10 on June 2. An acre of beets will produce about 2 tons of sugar. That means when Cuba was sacrificing $6.10 per ton, it was reducing the value of an acre of beets $12.20. On June 30 they were sacrificing $4.90, which meant $9.80 per acre of beets.

The Department of State at the present time under authority granted them by the reciprocal-trade agreement are negotiating a treaty with Cuba which would lower the present duty on sugar 15 cents per hundred. This will be a reduction of $3 per ton for Cuba, and if they fail to take advantage of that rate, it would be a loss of $6 per acre to the growers of sugar beets in the United States, or a total of $6,000,000.

A Habana dispatch of November 12, 1938, published in the Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal, reads as follows:

A 15-point cut: It is generally believed here that Cuba will get a 15-point cut in United States tariff rates on sugar. In New York trade circles, however, nobody seems to know anything about it, as witness the fact the Philippine and Cuban raws continue selling at the same comparative level, i. e., a 90-point difference, whereas a 15-point reduction, if we get it, will immediately be reflected by our American price.

This statement simply means that Cuba has no intention of keeping 15 cents per hundred if granted the proposed reduction, but does intend to lower their price that much per hundred in New York to assist them in finding a market for their full quota.

I have heard people criticize the sugar industry on the grounds that it furnished only seasonal employment. If this should be construed to mean that the sugar industry should not be allowed to develop in the United States because the labor is seasonal and the same rule were applied to other crops, what would be the results? All fruits and vegetables provide seasonal employment; so does corn and wheat—in fact all crops grown on the farm. Unless connected with winter feeding operations, the average farm laborer works from a few weeks to 8 or 9 months. The same argument would apply to the manufacturing of cement. In fact, nearly all business has a rush season. The growing and processing of sugar beets and sugarcane furnishes more work than the average agricultural crop.

If I could write a sugar law to suit myself, it would provide that the continental United States, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands could grow as much sugar as they wished. I would prorate the balance of our requirements in a way that I thought would be of most benefit to our own people. With a price of $2.94 for raw sugar, duty paid in the United States, there is not much chance of expanding, or even continuing, our present production.

I have never been an advocate of high prices for sugar. I realize that it is a necessary food and should be kept within the reach of our lowest wage earner. A staple price of $5 to $5.50 would result in an increase of at least 50 percent in continental production of sugar. On the ratio of their food value sugar would be a cheaper food at 5½ cents per pound than butter at 9 cents per pound, bacon at 8 cents, ham at 5 cents, lamb at 3½ cents, sirloin steak at 3 cents, eggs at 2½ cents per dozen, chicken at 2½ cents per pound, and milk at 21/2 cents per quart. I think we all realize it would be impossible to produce the articles of food I have just mentioned at those prices.

A ruling by the Secretary of Agriculture increased the cost of hand labor in 1938 over 1936 on 15 tons of beets, which is the average yield per acre in the irrigated sections, $5 per acre. The average price of refined sugar in 1937, the year the present law was enacted, was $4.66; in 1938, $3.948 per hundred. This shows a reduction of 71.2 cents per hundred pounds, which means a decrease in the value of sugar produced on an average acre of $24.92. If you will add to that the $5.09 increase in the cost of labor, you have $30.01; and if you add to this $30.01 a further reduction of 15 cents per hundred pounds on raw sugar, that I am told the Department of State is considering, you will have another reduction of $6: total $36.01.

A few farmers in the Corn Belt can grow a crop of corn yielding about 40 bushels per acre, which, if sold at 50 cents per bushel, would be $20 per acre. If you grew a crop of 30 bushels of wheat and sold it on the present market, you would get about $18 per acre. In other words, this decrease in the value of an acre of beets is more than the total value of the average farm crop in the United States. We harvest about a million acres of beets on an average per year. This makes a loss in round figures of some $30,000,000.

It is impossible to grow sugar in the United States in competition with the world. Most of the sugar is grown in the tropical countries and produced by the cheapest class of labor. For the crop year of 1922-23 the world production of sugar was 20,878,000 tons. In 10 years, 1923-33, it had increased to 29,145,000 tons, or an increase of 8,270,000 tons. From 1933-38, a period of 5 years, it has increased from 29,145,000 tons to 36,000,000 tons, or an increase of 6,855,000 tons. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman think we ought to have a tariff on sugar, so that we can protect the sugar-beet industry of Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINGS. You cannot protect the sugar business of the United States with a tariff, for this reason: We cannot levy a tariff against Hawaii; we cannot levy a tariff against Puerto Rico; we cannot levy a tariff against the Virgin Islands. You will never be able to levy a tariff against the Philippine Islands so long as our flag flies over that country. Hawaii and Puerto Rico will produce probably 3,000,000 tons of sugar. Cuba has produced more than 5,000,000. The Philippine Islands can produce two or three million tons. They have produced 1,200,000 tons. You cannot levy a tariff against those countries. They will produce practically all of the sugar we consume in the United States, and a tariff will be of very little benefit.

Mr. RICH. Call it anything you want, but we want to protect the farmers of Colorado and the farmers of Michigan and the Louisiana cane sugar growers. If we can give the market to our own people for our own products, we will go places.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am with the gentleman 100 percent. Mr. RICH. Then the New Deal is wrong in their reciprocal-trade agreements on sugar.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada. Mr. SCRUGHAM. With due consideration of all the facts the gentleman has stated, does he consider it is economically justified to make the sharp limitations of acreage given to sugar beets in States like Nevada and others having reclamation projects? If so, what is the justification, taking into consideration all the facts the gentleman has stated?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not think it is. If I had my way, the United States and the island possessions would grow every pound of sugar they wanted to grow until we had supplied the full demand in this country. If there was anything left, I would divide it up. That goes for all other agricultural products as well as sugar.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. In other words, the gentleman would apply quotas only to the foreign service?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is it.

Mr. HOPE. Is not the chief cause of the difficulty at the present time, as far as low prices are concerned, the action of the Secretary of Agriculture in overestimating the consumption for the present year?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I felt that my illustration of 10 horses and 9 buyers made that plain.

Mr. HOPE. That is the real difficulty, is it not?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I feel that it is.

Mr. HOPE. And does not the Secretary have it in his power right now, by the authority which the law gives him under those estimates, to give the farmers of this country a reasonable price for their sugar?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I feel his interpretation of the law is that the law defines certain ways under which he must make the estimate. If this be true, the law should be corrected by a slight amendment. Perhaps 25 or 30 words would cure the defect.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman, however, does not agree with the Secretary on that point, does he?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No.

Mr. HOPE. That is, if the gentleman were Secretary of Agriculture he probably would arrive at a different estimate of consumption than the present Secretary, would he not?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would try awfully hard. [Laughter.] Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman from Colorado has made a very powerful speech, one in which I, being from Montana, am deeply interested because of the fact that we grow a lot of sugar beets in my State.

Does not the gentleman think that this Congress should oppose any policy respecting any country outside of our own in trade agreements or a tariff that will cause idle acreage of land or an increase in our relief rolls?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I suppose so; but the gentleman is putting me in a rather embarrassing position, because I voted for the reciprocal-trade agreements and voted to extend the

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is not that a fact? Should not that be our policy?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield. Mr. CRAWFORD. As I understand, the gentleman is now a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and has been for the last several years?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Six years.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Six years. Does the gentleman remember a statement having been brought up in 1937 by the Department of Agriculture to the Committee on Agriculture of the House and a like committee of the Senate which had reference to a $350,000,000 excess in price paid by consumers of sugar in this country over and above the world price of sugar?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think I read something like that a number of times.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not raw sugar was the basis on which that statement was made by the Department of Agriculture, and whether the Department of Agriculture was referring to the price of raw sugar or the price of refined sugar in making their calculation of that $350,000,000 figure?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not know what they had in mind. Mr. CRAWFORD. Let us say it this way, then: The Department of Agriculture published figures to the effect that the consumers of this country paid 5.6 cents per pound for the sugar we consumed in 1936, or $5.60 a hundred. They also published figures showing that we consumed, we will say in round figures, 126,000,000 bags of sugar. In the statement presented to the Committee on Agriculture of the House and Senate, respectively, the Department of Agriculture said in substance-I have the exact quotation here-that the consumers of sugar in this country paid $350,000,000 in excess of the depressed prices that prevailed in the world market. Now, the question I am asking is: Did the Secretary of Agriculture and his assistants use a raw price, or a price on raw sugar, in making that $350,000,000 calculation, or did they use a price on refined sugar?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am inclined to think they used the price on raw sugar. But that would not make much difference because 106 pounds of raw makes 100 pounds of refined. which would amount to less than 6 percent. The point, I think, is that if an article that is protected does not sell in the United States at the world price plus the tariff, then the tariff has not accomplished the purpose for which it was levied. The producers of agricultural products are entitled to as much protection as the producers of manufactured articles. When I make this statement, when I talk protective tariff, there are those who ask me whether I am a Democrat or a Republican. I say to them that when it comes to protecting the products of the people in my district I am just whatever kind of party man it takes to bring about that Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman. Let us assume that the raw price, the price on which sugar is sold on the world market, is $1 per hundred. Let us assume further that the price of refined sugar in this country is $5 per hundred, that in England it is $9, in Germany $7, in Australia $11; in arriving at the excess cost I raised the question: Wherein was the Department of Agriculture fair, wherein was the Secretary of State fair, when they gave out to the press of this Nation a cold-blooded statement to the effect that the sugar industry received a rake-off of $350,-000,000 per year?

Mr. CUMMINGS. You start at the wrong point.
Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman means they start at the

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; because when raw sugar was $1 and there was no tariff sugar never sold for 5 cents a pound.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hope]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There would be this difference: You could have internal control, for instance, a consumption tax may be of $4 a hundred added to the $1 on raw sugar, to arrive at the $5.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You could, but I wish the gentleman would tell me how to get it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Within a few minutes I shall submit to the House the world price on refined sugar at the present time and I wish to submit this to show the fallacy of the statement which has been made by the Department of Agriculture and sanctioned by the Secretary of State. I hope the gentleman will observe my showing on that, because I regard his opinion as the highest on sugar of any Member of the House, due to the fact he is a dirt farmer. [Applause.] He knows how to grow sugar and he knows the problems of the industry.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Colorado stated a moment ago that he is in favor of the tariff for the products of his own district. That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman has limited it too much. I am in favor of a tariff that will preserve the American market for the American farmer and American labor.

Mr. KNUTSON. May we chalk the gentleman up as recruit No. 1 to the G. O. P. in this session?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would not like to go that far. I like you a lot, but not that much.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana. Mr. O'CONNOR. I regard the gentleman's opinion very highly. It has been claimed that as importations increase into this country employment increases in this country proportionately. Could the gentleman give us his views upon that subject as to whether that is right or not?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is like asking a man can he walk north and south at the same time. I could not answer that

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Missis-

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman support a measure to guarantee the farmers the cost of production for all their crops-cotton, wheat, corn, and all other crops that are domestically consumed?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will, if the gentleman will do it with a processing tax.

Mr. RANKIN. Suppose we do not do it that way. Suppose we say we will guarantee the farmers their cost of production. That has been done with industry through the tariff. It has been done with industrial labor through the wage and hour bill. Now the farmers are going broke, which has caused a depression. You cannot have prosperity in this country with agriculture in an impoverished condition. Will the gentleman support a measure to guarantee the farmers of all classes the cost of production for their crops?

Mr. CUMMINGS. By a processing tax.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not talking about any kind of a tax. I am talking about guaranteeing them the cost of production.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I may say, if the gentleman will show me where he can get the money without bankrupting the Nation, I will consider it.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman did not talk about a processing tax in connection with the tariff, and he is not asking for a processing tax in connection with the tariff on sugar.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We have a processing tax on sugar of 50 cents a hundred, and it is paying its way in addition to putting $13,000,000 into the United States Treasury.

Mr. RANKIN. The trouble is you want to tax the unprotected masses in order to get money to boost the tariff. The farmers in this country are in a desperate condition. There are a great many here requesting a measure to guarantee to all farmers the cost of production of their crops that are domestically consumed. What I want to know is whether the gentleman would support a measure of that kind if it comes to the House for consideration.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I just answered that question.

Mr. RANKIN. No; the gentleman said he would do so provided we put on a processing tax.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Or the gentleman can show me where he can get the money without bankrupting the country.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman did not show where he had the money to carry out the tariff. The tariff during the Hoover and Republican administration-

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not care to talk tariff. I just want to talk sugar at this time. If the gentleman wants to talk tariff, that is another thing.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is talking about the tariff. I thought I heard the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] welcoming him into the high-tariff fold.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I refused the invitation, so the gentleman cannot say I am going over there.

Mr. RANKIN. The burden of the American people, so far as the tariff is concerned, amounted to about $4,000,000,000 a year during the Harding and Coolidge administrations. That is one thing that brought about the collapse in 1932. farmers went down under that burden, and they are down yet. The only way to bring the price level of the farmers up to that of labor and industry is to guarantee them the cost of production for all their crops, or at least that part that is domestically consumed.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would suggest that the gentleman come over to the Committee on Agriculture and present his statement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include a short statement having to do with patents, a subject which should have the attention of this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONSOLIDATION AND CODIFICATION OF INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United States, H. R. 2762, and ask unanimous consent that the same be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws has no objection to this matter being referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford] is recognized for 10 minutes.

STIGAR

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to recommend to all the Members of the House, irrespective of the section of the country in which they live, that they obtain as quickly as possible a copy of the hearings on Senate Resolution 49, held on January 13, 1939, before the Senate Finance Committee. There is so much in these hearings which has to do with the reciprocal trade agreement policy, foreign trade, and the general policies of the State Department that whatever you do you should take time to get a copy of the hearings and read it very carefully.

All during this session, and perhaps the sessions for many years to come, we shall be dealing with the question of price levels.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] has just raised a question with reference to the price of cotton. He may not have said "cotton" directly, but I know he has that in mind, and I am very sympathetic with the views he brought out.

I have just secured from the Treasury Department a statement showing the stocks of basic commodities held under loans of the Commodity Credit Corporation and under loans made by banks and lending agencies, which will eventually dovetail into the Commodity Credit Corporation. We find that as to cotton alone, 10,708,000 bales of cotton are involved, on which we have extended loans of $541,000,000. It is estimated that by the 1st to the 15th of April of this year the figure will exceed 12,000,000 bales of cotton the Government of the United States will be directly or indirectly holding.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman let me complete this statement first?

This serves notice on everyone who holds cotton in the raw, piece goods, cotton at the mills, or goods on the shelf, that he had better look out for breaking prices on cotton because when the Government becomes loaded with ten, eleven, or twelve million or more bales of cotton the Government will become the largest single holder of cotton in the world.

Going from cotton to other commodities, we find with respect to corn there are loans of $39,000,000 on 69,000,000 bushels; wheat, 64,000,000 bushels; tobacco, 31,000,000 pounds; turpentine, 10,000,000 gallons, 937,000 barrels; peanuts, 92,000 tons; prunes, 15,000 tons; raisins, 81,000 tons; butter, 88,000,000 pounds; dates, pecans, hops, and wool and mohair, 56,000,000 pounds, or a total of $679,000,000, nearly three-quarters of a billion dollars tied up in these commodities at the present time.

This serves notice on everyone who is engaged in buying, selling, or marketing commodities that he must keep his eyes on the price levels dictated by Government agencies and operated through Government manipulation and all the backing and filling that flows through political administrations, irrespective of who is in power.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

vield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I wish to inquire about the item of 88,000,000 pounds of butter. How is that butter now stored? Is it a finished product now, or does the figure mean that that will be the surplus at the end of a certain year? How does the gentleman arrive at that figure?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Treasury statement, showing loans by years and commodities as of December 31, 1938, shows as to butter loans of $23,569,000 on 88,665,000 pounds. As to the condition in which that butter is, I must necessarily assume it is in eatable condition, ready for the consumer's table.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thought perhaps they had some system of figuring with which I am not familiar by which they would estimate that would be the surplus at a certain time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I do not understand it that way. I know the so-called surplus of butter has materially decreased since the cold weather has set in. I assume that amount will increase very materially as soon as spring opens up and the milk flow starts again.

Going a step further on the question of prices and coming directly to the point I want to bring up and emphasize, which has to do again with price levels and which has been discussed more or less by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Cummings], if you will refer to the hearings before the House and Senate Committees on Agriculture on the 1937 Sugar Act, you will find on page 174 of the Senate hearings a most interesting statement made by a representative of the Department of Agriculture, in which this language appears:

The total cost to American consumers of sugar purchased under the quota system during the calendar year 1936 has been estimated at approximately $350,000,000 in excess of the depressed prices that prevailed in the world market.

In studying the hearings before the Senate committee the other day, to which I have referred, and particularly the statement of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, attempting to find the source of the statement he made about the "rake-off" of $350,000,000—using his exact language—which the sugar industry received, and tracing it back as best I could by conferring with Department officials, I find his statement comes directly from the statement published in the 1937 hearings, prepared in the Department of Agriculture without a foundation that is worth a nickel, as I shall show as I go through these charts if I can get the time. The Secretary sanctified the statement, and the press of this country carried it in bold headlines, to the effect that the industry was receiving a "rake-off" of $350,000,000.

I have here a statement published by the United States Department of Agriculture in December 1938 which shows the retail prices paid by the consumers of sugar throughout the world in 43 countries.

The statement shows all the principal countries of the world, those which import sugar on a large scale and those which export sugar on a large scale and those which are almost self-sufficient. I recommend that you get a copy of this statement and study it carefully and see what the consumers of sugar in the United States are paying for refined sugar as compared to what is being paid by the people in other parts of the world under free trade and otherwise. When you finish studying this statement I believe you will find your people are particularly blessed with low prices for the sugar in refined form they have in their sugar bowl at the breakfast table. I have not time to quote these figures, and I shall not ask that this document be included in the Record, because it is available to every Member of the House.

LXXXIV-29

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minne-

Mr. KNUTSON. I recognize, as do my colleagues, that the gentleman from Michigan is perhaps the best authority in the House on the sugar question, or at least one of the best. It is my understaning that the sugar industry in Cuba is controlled by the National City Bank, the Chase National Bank of New York, and Vincent Astor, the proprietor of the Nourmahal, which was used quite extensively as a show boat a few years back. Is the gentleman in position to inform the House just how much of a "rake-off," which seems to be the designation, these three activities are getting out of the present sugar policy of the New Deal administration?

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I say to the gentleman it would not be possible for me to show that?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan may be extended 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I say to the gentleman from Minnesota it would be impossible to answer that question accurately without-

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, approximately.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Without the stock ownership of the different industries in Cuba, but it can be answered in a practical way in this manner. Take the centrals in Cuba in which these particular institutions are greatly interested and which, we will say, they dominate from the standpoint of control the amount of sugar which those particular centrals produce, and then project the prices—I shall show from these charts—onto their percentage of the production, and you can arrive at a very close answer in dollars and cents to the question propounded by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. It runs into the millions, does it not?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly, in my opinion, it runs into the millions.

Mr. KNUTSON. I saw some figures a while ago wherein it was estimated that the amount of sugar that was being extracted by these three activities was approximately $42,-000,000, and I assume that $42,000,000 comes out of the American people.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Reverting again to the statement of the Secretary of State relative to this "rake-off" he mentions. Has the gentleman given consideration to the conditions that existed in 1920, during which time the housewives of the country paid as high as 32 cents per pound for sugar at the local grocery store? These conditions existed only during the time when American-produced sugar was not on the market and consequently not in position to contribute through competition anything toward a reasonable price for that commodity. Does not the gentleman believe that the Secretary of State referred to something that occurred 18 or 19 years ago; something, by the way, that ought to prove interesting to every housewife in the country, and sound a warning to everyone in this country who has a desire to give the consumers of the country some sort of notice as to what will happen to them if and when this industry is completely destroyed? The Secretary of Agriculture has termed the sugar industry an "inefficient" industry, and one that should not have been established in this country, but that it did not appear politically possible to eliminate it at this time. If that day comes, the housewives of the country may depend upon it that they will pay far more than they have paid during the time when the American sugar industry was permitted to produce at least a part of the sugar which our people

Mr. CRAWFORD. We might say it is an insurance policy. Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Of course it is an insurance policy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The production of sugar by the domestic industry is an insurance policy to American housewives against exploitation by foreign producers.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. And the only one available to the American consumer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The figure which I show here and which ties directly into the statement made by the Secretary published on page 11 of this rough draft of the hearings on Senate Resolution 49, on the $350,000,000 "rake off," and I keep coming back to this because it was an unfair statement to put in the hearings in 1937, but I did not challenge the figure at that time because other people were talking. That is no excuse, but I did not challenge it at that time, but the Secretary of State has so emphatically made the statement now, and points out so impressively that the statement has never been challenged by the industry or its friends that here today I am challenging the statement, and, as the Department of Agriculture knows and as the Secretary of State knows, it will not hold water, and here is the reason.

Here [referring to the chart] are the prices published by Willett & Gray and H. H. Pike & Son. The former-Willett & Gray-are recognized sugar statisticians throughout the world and have been for decades. They show the ebb and flow of prices on raw sugar at New York, showing the world price of raw sugar, prices on refined sugar, and prices on duty-paid sugar and c. i. f., which is "cost, insurance, and freight." New York, without the duty.

Look at this statement, for instance. In 1933 raw sugar sold, c. i. f., $1.20 a hundred, and in 1934, $1.46 a hundred; 1935, $2.31 a hundred; 1936, $2.67 a hundred.

If you will take the records of the Department of Agriculture, you will find that we purchased in 1936, 126,337,600 bags

The Department of Agriculture also shows in these hearings that the consumers of this country paid at that time $5.60 per hundred average for refined sugar for the year 1936, and, multiplying that out, you get a cost of $707,000,000 total sugar bill; deducting from that the $350,000,000 which the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, says was a rake-off, it brings the cost of sugar down to $357,490,000, which, divided by your 126,000,000 bags of sugar, gives you a cost of $2.83 per hundred pounds for refined sugar at the consumers' table, according to the Secretary of State and the Department of Agriculture. Now, what buying power would Cuba have or what could we ship to Cuba, under reciprocal-trade agreements or otherwise, had they sold sugar on a $2.83 refined basis?

If Cuba should be forced to sell raw sugar on a basis which, when converted into refined, moved to the consumer at a price of only $2.83 per 100 pounds, the Secretaries of Agriculture and State both know Cuba would get very little return. Cuba's purchasing power in that case would be reduced to practically nothing. Cuba could not, under such circumstances, compete with Java or India or Formosa. If this statement I here make is not true, why has the State Department insisted upon Cuba having a preferential in our market over the other foreign countries of the world. Our two Secretaries know full well that Cuba needs protection against other low-cost areas, just as the domestic industry of continental United States and our insular possessions need protection against Cuba's low standard of living. There is another portion of Latin America in which we have a vital interest-that is Puerto Rico. Too much attention in Cuba's favor would greatly injure Puerto Rico. Neither of these areas could produce and sell sugar on a $2.83 refined basis, and this fact is well known to all students of the industry. A price of $2.83 on refined would eliminate the whole of the continental industry and make us dependent upon far-away foreign areas for our sugar supply. Then who would get the rake-off? That question is easily answered. Would the Secretaries of State and Agriculture have us eliminate the domestic refiners, local wholesalers and retailers, by cutting their participation in the $2.83 so low they could not exist so that Cuba could have the major portion of the $2.83? Thus, an analysis of the formula and the price elements reduces the claim of an excess cost and a rake-off to nothingness. I repeat, the statement is not worth a nickel to anyone. It misleads and befuddles and should not be repeated again by the Departments of Agricul-

The Secretary was proposing to either cut Cuba out of the sugar business or cut the refiners, the wholesale jobbers, or the retailers out of the sugar business in this country. It is not in the cards to deliver sugar to the American consumer at $2.83 per 100 pounds, refined basis, and the Secretary of Agriculture knows it, as does the Secretary of State. So why does he refer to the rake-off? Here are your duties-$2 in 1933; $1.50 in 1934; 90 cents in 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1938. Add the c. i. f. and the duty together, and subtract the sum of those two elements of price from the refined price, and you get total margins of $2.20 for refiner, wholesaler, and retailer in 1933, $2.64 in 1934, $2.49 in 1935, and $2.03 in 1936; and the Secretary is proposing to reduce the price from $5.60 down to $2.83 a hundred. He knows that that is not fair play to the people of this country, he knows that sugar cannot be moved on that basis, and he knows his statement is misleading. I discussed these figures this very day with the Department of Agriculture, with those who are responsible for that $350,000,000 statement. It does nobody any good for such statements to be made, and I am here now to challenge those statements, and I defy the Department of Agriculture to come up here and stand between the two hitching posts-namely, the low, the depressed price, as they call it, on raw sugar over the world and the price of $5.60 set up in these hearings, which the consumer paid-stand between those two hitching posts and support the statement put in these hearings and the statement made by the Secretary of State. It is not fair to this industry, and such statements are not fair to the other industries shown on the commodity charts.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I realize that the gentleman is one of the best-informed Members in the House on the subject that he is discussing. I am interested in the question that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Knutson] asked, eliminating the partisan quirk that he gave to the question when he said that when we legislate in favor of Cuba, we legislate in effect in favor of Wall Street millionaires. The question I would like to have answered, if the gentleman has the information, is, What percentage of the territory in Cuba which produces sugar is owned by the Cubans, and what percentage is owned by those millionaires in New York in whose favor it is claimed we are legislating?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. There is another special order on the program for today. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] whether it is agreeable to him to have this extension of time granted the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, every student of the sugar industry in the Western Hemisphere knows that the conditions of those who toil in the dirt, the peon laborer in the sugar industry in Cuba, rest on a basis of starvation wages. Every student knows that the industry in Cuba is owned primarily by absentee ownership. The Secretary of State in these hearings the other day referred to the fact that Cuba has been bled white. Bled white by whom? And on what basis? Bled white by absentee ownership, and when you do legislate in the name of the peon worker and the primary producer or worker, when we legislate in his name, and the benefits flow to the absentee owners, then it becomes a tug of war between the New York firms and the farmers in the United States and our insular possessions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that 90 percent of the sugar-producing area in Cuba is owned by the New York people that we are discussing, or that that percentage goes to absentee landlords in dividends?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I cannot cite the records, but I can state that I believe fully 90 percent of the dividends of the industry in Cuba flow to "absentee owners," and that gets at it in the same way. If this has not been true, then why did the Secretary of State take the position that Cuba had been "bled white"? By whom has she been bled if not by absentee ownership?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman give us the comparative prices paid by the American consumer and those in other parts of the world during the years the gentleman was there?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not recite them because they are set out in great detail here, and it would take considerable time to read them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Generally how does the price we pay compare with that paid by the Englishman, say, or the Frenchman?

Mr. CRAWFORD. At the present time—and I am talking now about today—we are paying a price of about $5.20 per hundred. In the United Kingdom the price about last May was $6.12; in Australia, where I believe they consume more sugar per capita than in any other place in the world, 4 pence per hundred; in Honduras, 10 centavos; in Argentina, $5.71; in Italy, 2.99 lire.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I did not want you to go into all of those figures, but, generally speaking, do we pay more or less in the United States than in other countries?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Generally speaking, you pay less.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The prices the gentleman is giving are the prices of raw sugar? Not on refined sugar?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I am talking about refined sugar. Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska. Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Is it not a fact that the retail price of sugar at the present time is within two-tenths of 1 percent of the lowest price on record, which occurred in 1932?

Mr. CRAWFORD. As far as I can find from the record, that is true. I can walk up Pennsylvania Avenue and go into any Sanitary store in the District today and purchase refined sugar at about the lowest price in all history. I can purchase it for 44 cents for a 10-pound bag. That is $4.40 per 100 in 10-pound packets, or on the basis of about $4 in bulk bags. Of course, it is a low price. Raw sugars are every day establishing what is known as near all-time low prices.

I can appreciate and comprehend that most any man could become so engrossed in his own particular philosophy and theory, as the Secretary of State has in connection with reciprocal-trade agreements, that he feels that is the only remedy for mankind. Read his statement before the committee. He points out that his reciprocal-trade agreement program is the only one that has been submitted for the economic salvation of the world during the last several years. That is enthusiasm. But at the same time we cannot afford to sit here and permit a basic agricultural industry to be murdered in such a manner. I do not propose to do it. I do not do so because I am the paid agent of the beet-sugar industry. I will talk just as much in favor of cotton, or wheat, or corn, or potatoes, or any of these other commodities on this list. It is an American industry.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I think I heard the gentleman refer to my remarks when he first arose. I want to ask the gentleman if he is willing to support legislation that will guarantee to all farmers, including the cotton farmers, the cost of production for at least that part of their crops that are domestically consumed? That is, the product consumed in the United States. Is the gentleman willing to vote for that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will answer the gentleman directly. If we had a way of bringing together the operations of the Treasury Department and the central banking system and the fiscal policies of this country in a manner whereby you could arrive at a monetary price level, to which the gentleman is referring, and with which the proposed legislation deals, certainly I would support it. But when the fiscal policies of the Government and the Treasury Department overbalance and overshadow the functions of the central banking system, as every student now recognizes, what chance have you got to bring about a stabilized price level or guaranteed cost of production basis?

Mr. RANKIN. I understood the gentleman was talking about the price of agricultural commodities and was not attempting to reorganize our financial structure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am still talking about the price of agricultural commodities.

Mr. RANKIN. But the gentleman is asking us to put a tariff on sugar. That is the motive behind his speech-put a tariff on sugar to protect certain farmers and others. I am asking him whether or not he is willing to go with us to guarantee to all other farmers the cost of production for that portion of their crops consumed in the United States?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will go with you by starting in and cleaning up the whole kit and caboodle, including the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve System, and whatever is necessary to bring about stability in prices of farm products. Let me say this to the gentleman-because I am making my own speech today-I am speaking in the interest of the American housewife, who is budgeted and who has to go down and buy sugar to feed the kiddies and the old man with. As the gentleman from Michigan said awhile ago, I went to the store in 1920 and paid $35 per 100 pounds for refined sugar. Thirty-five dollars per hundred pounds, because Cuba at that time pushed the price of raw sugar up to the refiners in this country to more than $22 per 100 pounds, as against $2.65 per 100 pounds today.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further right there?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield further.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman know that when he raises the price of sugar with a tariff he imposes an additional burden upon the housewife instead of relieving her of anything except her cash?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will challenge the gentleman from Mississippi to establish the fact that an increase in duty on sugar or that a duty on sugar raises the price of sugar. He cannot support it with the figures. Often the price breaks following increase in duty. The tariff does not control prices.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield. Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to say that the present policy of allotment has caused a decrease in acreage in my district of 2,000 acres of the finest land that we have in Montana; land in which the Government of the United States has assisted us with money in creating our irrigation districts, which will now lie idle as the result of this policy.

Sugar-beet production in Montana the last 10 years, according to figures released by the Department of Agriculture, follows: 43,282 acres in 1929, 49,198 acres in 1930, 64,232 acres in 1931, 59,225 acres in 1932, 74,879 acres in 1933, 72,994 acres in 1934, 57,113 acres in 1935, 74,398 acres in 1936, 77,227 acres in 1937, and 84,076 acres in 1938. The Department has allotted 82,020 acres for production in 1939.

Now these figures reveal that production increased 3,000 acres in 1937 over the previous year, and 7,000 acres in 1938 over 1937, which would set a normal production increase of at least 6,000 acres in 1939. On that basis, the normal production this year would total 88,000 acres against the Department of Agriculture's curtailment to 82,020 acres.

These figures show that the 1939 acreage quota curtails beet production in Montana more than 2,000 acres below the production last year and approximately 6,000 acres below what Montana growers would normally produce this year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, on last Tuesday I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made on the floor of this House by some of my colleagues in connection with the Flood Control Act of 1938. What I am going to say this afternoon must not be construed as an indication that I am in favor of the Power Trust, for neither in my State nor in any other State of the Union have the power interests ever been my friend. By the same token, I have never been the friend of the power interests.

When the Flood Control Act of 1938 came before the House for final passage I was opposed to it. I spoke of my objections when the conference report was up for adoption. I was opposed to the passage of that act on principle, and just in this connection I want to repeat a little bit of the history of that flood-control act. The Flood Control Committee of the House reported a bill last year which was unanimously passed. There was no dissenting voice, no objection from any Member of the House to the proposition contained in that bill. That bill, which was passed unanimously, provided that the various States of the Union should participate in the floodcontrol program and that the various States should see that the lands and easements and rights-of-way were paid for by the various States. No question was raised in this House or suggestion made that the Federal Government pay the entire cost itself.

The bill went to the body at the other end of the Capitol. The Flood Control Committee of the Senate reported the bill calling for participation by the States. So, also, the Flood Control Committee of the Senate did not believe, as evidenced by its report, in full payment by the Federal Government. When the measure came on the floor of the Senate, however, an amendment was presented which provided that the Federal Government should pay the entire cost and that the Federal Government should have complete control at all times over flood-control projects; that the States would have nothing whatever to say about them. It was interesting to note that the amendment presented on the floor of the Senate was not prepared by a member of the Flood Control Committee of that body, but was prepared by a gentleman who is a Member of this House, and he has himself so stated, in his office, and this gentleman is not a member of the Flood Control Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I think it was a very serious mistake for Congress to pass a measure of that sort. The question had been debated for several years as to whether or not the full cost of flood control in the United States should be paid by the Federal Government alone or whether it should be apportioned in cooperation and in conjunction with the States. The Flood Control Committee of the House and the Flood Control Committee of the Senate had rejected the proposition of full Federal responsibility and full Federal payment. On April 28, 1937, the President of the United States himself said:

It is my belief that for many reasons the Federal Government should not be charged with the cost of the land necessary for levees, dams, and reservoirs.

The Mississippi River Commission, which has been actively concerned and interested in a program of flood control, adopted a resolution which, among other things, stated:

The commission is firmly of the opinion that some degree of local financial cooperation is essential to a successful accomplishment of a flood-control project.

The Mississippi Valley committee of the Public Works Administration has consistently supported the principle of local contribution.

Mr. Speaker, under the present act the States have no word whatever to say with respect to where the dam shall be placed, where the reservoir shall be placed, whether the land shall be taken by condemnation proceedings or how. In other words, every right of the States is categorically denied insofar as having a voice with respect to flood-control matters. The Federal Government can come into a State, if they feel a flood-control project is necessary in that State, and can wipe out a whole population; that is, dismantle a whole town, including its industries, and make the population move. If a State has a particular stream-pollution program the Federal Government can disregard that. In other words, it gave to the Federal Government absolute control over the lands of the various States, their forests, their mountains, and over all of their natural resources.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, it was a serious mistake on the part of Congress to change the policy enunciated in the act of 1936, which provided for local participation. I question very much the constitutionality of the act of 1938. If it be constitutional, Mr. Speaker, I think the Members of the House have given up sovereign rights of the States. It was a great day for those who believe that the States do not have the capacity to govern themselves. It was a great day for those who believe in overcentralization of government; who want to see all power lodged in the Federal Government. It was a great day for those people who think that the seat of all wisdom and power should be right here in Washington, and that there is no capacity in the local communities to govern

Mr. Speaker, I think something should be done to correct the act of 1938. There was no necessity for surrendering these rights. The sovereign States have rights. It was, however, a great victory for those who believe that the States should be nothing but innocuous subdivisions of the Federal Government.

There was no emergency. The flood-control program was moving along with rapidity, and in practically every section of the United States which needed flood control, projects were under way, the States were going along cooperating and willing to accept the responsibility of paying their share; and there has never been an instance cited of any district refusing to cooperate with the Federal Government when it came to a flood-control project for their particular district.

Mr. Speaker, we, individually, represent the people of our district, we represent our States. We are not here as Members of Congress representing the Federal Government. It is our duty to represent our States and to see that our States are protected in all the powers reserved to them under the Constitution of the United States.

When there is no emergency, no necessity, no compelling reason to give up the sovereign power of the States, I think the Congress is making a grave mistake in surrendering such rights. May I quote from what the President said several years ago?

It must be obvious that almost every new or old problem of gov-ernment must be solved, if it is to be solved to the satisfaction of the people of the whole country, by each State in its own way.

I quote further from what the President said:

The preservation of this home rule by the States is a fundamental The preservation of this nome rule by the States is a fundamental necessity if we are to remain a truly united country. The doctrine of regulation and legislation by master minds, in whose judgment and will all the people may gladly and quietly acquiesce, has been too glaringly apparent at Washington during the past 10 years.

I regret very much that this Congress was weak enough at a moment when there was no emergency to surrender the sovereign rights of States. We should not give up the priceless heritage that belongs to the various States.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that some way may be found to change this policy and that we will go back to the policy as enunciated in the Flood Control Act of 1936.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes, if he wants more time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire additional

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have additional time if any Member desires to ask any questions

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. May I ask the gentleman, if the Federal Government wished to condemn a site in his State or in the State of Missouri for a post-office building, or for the establishment of an Indian school, does the gentleman believe it is necessary, before the Government may procure the land on which to locate such building or institution, to have it get the consent of the State to do so? Has that ever been done in the history of our country?

Mr. EBERHARTER. In answer to the question asked by the gentleman, I say that so far as this flood-control proposition is concerned there was no necessity for the States to surrender their sovereign rights. The proposition of a post office is altogether different. We gave to the Federal Government the right to come in and take the natural resources of the States without even saying "How do you do" to the State authorities.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Does the gentleman know of any instance where a reservoir was constructed or a dam erected that the consent of the State was required before this was done, even prior to the passage of the 1938 act?

Mr. EBERHARTER. In actual practice before the passage of the 1938 act, the United States Army engineers collaborated with the State authorities of any State in which there was a flood-control project in contemplation. Under the provisions of the 1938 act that will not be necessary.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The Flood Control Act of 1936 provided for the construction of a reservoir in Missouri. Under this act the Federal Government was given power to condemn the land necessary for this reservoir. There was no requirement there for the consent of the State of Missouri.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Under the act of 1936? Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Yes. It was declared that flood control was a national emergency, that it was the duty of the Federal Government to assume the responsibility for it, and we gave the Federal Government the power to condemn these lands. There was no usurpation of State rights; there was nothing in the act that required the Government to get the consent of the States.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman admit that the act of 1938 gives to the Federal Government powers which it did not possess under the act of 1936?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Not at all. It has the same power to go in and condemn land, pay for it, and take full control. In connection with the New Madrid spillway, the Government went in and condemned land under the act of 1938 and, in some instances, took title to the land. There was no consent of Missouri or any other State required. What is the basis for the gentleman's contention?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The basis for the contention is that in previous acts the States were compelled to participate and were compelled to pay a certain share of the initial cost of the project. Under the 1938 act they are not compelled to do that. Previously, if the State did not wish to participate, or did not agree with the plans and specifications and the conclusions of the Engineering Department of the United States Army, there would be no flood-control project in the particular State. For these reasons the States did not surrender any of their sovereign rights.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. To refresh the gentleman's memory, may I say that under the Flood Control Act of 1928 the New Madrid-Burns Point spillway was made a part of the lower Mississippi River project. The local interests did not contribute anything, neither did the States. The Federal Government went in there and condemned in the Federal courts, took the flowage rights, and in some instances condemned outright and took over complete title to those lands. Was that a violation of any State rights?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Did not the 1936 Act provide that there should be local contribution by the States? If so, then that dam was constructed contrary to the provisions of the 1936 act and the policy declared by that act of 1936.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. EBERHARTER. For a question.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman quoted from a statement of the President, but the gentleman's quotation would indicate that the President is opposed to the provisions in the Flood Control Act of 1938, of which the gentleman complains. The facts are that the President approved those amendments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

FLOOD CONTROL AND STATES' RIGHTS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I detain the House to say a few words respecting flood control and States' rights in view of the statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Eberharter] and in view of the address and the correspondence embraced in the address of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley] day before yesterday as they appear in the Record of Monday, January 16, 1939, beginning at page 528.

I oppose amending the Flood Control Act of 1938 to require local contribution for the construction of reservoirs. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley] advocated no such amendment and apparently he, as well as the distinguished chief executive of Vermont, Governor Aiken, is satisfied with the provision for the Federal Government paying the entire costs of reservoirs for flood control.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] advocates local contribution, and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley] pleads for an amendment to protect the alleged rights of the States.

Under the omnibus Flood Control Act of 1936 the local interests are required to furnish lands and rights-of-way for dams and reservoirs. There was an exception that reduced the local contribution, and it happens that the reductions in local contributions were applicable to Pennsylvania and New England and to no other sections of the country. A more liberal yardstick for local contribution obtained in the act of 1936 for Pennsylvania and for New England than for other areas. Whatever else may be said, the same yardstick applies under the Flood Control Act of 1938, sometimes called the Whittington bill.

The power of condemnation is not new and there is nothing novel about it. Generally, condemnation and consent are incompatible. Condemnation implies taking without consent, otherwise there could be no condemnation. Consent implies agreement. The power of eminent domain is vested in all governments—national, State, and local. Such a power is essential to their proper functioning. It is no answer to say that agreements are usually negotiated. The power is essential nevertheless.

Again, public-service corporations, including railways and utilities, are vested by all of the States in the Nation with the power to condemn. A consent is not essential. As a boy I recall a home taken, without the consent of the owner, by a railway company as a right-of-way, by eminent domain. I know of many homes condemned for rights-of-way for levees along the Mississippi River. Consent was not given. Only condemnation provided for the public work that was essential to protect the lives and property of the people.

The controversy as to States' rights properly raises the question as to whether or not a utility company in Vermont, Pennsylvania, or Mississippi, may have the power of eminent domain and that power be denied to the Federal Government in the exercise of a Federal function. To ask the question is to answer it.

I saw in the public press a few days ago where a distinguished Member of another body, Senator Austin, of Vermont, was credited with the statement that the Federal Government had never exercised the power of eminent domain without the consent of the State since 1841. The Senator evidently had in mind title 40, section 255 of the United States Code, first enacted in 1841. I quote:

No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purpose of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, navy yard, customhouse, lighthouse, or other public building of any kind whatever until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had on the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land or site may be, to such purchase, has been given.

Eminent domain was not authorized. This statute relates to purchase and purchase contemplates a voluntary agreement. My information is that the Post Office Department, and, for that matter, other departments of the Government follow the policy laid down in this statute. However, there is another statute that has been in force, certainly ever since 1888. This statute gives to the United States the power to condemn. It is title 40, section 257, and I quote:

In every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury, or any other officer of the Government has been or shall be authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building, or for other public uses, he shall be authorized to acquire the same for the United States by condemnation under judicial process whenever, in his opinion, it is necessary or advantageous to the Government to do so.

Nothing is said about consent. No consent is required. Under the Reclamation Act of June 17, 1902, title 43, section 421, the power to condemn was conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior. No consent of the State was required in reclamation projects. I am advised that in the past 35 years some 80 reservoirs have been constructed for reclamation and that some 35 are now in process in construction. No provision obtains in the law requiring the consent of the States for the construction of reclamation works.

RESERVOIR TITLES IN UNITED STATES

In all cases, as I now recall, where the Federal Government has borne the entire costs of the construction of reservoirs, the title to the reservoir is in the United States Government. This is the case in the Tennessee Valley, at Fort Peck, at Bonneville, at Grand Coulee, and at Boulder Canyon.

There is nothing new about title being vested in the United States. All public improvements made at the sole cost of the United States provide, as I recall, that the title shall be vested in the Federal Government. The title to land on which every public building and every post office is in the Federal Government. The title to all resettlement and farm security projects is in the United States; the title to forests is in the Government and in laws authorizing the enlargement of the national forests there is provision for condemnation. The consent of the States is not required.

I know of no statute providing for condemnation by the Federal Government or by a State or other legal subdivision that stipulates that such condemnation can only be exercised by consent. Consent and condemnation are incompatible.

The Secretary of War is authorized to condemn, under title 33 of section 591 of the United States Code "land and right-of-way needed to enable him to prosecute works for rivers and harbors." This statute has been in force since 1888; it was made applicable to flood control by the act of March 1, 1917, which is section 701 of title 33 of the United States Code. There is no requirement for consent in the exercise of eminent domain in river and harbor work and in flood-control work. The power to condemn has existed by statute for some 60 years. No requirement for consent obtains.

DAMS IN VERMONT

Under the National Industrial Recovery Act the President of the United States was given the power to condemn. This act provided for the Public Works Administration; it provided for the Civil Works Administration, subsequently the Works Progress Administration. Public works were authorized. River and harbor and flood-control improvements were authorized among others. The power to condemn contained no provision for consent of the States in which the projects obtained.

Many States established boards to cooperate with the Federal Government in the construction of public works. Among these was the State of Vermont. These boards were given the power to condemn and the power to transfer title to the Federal Government.

Substantially no dams for flood control have been constructed unless practically all of the costs have been paid by the Federal Government. One of the first States to take advantage of the construction of public works to provide for unemployment under the National Industrial Recovery Act was the State of Vermont. I make reference to hearings before the Committee on Flood Control, March 30 to April 19, 1938, page 312. Three dams were constructed in the State of Vermont along the Winooski River; they were begun under the National Industrial Recovery Act. The power to condemn obtained. There was no protest on the part of Vermont when the Federal Government was providing for her unemployed; there was no protest when the Federal Government was paying substantially all of the costs of construction. Dams were built at East Barre, Wrightsville, and Waterbury. There were certain channel works. The total cost to the Federal Government was $12,888,723. The cost to the local interests was $435,831. There is no more occasion for controversy now with respect to the construction of flood-control dams under the act of 1938 than there was for the construction of the three dams mentioned along the Winooski River in Vermont under the National Industrial Recovery Act and the amendments thereto. But few if any States have received more generous treatment at the hands of the Federal Government than the State of Vermont in the construction of reservoirs for flood control.

CONSENT OF STATES UNNECESSARY

Congress has the power to pass flood-control legislation on navigable streams and their tributaries, to provide for navigation, to promote interstate commerce, to provide for the national defense, and for the general welfare. The States have delegated such powers to the Congress. The exercise of the power by Congress contemplates the power to pass legislation for the execution of the works, but the discussion of the academic power to condemn is wholly unnecessary for, as I have pointed out, the United States, by many statutes, has authorized practically all agencies of the Government to condemn lands when construction is provided. The consent of the State is not necessary. The question has been passed upon by the Supreme Court. Justice Brandeis rendered the decision. I quote from the case of Arizona against California that arose in connection with the construction of Boulder Dam:

The United States has power to construct a dam across a navigable river for the purpose of improving navigation, and need not first obtain approval of its plans by the State in which the dam is to be located even though this be expressly required of it by statute of the State. (283 U. S. p. 451).

STATES' RIGHTS IN VERMONT

I have read the correspondence placed in the RECORD, as I have stated, by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley]. With deference, in my judgment, the controversy between the Governor and the Secretary of War is wholly unnecessary. A casual reading of the correspondence between the Secretary of War and the Governor of Vermont indicates that there was no occasion for the controversy. The Federal Government is ready to construct a reservoir for flood control; the funds are available; it has not sought to condemn; it has sought to acquire by purchase; it has indicated that it is agreeable to the board of public works in Vermont acquiring title and transferring it to the Government. There seems to be agreement that the State acquire and that the Federal Government, upon transfer, pay the costs of lands and easements. Governor Aiken, of Vermont, insists that a formal contract be executed. As shown by page 389 of the Record, the Secretary of War states that no formal contract is necessary and that he is ready to initiate the works under the agreement reached.

A further casual reading of the correspondence will indicate that the Governor of Vermont rather went out of his way to emphasize his opposition to the power to condemn contained in the Flood Control Act of 1938. I live in the lower Mississippi Valley. Ordinarily formal contracts between the Secretary of War and the local levee boards are not entered into. In a good many cases the Federal Government was authorized to condemn along the lower Mississippi River. In practice the local levee boards obtain title and transfer the title to the United States. Formal contracts were not necessary. If the Governor of Vermont had adopted the suggestion contained in the letter of the Secretary of War dated January 5, 1939, the controversy respecting States' rights would never have been heard of. Flood-control works would be under construction in Vermont.

For years I have advocated national flood control at Federal expense. It is my matured view that reservoirs for flood control will not be constructed unless the Federal Government underwrites the costs of construction. The policy contained in the Flood Control Act of 1938 represents the culmination of my efforts for national flood control at national expense. The bill was carefully considered. The conference report passed the House almost unanimously; there were but 4 votes in opposition.

FEDERAL CONSTRUCTION REQUIRES THE POWER TO CONDEMN

As chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, I am interested in promoting flood control in all parts of our common country. As matters now stand the Governor of Vermont is responsible for the cessation of flood-control work in that State. He requested the General Assembly of Vermont to petition Congress to direct the Secretary of War to approve the proposed contract and to repeal the power to condemn contained in the Flood Control Act of 1938.

I have already stated that there is no occasion for a contract. The Federal Government will comply with the requirements of the act of 1938. The work is under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers; he has always dealt fairly with the States. I oppose the repeal of the power to condemn. The Governor did not request that Vermont be authorized to contribute. As I have stated, if the Federal Government is to pay, the Federal Government should be protected by having the power to condemn, if necessary.

Again, in a telegram to Representative Plumley, on page 390 of the Record, the Governor of Vermont urges at ratification of the New England compacts. These compacts were negotiated under the Flood Control Act of 1936. This act has been amended. There is no occasion for the compacts under existing law. Moreover, the compacts already authorized are inapplicable to existing law. I repeat, there is no occasion for compacts under the act of 1938.

PURCHASE AND NOT CONDEMNATION THE POLICY

While the Federal Government must have the inherent power to condemn if the Federal Government is to construct, it has been the policy of the Federal Government to purchase and not to condemn. Ordinarily the Federal Government will not construct public works unless desired by the local interests. It has been the universal policy of the Corps of Engineers in river and harbor and flood-control work to cooperate with States and with local interests. It has been their policy to do no work where the local people opposed such works.

It is my view that it may be necessary to exercise the power to condemn where the benefits will be to a State in which the works are not located. Such a power is essential if the program is to be national.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment I shall be glad to yield. For years I have advocated flood control as a national problem. I have stated that reservoirs would not be constructed unless the Federal Government assumed the entire costs. When the Committee on Flood Control reported the bill to the House in 1938 it provided for the payment of 70 percent of the costs of reservoirs by the Federal Government. I opposed enlarging the Federal contribution on the floor of the House in order to protect my committee and to protect the bill, for at that time we were afraid of a veto if the Federal contribution were increased.

There were extensive hearings. Representatives from all parts of the country were heard. Among others, Governor Aiken, of Vermont, appeared. He was heard at length and his views were given careful consideration. Representatives from Oklahoma, from Texas, from Colorado were heard; in fact, advocates of flood control from Boston to Los Angeles and from Portland to Savannah appeared before the committee.

The Senate amended the bill so as to provide for the Federal Government paying the entire costs of reservoirs. The conference report agreed to the amendment. I advocated the approval of the conference report because I was advised that the bill would be approved.

The controversy precipitated by the Governor of Vermont, that will deprive Connecticut and Massachusetts and splendid cities in the lower reaches of the Connecticut River of adequate flood control that has been authorized by Congress, is most unfortunate. [Applause.]

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment I will be pleased to yield.

The Federal statute first passed in 1841 authorizing purchase by agreement and with the consent of the State had a definite purpose. The matter of States' rights was not preeminent or specially involved. Under the Federal Constitution, without the consent of the State lands purchased by agreement would not be subject to Federal jurisdiction. Congress authorized the purchase by agreement in order to provide jurisdiction. Such, however, is not the case with respect to the power of eminent domain. If the Federal agency is vested with the power of eminent domain, the consent of the State is not necessary for the exercise of Federal supervision.

I have before me the correspondence between the Secretary of War and the Governor of Vermont inserted in the Record, as I have stated, by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley]. I regret exceedingly that the controversy has arisen. It will result in delay in the construction of flood-control works; it is wholly unnecessary; a formal contract is not required.

In every instance the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers have lived up to their agreement. In every case they have complied with the Federal law. Such will continue to be their policy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Rankin). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There has been much said about States' rights. I have before me, as I have stated, the statements inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Plumley] respecting the correspondence between the War Department and the Governor of Vermont, and I may say, with all deference, there is no occasion for delay in construction. There is no occasion for controversy. The power given to condemn in the act of 1938 is the power that has been exercised or has been possessed by the Chief of Engineers for 40 years in river and harbor work. It is a power he has had since 1917 in flood-control work. It is a power that has been given to every agency of the Government that has been authorized to improve for Federal purposes from almost time immemorial, and under this power there have been constructed in the West 80 dams and reservoirs for reclamation and, possibly, in some cases for flood control. The Boulder Dam was constructed, the Parker Dam was constructed, the Bonneville Dam was constructed, and all the dams and reservoirs that have been built in the Tennessee Valley were constructed under a similar power. So there is nothing new or novel involved.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment.

There is nothing new or novel involved in the power of condemnation in the execution of flood-control projects as vested in the Corps of Engineers. It is not the policy of the Post Office Department to condemn for post-office sites. They undertake to negotiate. It is not the policy of the Bureau of Reclamation to condemn for reclamation sites.

They undertake to negotiate, but the power is vested in the Federal agency nevertheless, because there might be some individual who would undertake to obstruct and prevent the construction of a worthy project. That power remains for Federal purposes.

I respectfully submit that in the correspondence between the Governor of Vermont and the Secretary of War there should not be any delay and there is no occasion for controversy. Nothing remains except for Vermont to cooperate.

The Governor of Vermont recommended to his legislature—and I read from his address to the legislature—that the Congress of the United States be petitioned to approve the proposed contract between the State of Vermont and the Federal Government. There was no occasion for formal contracts. The Government of the United States has expended hundreds of millions of dollars over a period of years. It has been by correspondence and by agreement. Formal contracts were not executed.

I reside on the lower Mississippi River. I know something about flood-control works. The plan that has been suggested by the Secretary of War is the policy that has been pursued in flood-control works, as I have stated.

A casual reading of this correspondence indicates, with all deference, that the Governor of Vermont complained and found fault with this legislation, as does my colleague from Pennsylvania. He began talking about States' rights. He manifested a political attitude at the beginning, but Secretary Woodring, in his letter of January 5, said that he would gladly cooperate with him, that he would accept the good offices of the public works board in Vermont, that he had no desire to condemn, and that they would pay Vermont just as they had paid other agencies the reasonable value of the lands and of the flowage rights.

So as to the first recommendation of the Governor to his legislature to petition Congress to approve the contract between Vermont and the Federal Government, if such a contract were unnecessary, when Vermont under a similar statute got three dams built at a cost of $13,000,000 to the Federal Government and contributed only about $400,000, it is unnecessary now. There was identical or similar language for condemnation in the National Recovery Act. The power was not exercised then, as it is not to be exercised now.

The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers say that they stand ready to pay the reasonable value of the lands and proceed with construction.

The petition states:

Secondly, that the Congress of the United States repeal the unfair and unjust amendments to the Flood Control Act authorizing condemnation.

If the Federal Government is to pay, as was said by every Member of this body, save four, last session for the entire cost of reservoirs for flood control, I respectfully submit it is not anything but sound and just that the Federal Government should have the power to execute that program and to obtain the lands and the flowage rights necessary to enable the Government to construct those works by condemnation if unable to purchase.

As I have stated—and for the benefit of Members who have come in since I began my remarks—in a telegram inserted in the Record by the Governor of Vermont to the Representative from Vermont [Mr. Plumley] he suggested that the compacts entered into in 1937 among the New England States be ratified by the Congress. The law has been changed. Those compacts would be null and void. There is no occasion for any compact; none is necessary. There is no more occasion for compacts than for compacts to authorize Congress to construct Fort Peck Dam or Parker Dam.

Something has been said about the illegality of condemnation without the permission of the State. If the Governor of Vermont, as I have stated, will refer to Two Hundred and Eighty-third United States Reports, page 521, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered by Mr. Justice Brandeis, in the controversy between California and Arizona growing out of the construction of Boulder Dam, he will find that the Supreme Court of the United States in exact

The United States has the power to construct a dam across a navigable river-

And that means tributaries of a navigable river-for the purpose of improving navigation, and need not first obtain the approval of its plans by the State in which the dam is to be located, even though this be expressly required by a statute of the

It is unnecessary for a State to agree. As a matter of policy the Chief of Engineers executing the river and harbor and flood-control works has very seldom, if ever, exercised the power of eminent domain, but he has had the power, and he has the power. If the Federal Government is to pay the cost, as every Member of this body save four said it should pay the cost, then it must follow that the Government of the United States should protect itself by having the power to condemn in the event of not being able to purchase.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Did the Flood Control Committee of the House when it reported the 1938 bill have in it a provision that the Federal Government should pay the entire cost?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman listened to what I said he would know that that bill was reported to the House providing that the Federal Government should pay 70 percent of the cost of reservoirs. The Senate amended it and said that if we are authorized to pay 70 percent there is no reason why we should not pay 100 percent.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman has referred to the correspondence between the Governor of Vermont and the Secretary of War which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUM-LEY | placed in the RECORD, I believe, Monday. Is it the opinion of the gentleman from reading that correspondence that there has been any arbitrary exercise of the control given to the Secretary of War in the 1938 act, as evidenced by that correspondence?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think a casual reading would be a complete answer to that statement. There never has been a suggestion that the Federal Government wanted to condemn. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers have never said a thing on earth except that they were ready to pay the reasonable values of the land, and they offered to let the Board of Public Works of Vermont undertake to cooperate and secure those values and reimburse them for it.

Mr. HEALEY. And to use the agencies of the State itself in acquiring the land.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely. There has been no question about invading the rights of Vermont.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am interested in whether the gentleman is attempting to prove, because there has been no violation of a principle, that there is no principle involved. Does the gentleman attempt to ridicule five Governors of the New England States because they do actually say a principle is involved? Is there not a principle involved?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have not ridiculed anybody. I have stated the facts with reference to the United States having the power to condemn. I have said that since 1888 the Federal Government has had the power to condemn under title 33, section 591, for river and harbor works. It has the power to condemn for flood-control works, and it has the power to condemn without the consent of the State in that case or any other case for public works. Thirty-five dams are now being constructed and 80 have already been built under power to condemn without the consent of the State for reclamation purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman be granted 5 minutes more, because I want to ask him some questions.

Mr. GIFFORD. There is no lack of suspicion that there is something more than flood control in the matter, something behind it as the gentleman knows. The gentleman has not touched that subject. The gentleman has heard of a power project following as a consequence.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Oh, yes; I have heard more talk and seen less power in New England than almost any other part of the country. You have more politics and less power along the river where the proposed dam is to be constructed than along other rivers in the United States.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will you let me inject something more?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But I want to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GIFFORD. This may seem to the gentleman foolish, but one man said to the other he had the homeliest wife in the world, and the man licked him for it, and then somebody suggested, "Why, you have no wife, anway; why did you do it?" "I did it for the principle of the thing." [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I never talk about another man's wife. [Laughter.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows how tremendously interested in flood control I am. I deeply appreciate the courteous hearing he gave me at various times. I feel if we do not have it in my district—the Merrimack Valley-we will lose the industries we now have, and no new industries will come there. Will the gentleman answer me. as an engineering fact, is it not true that if dams are built for power there is much less flood control? We all read in the papers about a dam in the West that was built for power, and they had a flood, and as the dam was full, the floodwaters flowed over and flooded the whole territory.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If there is to be a dam for both power and flood control, it will be generally a much more expensive dam than a dam for flood control alone.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And also you do not get the protection from floods if you have power there?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If you use the same reservoir for both purposes, that is true. In order to have flood control you must have an empty reservoir. If you provide for power. you will have to have a pool, or constant head, and additional storage for floodwaters.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will work out some plan.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. When they build a dam where it is possible to generate power they always design the dam so that the power may be generated and yet the biggest flood taken care of also?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In the Flood Control Act that we passed in 1938 with only four votes in opposition we made just such provision.

Mr. RAYBURN. Exactly. Now, another thing which I direct to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford], is not New England really a strange place for the doctrine of States' rights to be propounded? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say in answer to that question that the State of Mississippi, honoring Jefferson Davis as it does, stands for States' rights as much as any State in the Union, but I undertake to say further that we do not stand for States' rights in the guise of obstructing necessary public improvements for political purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman mentions political purposes, but is it not a fact that in the New England compact, the compact was approved by the four New England legislatures and four New England Governors, both Democratic and Republican?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is ancient history, so to speak. Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. No; it is only recent history.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have answered the question. I say that is ancient history as far as that compact is concerned, because that compact was negotiated under the act of 1936, and that act has been amended as to local contribution, and the compacts are no longer applicable.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the gentleman himself opposed the amendment last year?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will be glad to answer you. I have nothing to conceal. I protected the bill as it was reported by my committee. In making that report I got the very best concession possible from the administration. I stated on the floor of the House, and I stated repeatedly in other parts of the country, that I stood for national flood control at national expense, and the first time we got reservoirs at Federal expense I embraced it. I cooperated with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] and others who introduced such bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I will ask the distinguished chairman of the Flood Control Committee if last year, when we were considering this bill, we did not haggle for days over the amount of contribution which the Government would make, seeking to raise it to the highest possible amount?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Without undertaking to disclose the deliberations of the committee, I answer the gentleman by saying that we reported the most liberal bill that we thought would secure approval at the time we reported it.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. ELLIS. There has been much said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Vermont about amendments. Is it not true that the President did approve those amendments last year?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. He signed the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. And is it not true that he did approve them before they went into the bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am not authorized to say. He signed the bill afterward. I understood they were satisfactory to him.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does not the gentleman feel that if we are to have a real, effective national program of flood control, in view of the fact that dams are frequently built in one section for the protection of other sections, it is absolutely essential, from a national standpoint, that we have a program such as the gentleman has been advocating, so that you have in the Federal agency an opportunity to prosecute a consistent program for the benefit of the maximum number of people?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The dams to be constructed in Vermont are for the benefit of Massachusetts and Connecticut. Without this power there might not be an opportunity for the Federal Government to exercise that function. Human nature is very much the same everywhere. The county that is far up the stream has got to sacrifice in order to protect the counties farther down. The power of eminent domain is absolutely imperative if flood-control reservoirs are to be constructed, because, even as between and among counties, there will not be consent by the counties in the upper stretches of the stream for the protection of the counties below. The State must have the power of eminent domain, and so must the Federal Government.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I may advise the gentleman at this time, particularly in view of the specific controversy, that if Vermont does not want the money the Federal Government offers them for control, the Nineteenth District of California would appreciate it, or any portion the people of Vermont do not want.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The controversy is just this: The Governor of the State of Vermont says, as shown by this record, "I want you to sign a contract." The Secretary of War says, "Here is your money. It is not necessary to sign a contract. Here is your money. I am ready to go to work." But the Governor refuses to cooperate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I tell my colleague that we would gladly take the money without requiring the Government to sign a contract.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman is familiar with every flood-control project in the Nation. As long as the subject of power has come up, I would like to know whether or not the gentleman is familiar with surveys made by the United States Army engineers and by Pennsylvania experts indicating that there is no possibility of any development of a plan which would generate hydroelectric power in the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have not discussed power, but have discussed flood control. There should not be any conflict. I am talking about the Flood Control Act of 1938. The projects were authorized primarily for flood control. I am saying that I oppose the amendment by the gentleman this afternoon requiring local contributions for reservoirs. I am saying that if the gentleman's proposition were to be approved by Congress there would never be any reservoirs for flood control. I oppose the proposition advanced by the gentleman.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Is it not true that under the act of 1936 and others dealing with flood control, in the western part of the State of Pennsylvania a number of dams were under construction?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I stated that Pennsylvania was one of the exceptions, that there the costs of the lands and damages far exceeded the cost of the dam itself. The gentleman will recall that there was a smaller proportion of local contribution in his State than in many of the others, except in New England. So we decided to modify the act and provide for the construction of flood-control reservoirs at Federal expense, making the same yardstick apply to all.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am in an unfortunate situation, for there is no reservoir in our own State of Massachusetts that can in any way assist us in flood control of the Merrimack River. I have the second largest district in the State. In the last 2 years we have had two major floods, two freshets, and high water every single month. My people have suffered terribly, and it seems they will continue to suffer because the States of Vermont and New Hampshire and the Federal Government cannot get together. It seems so unfair that we have to be penalized because the other States will not go along. It is absolutely cruel for the administration to withhold from us money for flood protection because these States and the administration cannot get together as to power and other rights.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will gladly answer the gentlewoman's question. The act of 1938 providing that the Federal Government pay the entire cost of the reservoirs was not approved by the President until after the Congress adjourned. The great flood came along in the fall of 1938. Necessarily there had been no appropriation. My information is, however, that the President set aside something like $11,000,000 or $13,000,000, largely out of relief and emergency funds, to provide for the local protective works and to begin the construction of reservoirs along the tributaries of the Connecticut and the Merrimack Rivers. My further information is that the procedure was adopted that had been adopted for the construction of other dams and reservoirs by the Corps of Engineers in other places and just as the Corps of Engineers had been proceeding for 40 years under the power to condemn.

I answer by saying that the President of the United States went out of his way to provide $11,000,000—perhaps $13,-000,000—in order to protect the people of Massachusetts and New England. In all sincerity, there is no good reason, in my judgment, for the controversy to have arisen, because the State of Vermont—and I now read from the record—the State of Vermont contributed $435,831, and the Federal Government contributed $12,888,723 for the construction of three reservoirs under the National Industrial Recovery Act and amendments thereto, and the act contained substantially the same provisions that Congress laid down in the Flood Control Act of 1938.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I put the question in another way, because that really does not answer the question?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It may not to suit the gentlewoman, but it does give the facts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts It does not give me all the information I ask. May I ask, does not the gentleman feel we should have local flood protection, if we cannot get the reservoirs? The gentleman realizes I am absolutely helpless to do anything under the circumstances.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think all the dams and other protective works in Massachusetts should be constructed.

Mr. HEALEY. The Federal Government is now ready to pursue a permanent policy in reference to flood control for all the New England States and it has made provision for that?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It passed the law and the money is available. Only the cooperation of Vermont and other States is needed. The Federal Government has done its part.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman injects politics into this matter. We of New England do not feel it is a political matter. May I inform the gentleman that the senior Senator from Massachusetts, and the only Democratic Senator, has opposed this provision and is seeking an amendment to the 1938 Flood Control Act?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I trust the Senator will be able to agree with the views I advocate. I have not injected politics. I urge flood protection and I insist that politics be eliminated.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, apropos of the House leader's suggestion, it is so strange that his State should be pleading for State rights. The strangeness of it all is the total abandonment of every one of those States that formerly looked after their State rights.

Mr. RAYBURN. Not all of them.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Mississippi gave a very complete answer with reference to our stand in State rights. We stood for that as long as there was any reason to, and we stand for it today when it does not stand in the way of progress and the doing of things that ought to be done.

Mr. GIFFORD. My statement stands.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Whittington] with interest and appreciation. I wish to congratulate him on his able discussion of the question of State's rights in connection with Federal flood-control and similar projects.

What he has said applies well to some current opposition to construction of a dam on Red River in Oklahoma and Texas which the Congress authorized last year, a part of which will be in the district I represent and a part in the district of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the able majority leader of the House.

Last week the new Governor of Oklahoma, Hon. Leon C. Phillips, devoted a large part of his inaugural address to opposition to this proposed dam near Denison, Tex., and Durant, Okla. He has evidently been greatly misinformed. I had expected to make some remarks on this subject in the House and discuss that part of Governor Phillips' address referring to the Red River Dam, but the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Whittington] has answered my Governor's arguments completely, and I thank him very much.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that the policy adopted in the Flood Control Act of 1938 provides for the construction of the reservoirs authorized in that act. No reservoirs for flood control, except the few in Vermont and other States where there were substantially no local contributions, and except proposed reservoirs protecting the wealthy city of Pittsburgh, have been constructed in any part of the country. Such reservoirs will not be constructed unless the Federal Government pays the cost. The local interests in one State or in one county will not construct reservoirs that will protect people and property in another State or in another county. If the United States is to pay the costs of reservoirs for flood control the Treasury of the United States should be protected by giving to the Secretary of War the power to condemn. Under the terms of the act of 1938 the Chief of Engineers is authorized to select the reservoirs for the several basins. If reservoirs are not desired in any State they will not be constructed. In the future as in the past wherever possible purchase and not condemnation will obtain, but the power of condemnation will aid the power of purchase. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF MONETARY POWERS UNTIL JANUARY 15, 1941

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, January 19, 1939.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,

President of the United States Senate.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: The powers conferred by section 10 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, as amended, dealing with the stabilization fund, and the powers specified in paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933, as amended, relating to the fixing of the metallic content of the dollar, will expire on June 30, 1939.

The existence of these powers has enabled us to safeguard the Nation's interests and to carry forward international monetary and economic cooperation. It is obvious, however, that the international monetary and economic situation is still such that it would not be safe to permit such powers to be terminated. I believe the sound and wise policy to pursue under the circumstances is to extend these powers until January 15, 1941.

The Secretary of the Treasury and other representatives of the Treasury Department will be available to discuss with the appropriate committees of Congress the problems relating to such legislation.

Very truly yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

REMOVAL OF TAX-EXEMPTION PRIVILEGE FROM GOVERNMENTAL SECURITIES AND SALARIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my message of April 25, 1938, I urged that the time had come when the Congress should exercise its constitutional power to tax income from whatever source derived. I urged that the time had come when private income should not be exempt either from Federal or State income tax simply because such private income is derived as interest from Federal, State, or municipal obligations or because it is received as compensation for services rendered to the Federal, State, or municipal governments.

A fair and effective progressive income tax and a huge perpetual reserve of tax-exempt bonds could not exist side by side. Those who earn their livelihood from government should bear the same tax burden as those who earn their livelihood in private employment.

The tax immunities heretofore accorded to private income derived from Government securities or Government employment are not inexorable requirements of the Constitution but are the result of judicial decision. I repeat that it is not unreasonable to hope that judicial decision would permit the elimination of these immunities.

Decisions of the Supreme Court rendered since my message, particularly the decision in the Port of New York Authority case, have made an important and constructive contribution to the elimination of these inequitable immunities.

It is obvious, however, that these inequities cannot be satisfactorily corrected by judicial decisions alone. Without legislation to supplement them, many individuals and corporations will be subjected to tax liabilities for income received in past years which they mistakenly, but in good faith, believed to be tax-exempt. It is evident, for example, that employees of many State agencies as well as the holders of securities of public corporations believed that the income they received from such sources was tax-exempt, in view of the opinions of eminent counsel based upon earlier decisions of the Supreme Court. In the interest of equity and justice, therefore, immediate legislation is required to prevent recent judicial decisions from operating in such a retroactive fashion as to impose tax liability on these innocent employees and investors for salaries heretofore earned or on income derived from securities heretofore issued.

In the light of those decisions there are, among the taxpayers of the Nation, inevitable uncertainties respecting their tax liabilities. There is uncertainty whether the salaries which they receive are not taxable under the existing provisions of the revenue acts; there is uncertainty whether the interest which they receive upon the obligations of governmental instrumentalities is similarly not taxable; and there is an uncertainty whether the salaries and interest which they have received for past years will create an unanticipated source of tax liabilities and penalties.

In view of the fact that the Bureau of Internal Revenue will have no choice but to enforce our income-tax law as declared in the latest decisions of the Supreme Court, prompt legislation is necessary to safeguard against the inequities to which I have referred. The need, therefore, is for the prompt enactment of equitable rules, prospective in operation, which the Bureau can apply and taxpayers can observe without that mass of litigation which otherwise is to be anticipated. We are confronted with a situation which can be handled with fairness to all and with reasonable administrative convenience only through the cooperation of the Congress and the courts.

Unless the Congress passes some legislation dealing with this situation prior to March 15, I am informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that he will be obliged to collect back taxes for at least 3 years upon the employees of many State agencies and upon the security holders of many State corporate instrumentalities, who mistakenly but in good faith believed they were tax-exempt. The assessment and collection of these taxes will doubtlessly in many instances produce great hardship.

Accordingly I recommend legislation to correct the existing inequitable situation, and at the same time to make private income from all Government salaries hereafter earned and from all Government securities hereafter issued subject to the general income-tax laws of the Nation and of the several States. It is difficult for almost all citizens to understand why a constitutional provision permitting taxes on "income from whatever source derived" does not mean "from whatever source derived."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1939.

Hon. Robert F. Wagner, United States Senate:

Any reduction in Federal relief appropriations which would require the dropping of needy unemployed persons from the Works Progress Administration rolls more rapidly than they can be absorbed by industry would, in my opinion, inevitably impose on the State of New York and its municipalities an additional burden which they could not possibly carry the State of New York and 165 arry.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., January 12, 1939.

United States Senator Frank Maloney, Washington, D. C.: Washington, D. C.:

Earnestly urge you support present proposal of eight hundred and seventy-five million for W. P. A. New Haven has no money on hand or in 1939 budget to meet increased relief costs that committee proposal of seven hundred and twenty-five millions will compel if adopted.

JOHN W. MURPHY, Mayor of New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., January 19, 1939.

Senator Francis Maloney:

I again respectfully urge your support of eight hundred and seventy-five millions W. P. A. appropriation. Reduction to seven hundred and twenty-five millions will put many now on W. P. A. back on direct relief and thus add to tax burden of real-estate owners, many of whom are poor people.

JOHN W. MURPHY, Mayor, New Haven, Conn.

FLOOD CONTROL IN THE STATES

Mr. MALONEY. I further present and ask unanimous consent to have appropriately referred and published in the RECORD as part of my remarks a telegram which I have received from the several Governors of the New England States and another separate telegram from the Governor of Vermont. Hon. George D. Aiken, relating to flood control, and a copy of my reply thereto.

There being no objection, the telegrams and letter were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON MASS., January 14, 1939.

Senator Francis T. MALONEY:

We urge the Federal Government to cooperate immediately with the New England States to accomplish flood control without de-manding the complete surrender to the Federal Government of basic rights which belong to the people in the States.

We believe that the natural resources of all the States belong to the people therein and that they should not be taken away without the consent of the States, acting through the duly chosen representatives of the people.

Gov. George D. Aiken, Montpelier, Vt.

Gov. Francis P. Murphy, Concord, N. H.

Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin, Hartford, Conn.

Gov. Levier Saltonstall, Boston, Mass.

Gov. Lewis O. Barrows, Augusta, Maine.

GOV. WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT, Providence, R. I.

MONTPELIER. VT., January 14, 1939.

Montpelier, Vt., January 14, 1939.

Senator Francis T. Maloney,

Washington, D. C.:

I have been informed that the President has stated that if Vermont doesn't want any dams Vermont doesn't have to have them. I hope the President is not trying to becloud the real issue. It is not flood-control dams we oppose. It is surrendering of State sovereignty and resources to the Federal Government as a price for building these dams that we object to. As evidence of this, I am urging the New England congressional delegation to press for ratification of the New England flood-control compacts immediately and to amend the 1938 flood-control law by restoring to all the States the same rights they held previous to its enactment. States the same rights they held previous to its enactment.

GEORGE D. AIKEN. Governor of Vermont.

JANUARY 17, 1939.

His Excellency George D. Aiken,

The Governor, Montpelier, Vt.

My Dear Governor Aiken: Please let me acknowledge receipt of your telegram of January 14 referring to the recent statement accredited to President Roosevett concerning dams in Vermont.

I do not believe that the President is trying to becloud the issue, but on Savely of the english that he is revermed with but am firmly of the opinion that he is very much concerned with the building of flood-control dams in New England, and I am confident that so long as there is evidence of cooperation on our part, we may expect the cooperation of President Roosevelt and his administration.

A part of your telegram advises me that you are urging the New England congressional delegation to press for ratification of the New England flood-control compact immediately and "to amend the 1938 flood-control law by restoring to all the States the same rights they held previous to its enactment."

While I joined in submitting the original flood-control compact, and regret that it failed to receive consideration, I want to look at the matter realistically, and with the desire of bringing about flood control at the earliest possible moment.

It is my opinion that there is not the slightest possibility of getting approval of the compact at this time, and I entertain no hope of the approval of that kind of compact in the future. That being so, it seems to me that a probably futile effort should be abandoned, with the thought in mind that flood control is of paramount importance, and should be attained under the best possible circumstances.

circumstances.

I am as anxious as you are that States' rights be preserved and protected, but I am not blind to the fact that changing conditions and a changing public desire, necessarily bring about a change in governmental policy and practice. We cannot neglect the protection of the lives and health and property of the people of New England or ignore a course that has been determined by the Congress and will probably endure.

When I lent my efforts toward the approval of the original compact, I did so upon the understanding that the primary concern of the authors and sponsors of the pact was to provide adequate protection of the people of New England against floods. In the last session of Congress it seemed to me that the differences arose through an honest disagreement as to the best method of achiev-

I regret that I am forced to conclude that the seemingly irreconcliable attitude reflected in your recent statements indicates that this primary objective seems in danger of being abandoned. It will be most unfortunate if action on this important public queswill be most unfortunate if action on this important public question should be impeded by considerations of private power problems. You know full well my attitude in this respect. I have never sponsored and never will sponsor the preservation of private control of national resources as a social objective.

At this time, deeply conscious that the emergency with respect to floods requires an immediate understanding between the States of New England and the National Government, I feel I would be unresponsive to the pressing needs of the people of my State if I joined with you in an uncompromising stand. I do not recognize that any academic adherence to the rights of individual States, as against the extension of a national program, should be insisted upon where danger to the lives, health, and property of individual citizens may be involved. citizens may be involved.

citizens may be involved.

In my opinion the time has come for action, and it seems clear that the National Government must take the lead. I am confident that the real interests of the citizens of New England can best be served by working out a program for such action, and I shall support any reasonable plan. In any case, you may be certain that I shall not sacrifice protection against floods for a preservation of private control over power sites.

I am sure that you will continue your approach to a solution of the matter in a spirit of compromise. I still feel that the difficulties can be overcome without sacrifice on the part of the people of Vermont or the other New England States, and I suggest that the Governors of New England, all of whom have wired to me, seek a conference with the authorities here in a further effort to bring conference with the authorities here in a further effort to bring about a satisfactory agreement.

May I respectfully call your attention to the fact that funds now available might not be available a little later. Unless we do come to an agreement and get flood-control work under way before the close of this fiscal year, we may sacrifice an existing opportunity and at the same time subject the people of our States to further flood dangers.

My State is in greater danger from floods than the State of which you are chief executive, and I am sure that you believe that I am tremendously concerned with the subject which is now having your attention.

If you think well of my suggestion that an effort be made to arrange a conference with the Washington authorities, please feel certain of my cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS MALONEY, United States Senate.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE-NAVAL BILLS INTRODUCED

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I introduce several bills for appropriate reference. Three of the bills are introduced at the request of the Navy Department and relate to the administration policy for the national defense. I ask that a brief memorandum explanatory of the naval bills be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bills will be received and appropriately referred, and the memorandum of the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the

The bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

S. 828. A bill to permit the President to acquire and convert, as well as to construct, certain auxiliary vessels for the

S. 829. A bill to authorize alterations and repairs to certain naval vessels, and for other purposes; and

S. 830. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes.

The explanatory memorandum presented by Mr. Walsh is as follows:

MEMORANDUM EXPLANATORY OF NAVAL BILLS

A bill to authorize the President to acquire and convert, as 1. A bill to authorize the Fresident to acquire and convert, as well as construct, certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy. The last Congress authorized the construction of a considerable number of auxiliary vessels for the Navy, which consisted of oil tankers, de-stroyer tenders, aviation tenders, seaplane tenders, mine sweepers, submarine tenders, and fleet tugs.

This bill will permit the President to purchase vessels and convert This bill will permit the President to purchase vessels and convert them into auxiliary vessels for the Navy, as well as to construct new vessels when proper appropriations are made. It does not authorize any additional vessels for the Navy. It is represented that $1,500,000 can be saved by purchasing for the Navy an oil tanker already under construction by the Maritime Commission for the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey. The enactment of this bill will enable the Navy to obtain an additional high-speed tanker in the shortest results. obtain an additional high-speed tanker in the shortest possible time.

2. A bill authorizing modernization of three submarines—the Argonaut, Narwhal, and Nautilus—at an estimated cost of $5,500,-000. The military value of these vessels has been seriously reduced by defects in their main propelling plants. These vessels are powered with German type Diesel engines built at the Navy Yard, New York. They are defective in speed and severe crankcase explosions have occurred on all three vessels, a casualty seemingly inherent in the design and which resulted in the loss by fire of the Fulton.

Senator Walsh stated that the Navy Department is of the opinion that the reengining and modernization of these vessels will greatly increase their value to the Navy by enabling them to maintain speeds necessary for operations with the fleet. These vessels have excellent sea-keeping qualities, carry a large number of mines and torpedoes, and have a long radius of action.

3. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to develop or increase naval aviation facilities, including authority to purchase or otherwise acquire land and to construct buildings and accessories at or in the vicinity of the following places: Kaneohe Bay; Midway Island; Wake Island; Johnston Island; Palmyra Island; Kodiak, Alaska; Sitka, Alaska; San Juan, P. R.; Pensacola, Fla.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Pearl Harbor, T. H.; and Guam.

These air bases constitute a selected number from the so-called Hepburn board report to the Congress on the needs and location of air, submarine destroyer, and mine bases. The total estimated cost is $65,000,000. The Hepburn Board recommended the acquisition of or major improvements to 41 naval bases, and this bill, as submitted by the Navy, falls far short of the recommendations con-submitted by the Navy, falls far short of the recommendations con-tained in the Hepburn report.

PREVENTION OF AND PUNISHMENT FOR LYNCHING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and myself I introduce a bill for appropriate reference, and ask that an explanatory joint statement of the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 845) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and to prevent the crime of lynching, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint statement of Mr. WAGNER, Mr. VAN NUYS, and Mr. CAPPER is as follows:

JOINT STATEMENT OF SENATORS WAGNER, VAN NUYS, AND CAPPER UPON INTRODUCTION OF FEDERAL ANTILYNCHING BILL

The year 1938 witnessed a repetition of a familiar pattern in the tragic history of lynching in the United States. During the first 6 months, when the Wagner-Van Nuys-Gavagan antilynching bill was pending in Congress and was being vigorously pressed, not a single lynching stained the record. During the second half of the year, and beginning promptly after the adjournment of Congress, seven hypothesis against the second half of the year. lynchings occurred in rapid succession. Although more than 1,000 persons participated in the lynching mobs, there has not been a single conviction, prosecution, or even an arrest. If the threat of a Federal antilynching bill is sufficient to put a temporary halt to lynching, that is the very best argument for a permanent Federal antilynching law.

The introduction of the antilynching bill at this time is the open-ing gun in the renewal of the fight to write such legislation into the ing gun in the renewal of the fight to write such legislation into the statute books. The fight must go on until carried to a successful conclusion. We cannot stop until lynching stops.

The bill we have just introduced follows closely the pattern of the Wagner-Van Nuys-Gavagan bill which was pending in the last Congress. State officers, guilty of neglecting or refusing to use all diligence in the protection of persons from lynching mobs, are subject to criminal prosecution. In addition, the governmental subdivisions in which such lynchings occur are subject to civil suits for damages in the Federal courts. Whenever a lynching occurs and information of violation of this law is submitted under oath to the Attorney General, the Attorney General of the United States is required to institute an investigation.

The bill differs from that considered in the last Congress in two institute an investigation.

The bill differs from that considered in the last Congress in two respects. First, it eliminates the exception of "gangster killings" from the definition of lynching. This exemption was not included in the bill as originally introduced, and its sponsors were pledged during the last Congress to strike out this exemption when the bill reached a vote on the Senate floor.

The second point of difference involves the issue of proof of liability in civil suits for damages. The bill last year imposed upon the county the burden of proving that its officers had exercised all due diligence to prevent the lynching in question. The new bill eliminates this provision, so that the burden of proving negligence is at all times on the party bringing suit. The bill declares, however, that a showing of failure to provide protection under certain circumstances, such as after knowledge or general apprehension of danger of mob violence, shall be prima facie evidence of liability. liability.

Inability.

In recent months the course of world affairs has focused the attention of our people as never before on the fundamentals of democratic government. The antilynching bill goes beyond any considerations of party; it transcends the urgent needs of any one race or any one section. The bill embraces those principles of humanity and justice which underlie the establishment of representative government among free men. If America is to vindicate its proud position as the foremost example of a functioning democracy, it must stamp out for all time the spirit of the lawless mob. It can and will be done. It can and will be done.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Finance was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 473) for the relief of George Francis Burke, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. MINTON, the Committee on Finance was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 556) for the relief of Catherine Humler, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT

Mr. VANDENBERG. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The resolution (S. Res. 62) was read, as follows:

Whereas the Federal Power Commission reported on January 3, 1934, that the tidal power project at Passamaquoddy was unsound and unjustified; (1) because it will cost approximately $40,000,000 while a comparable steam-generating plant would cost only $16,000,000; (2) because the steam-electric power would be cheaper at the higher-load factors; (3) because Quoddy power could not compete with steam-power rates in export; (4) and because there is no present or prospective market for Quoddy power at any price: and

Whereas the Congress has been asked to resume its considera-tion of the Passamaquoddy project: Therefore be it Resolved, That the Federal Power Commission is requested to review its previous reports upon this project and bring them down to date; and to report to the Senate as soon as possible (1) the relative costs of steam-generated or tidal-generated power plants at Passamaquoddy; (2) the relative costs of power to the consumer; and (3) whether there is either a local or export market for power thus generated by either method.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Commerce Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I inquire whether legislation on this subject heretofore has come from the Commerce Committee or the Interstate Commerce Committee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Commerce Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised by the clerk that it has been before the Commerce Committee.

Is there objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Commerce? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be so referred.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. VANDENBERG. I submit another resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The resolution (S. Res. 63) was read, as follows:

Whereas the Department of the Interior reported on August 26, "there appears to be no reasonable doubt that serious adverse effects will be produced upon the important underground water supplies of the Ocala limestone in a wide zone extending outward from the canal line by the construction of a sea-level (Florida) canal"; and

Whereas the United States Geological Survey asserted on December 15, 1936, that it "knows no facts that require modification of the opinions it has heretofore expressed about the possible effects on ground-water levels in Florida" of the construction of such a canal; and

Whereas this phase of the Florida ship canal problem is of deep concern to many citizens, and of primary interest to the Congress in connection with any further study of this project: Therefore

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to report to the Senate at his earliest convenience the present opinion of the United States Geological Survey regarding the probable effect of the construction of the Florida canal, as reprojected, upon ground-water levels and ground-water supplies in any affected area.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Commerce Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I did not catch one expression, about whose opinion is asked for.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The opinion of the United States Geological Survey.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on

Mr. VANDENBERG. I submit one further resolution which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The resolution (S. Res. 64) was read, as follows:

Whereas the Department of Commerce made an exhaustive and whereas the Department of Commerce made an exhaustive and voluminous report upon the proposed Florida ship canal in 1934 and found that "the consensus of opinion of that part of the shipping industry with which contact has been established appears to be that the probable cost of building the projected waterway is not justified through any benefits which might thereby accrue to the cargo or the vessel"; and

Whereas the Congress is again asked to consider this project:

Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce is requested to survey its previous findings respecting the Florida ship canal and bring them down to date and to report thereon to the Senate at its earliest convenience.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Commerce Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Constitution provides that each State shall have two Senators in the United States Senate. Florida has availed itself of that provision of the Constitution, and has sent to this body two Senators who are endeavoring to represent the people of Florida in respect to their local affairs. So I am somewhat chagrined to have my friend the Senator from Michigan take upon his competent shoulders the representation of the people of Florida about their local water supply, along with the people of Grateful as we are for the contribution the Senator makes to things which affect the general public weal, we are getting along fairly well in Florida. My colleague [Mr. ANDREWS] and I are for the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal, and we have been elected in the State of Florida. So, on matters pertaining to the internal welfare of that State, we shall appreciate it if we may be given an opportunity to protect the interests of our citizenry to the best of our ability.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. PEPPER I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire fully to acknowledge the great capacity of Florida's representation in the Senate, and to disclaim any purpose to supersede it by way of spokesmanship for Florida; but inasmuch as the State of Florida is asking for upward of $200,000,000 in connection with this project, for which my State of Michigan has to pay at least to the tune of $10,000,000, I shall continue to exercise at least $10,000,000 worth of interest in what Florida is undertaking to do. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I know of no Senator more capable of asserting at least $10,000,000 worth of interest in this matter than the Senator from Michigan, because it has had a particular appeal to the interest of the Senator from Michigan ever since it has been before the Congress.

I know not what it is about Florida that has such great attraction for my friend the Senator from Michigan, but I know at least that he placed a degree of emphasis on the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal which is at least very flattering to the ego of Florida. So I will not question the Senator's right to interest himself in the expenditure of Federal money, and I did not address my remarks to that portion of the Senator's comment. But it is not the first time that our friend from Michigan has interested himself in the effect which the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal would have on the water supply of Florida. I was a candidate for election in Florida in May and November of last year, and I stated publicly and unequivocally my support of the Florida ship canal. So it is only the interest of the Senator in our internal water supply, unless his geological knowledge is greater than I think it is, to which I object.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Gladly.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator from Florida raise any objection to the propriety of asking at this time that the various departments of government which heretofore have declared that the Florida ship canal was neither feasible nor proper should bring their reports down to date? That was all that was embodied in the request of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer the query of the Senator from Nebraska in this way: I recall that when this project was before the Congress the last time, at least before this body, it came here in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary for a river and harbor project. But I know that that unusual procedure has long since been departed from in respect to this project, and that in the last Congress, pursuant to a resolution passed in 1932, there was filed through the agency of the Secretary of War, from the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, with the Speaker of the House of Representatives, a favorable recommendation of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal.

Based upon that report, which was identical, so far as procedure was concerned, with the report which accompanies every other river and harbor project, the regular committee of the House of Representatives, the Rivers and Harbors Committee, undertook an open and public hearing, as the result of which not an irregular body, but the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, favorably reported to the House of Representatives the bill providing for the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal.

Mr. President, everything, therefore, is in order in the consideration of that matter, the same as when any other river and harbor project is considered. I shall ask only that this project in the future receive the usual and the regular and the proper consideration which any other river and harbor project would receive from the engineers and from the Congress of the United States, and only that.

The Committee on Commerce of the Senate now has the President's recommendation before it. I ask only such privileges, and willingly accept such liability, for this project as will attach to the usual river and harbor project which comes before Congress.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the Senator has not answered my question, as to whether he was opposed to asking the Department of Commerce, in the first instance—

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is transacting routine business by unanimous consent, and the order now is the presentation of resolutions.

NOMINATION OF HARRY L. HOPKINS TO BE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to state that by direction of the Committee on Commerce, and under authority of the order of the Senate of the 17th instant, I filed on yesterday with the Secretary of the Senate a favorable report on the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins, of New York, to be Secretary of Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the nomination reported by the Senator from Texas.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins to be Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in taking up the nomination of the Honorable Harry L. Hopkins to be Secretary of Commerce, I desire to say in the beginning that I accord to any President of the United States, regardless of party, the maximum latitude in choosing his own advisers, in other words, his Cabinet, and I accord to the present President of the United States that degree of latitude. At the outset I wish to say that I shall discuss Mr. Hopkins as a nominee for a Cabinet office, and not as an individual. I think the policies of Mr. Hopkins as Administrator of the Works Progress Administration are proper matters for consideration by this body.

Mr. Hopkins has been a conspicuous member of this administration for several years. As head of the Works Progress Administration he has been at the head of the largest spending agency this Government has ever had in times of peace, and, so far as my reading of history goes, the largest spending agency ever known in peacetimes in any nation.

For the last 2 or 3 years there have been increasing complaints about and criticism of the W. P. A. and its administration. Those complaints became so numerous, and were apparently so well founded, that the Senate of the Seventy-fifth Congress authorized a committee to investigate, among other things, rumors and reports about the W. P. A. That committee was headed by the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard], whose integrity, earnestness, and fairness have never been and I do not think ever could be questioned. I may say the same for his colleagues on the committee, three of whom were Democrats, from the other side, and one a Republican, from this side.

In discussing this matter this afternoon I shall not rely upon rumor, I shall repeat no gossip, I shall indulge in no personal questions. I shall call as witnesses only those distinguished Senators who were members of the committee to which I have referred, and who fairly and industriously and earnestly investigated the reports which I have mentioned.

At the beginning of its work the committee, known as the Sheppard committee, made two statements, which I desire to read to the Senate. They are very clear statements of a sound public policy, a policy so important that I think it goes to the very foundation of the Republic. I read now the statement of the committee to be found on page 3 of part 1 of its report. The committee stated its objective in this language:

The objective is simple and clear—the maintenance of the integrity of the elective processes, the preservation of democracy at its most vital point, the ballot box, the free exercise of the voting franchise, and to that end the prevention of any improper use of money and of any coercion or intimidation by any person, group, or agency, outside or inside the Government.

The statement I am now going to read was made by the committee on the 17th of June of last year. It further said:

The committee likewise gives warning that all governmental agencies must keep clear of all primary and election campaigns—must keep their hands off. Any other course, in the judgment of the committee, would amount in reality to the use of Federal funds to influence votes, and under the terms of the Senate resolutions would require investigation and censure, and is to be exposed, condemned, and prevented insofar as it is within the power of this committee to do so.

In connection with those two statements, in which I concur and with which I most heartily agree, the committee defined those things which it would regard as offenses against the law. Beginning on page 3 and continuing on to page 4 of the report of the committee is found this language:

Solicitation or assessment of Federal officials and employees either by Federal officials and employees or others for contributions in behalf of a senatorial candidate; * * * intimidation or coercion by Federal officials and employees or others in behalf of a senatorial candidate; use of funds appropriated by Congress in behalf of a senatorial candidate.

These declarations were made by the committee at so early a date that they preceded virtually every primary election in the States which had to choose Senators last year, and so Mr. Hopkins and every member of the personnel of the W. P. A., down to the humblest worker, were charged by the committee with notice of its conception of a sound public policy and of the things which it regarded as contrary to the public interest, and therefore unlawful.

The committee went to work. It industriously investigated the situation. In discussing the matter I feel that I should take only the amount of time sufficient to discuss the report of the committee as it pertains to three States, and that I shall do. I do not want my limitation to those three States to be taken as a confession on my part that there was no abuse of the use of W. P. A. funds, no oppression of W. P. A. workers, no coercion of the poor, or no misuse of the money appropriated for the relief of misery and distress in any other State.

I shall take up first, following the report of the committee, the State of Kentucky. I read now from the report of the committee, to be found on page 11. Following is the language of the committee:

During June of 1938 a series of articles dealing extensively with conditions in the Kentucky primary by one of the staff writers for a prominent press association was published, in which he alleged * * * undue political activities in the W. P. A. in Kentucky. A press release containing a résumé of all charges contained in these articles, 22 charges in all, prepared in the form of individual paragraphs, and a reply to each, by Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, was issued by the W. P. A. at Washington, D. C., on June 30, 1938. Mr. Hopkins denied all but two of these charges, admitting the correctness of these two.

I still read from the committee's report:

The committee's representative, and the force assisting him, after investigation, made a report sustaining the staff writer in a majority of the charges and concurring with Mr. Hopkins in four instances.

The findings of the committee's investigator in reference to these charges indicated solicitation of W. P. A. employees and officials for contributions to the campaign funds * * * and a systematic canvassing of W. P. A. employees as to preference in the race for the Democratic senatorial nomination. These activities, so far as solicitations were concerned, were carried on mainly by private parties, not connected with W. P. A., but in some instances by W. P. A. officials. Canvassing activities were carried on by W. P. A. officials entirely.

The situation in the Kentucky campaign is a matter of common knowledge. Nothing that I say here departs from the view which the committee took, that the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the majority leader of the Senate, was in no way a party to what happened, but in the public interest I think it is important that there be put into the Record the report of the committee, insofar as it may be done, upon these matters.

I now read a further statement of the Sheppard committee, beginning on page 12 of part 1 of its report:

In Pulaski and Russell Counties, which are both located in the second district of the W. P. A. for the State of Kentucky, there was a systematic canvass of all certified workers instituted, whereby lists of all the workers were copied from the official records on forms with columns headed: "Name and address," "Identification No.," "Mark," "Number in family," and "Remarks."

The committee further said:

These forms were mimeographed for the most part on the back of stationery on which is printed "Works Progress Administration in Kentucky."

It further said:

That it was admitted in an affidavit by S. C. Taylor, area engineer of the W. P. A. for Pulaski and Russell Counties, that the said canvass was instituted by his personal direction and that copies thereof were handed to all foremen to have them filled out, to get the political affiliation of the workers; that the foremen were instructed to put in the column designated "Mark" whether the worker was a Republican or a Democrat.

The committee further said:

That he, said Taylor, had had a list of all voters in Pulaski and Russell Counties copied from the county records, in order to check them with the said lists.

Then the committee says on the same page:

Despite contrary protestations, the investigation discloses that in many instances men known to hold views contrary were discharged, there being always assigned some reason other than political, and that being denied.

The committee deals with the Kentucky primary situation at some length.

I shall read one further extract from its report, beginning at the bottom of page 12, and continuing over to page 13, as follows:

That in the first W. P. A. district, which comprises the 32 westernmost counties in Kentucky, there was a recognized comprehensive canvass of the entire personnel of the W. P. A. in those counties, comprising approximately 18,000 employees, of whom approximately 17,200 were certified workers.

I again read from the committee's report:

That the efforts of the entire supervisory force were coordinated in a plan to place in the hands of the campaign committee chairmen for each of the 32 counties a list of the names and addresses of the 17,200 workers, which list also showed the names and addresses of all legal voters in the respective families, whether or not they were registered, whether or not they had moved since registering, and precinct where registered.

Further, the committee said:

That forms to provide for this information to be filled out by the 340 project timekeepers of said district No. 1 for the workers were mimeographed in the W. P. A. office at Madisonville, Ky., headquarters for the W. P. A. district No. 1, on official time, at Government expense, except for stationery, which was furnished by the campaign committee.

Again:

That the 9 supervising timekeepers in charge of the 340 project timekeepers for said district No. 1 received their instructions to carry out this plan from their immediate superior, the supervisor of tools and equipment for W. P. A. district No. 1, who in turn received his instructions from the director, J. B. Boddie, of W. P. A. district No. 1.

The committee further said:

It is true that Mr. Hopkins, after an investigation of his own, disagreed with some of the findings of the committee as stated above. The committee, however, after still further investigation of its own, adhered to its own findings.

Mr. President, I think that is all that needs to be said about the Kentucky situation. I now move to the sovereign State of Tennessee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before the Senator leaves Kentucky, has he the information available to complete his recital, showing what action, if any, was taken when these matters were called to Mr. Hopkins' attention?

Mr. REED. I am sorry to have to say to the distinguished Senator from Maryland that I have not had time to make that investigation. I think it would be of very great interest, and I hope the Sheppard investigating committee may pursue its investigation further.

Mr. President, I am a freshman Senator, and feel timid in the presence of the great Senators sitting in this Chamber. However, I shall be very happy to introduce a resolution to that effect unless one of the senior Senators should see fit to do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not think I made clear what I was attempting to suggest to the Senator. The Senator has recited conditions that existed in Kentucky. As the record from which he read now stands, there is nothing in the recital to show whether or not Mr. Hopkins did anything about it, and, if he did anything about it, what he did. Mr. Hopkins might claim that he did not know about these things.

Mr. REED. I am coming to that.

Let us go over into Tennessee. The story in Tennessee is not a long story, but it is a fairly horrible story of the misuse of public funds and the coercion of men and women on the W. P. A. rolls.

I now read from the report of the committee, part I, page 18:

The report of our investigators in Tennessee shows that there was a vigorous effort throughout the State to raise campaign funds by contributions from Federal employees, including not only those having civil-service status but those having relief classifications as well, with circumstances in certain instances indicating intimidation and coercion, or efforts partaking of intimidation and coercion.

That such employees included not only certified and nonrelief workers of W. P. A. but certain employees of other Federal agencies.

The committee further says, on page 19:

That contributions from Federal employees for the coalition ticket were solicited by attorneys and other persons and from W. P. A. noncertified workers by foremen, timekeepers, and others, with the knowledge of ranking W. P. A. officials.

I now invite attention to the following language, which is the language of the committee:

That Works Progress Administration labor and materials, paid for with funds appropriated by the Congress for emergency relief purposes, namely, farm-to-market roads, have been used in the construction, improvement, and repair of private drives and roadways under circumstances and conditions giving rise to a fair inference that such use may have been suffered and permitted for the purpose of influencing votes and voting in behalf of both sides.

Finally, so far as Tennessee is concerned, I conclude with the following, from page 20 of the committee's report:

The committee has evidence of similar solicitation by W. P. A. workers and private parties in different parts of the State.

I now move from the State of Tennessee to the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Of course, I come from the kind of a State which the Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee has described as a "typical prairie State." Therefore, I freely grant that I am not qualified to speak upon the brand and character of politics played in Pennsylvania. However, I shall read what the very able committee had to say, in part, as to the conditions in various counties in Pennsylvania, from which probably a greater stench arose than from any other section of the United States.

On page 23 the committee said:

The committee heard evidence from its investigators that owners of trucks used on W. P. A. projects were solicited for $100 each in Carbon County, Pa., that owners of trucks were requested by

W. P. A. officials to visit the representative of a certain political leader at his home, that on one occasion 10 or 12 were at the home of this political leader at one time, and the committee has been furnished with affidavits that 7 were solicited there, that 4 promised contributions to the campaign and afterward made part or full payments on these contributions.

The committee further stated:

The committee further stated.

The investigators of the committee reported further that in Luzerne County large numbers of W. P. A. workers were mailed postal cards requesting them to call at Democratic headquarters on particular dates at different hours. The investigators reported that there was some evidence that lists had been prepared of relief workers at the W. P. A. headquarters in their county, and it is believed that these lists were used in mailing out the postal cards. Further evidence from the investigators showed that when these relief workers called at the Democratic headquarters they were solicited for campaign contributions, in some cases the amounts requested being $100.

This phase of the report continues on page 24, from which I read:

The investigators further stated that they had affidavits that at these visits by relief workers contributions were actually made. The investigators of the committee further reported that the Democratic leader who was interviewing these relief workers and to whose office they were sent, was employed by the Unemployment Compensation Service, which aids in administering the social security law and whose salary is paid, in part at least, from funds coming from the Federal Treasury, and was on leave from his official position, working for the Democratic Party.

Those activities are pretty bad, but they are not all. Again I read from the report of the committee, on page 24:

Investigators also reported that in Northampton County they had obtained evidence that in three cases either the forelady or the supervisor of a women's sewing project under the W. P. A. had handled the sale of tickets for three different political gatherings, the tickets being in two instances $1 apiece, and in another instance $1.50. The evidence further showed that large numbers of these women on this sewing project purchased tickets. The supervisor of the W. P. A. admitted to the committee that at least 30 tickets were sold for one of these political gatherings, that 125 were sold at another, and that 123 were sold to or at a third political gathering. The investigators also reported that the ticket selling by foremen and forewomen on W. P. A. projects was general in that county.

I continue to read:

The committee's investigation in Pennsylvania showed that in some instances pressure was brought to bear on W. P. A. employees and workers by individuals outside the W. P. A. For instance, under date of October 24, 1938, Mr. Joseph F. McElwee, chairman of the Democratic committee in Montgomery County, Norristown, Pa., mailed a letter addressed to "Fellow Democrats," which stated that at the direction of Senator Joseph F. Gufffer and Mr. David L. Lawrence a joint meeting of all State, Federal, and W. P. A. workers would be held in Norristown on a certain date at a specified time. The letter went on to say:

And the committee places this phrase in quotation marks: There will be no excuse accepted for lack of attendance.

That is the end of the quotation.

I continue to read from the committee's report:

"There will be no excuse accepted for lack of attendance." A representative of the committee attended the meeting mentioned in Mr. McElwee's letter and reported that about 2,500 persons were present. * *

The committee-

is of the opinion that the phrase "There will be no excuse accepted for lack of attendance," addressed to W. P. A. workers on relief, is indefensible, and that it is in the nature of an implied threat and a grave interference with the right of relief workers to be free from coercion in the exercise of their political rights.

I have not quite finished with Pennsylvania. I read now from page 25 of the committee's report:

In further reference to Luzerne County, the committee found that not only truck owners and truck drivers, but timekeepers, foremen, and other workers and employees were, in numerous instances, solicited for contributions and for the purchase of political tickets; and that such solicitations were not confined alone to persons at Democratic headquarters, but were made by W. P. A. employees.

I continue to read:

This further evidence submitted to the committee by its investigators in Luzerne County showed that numerous W. P. A. workers, including timekeepers, laborers, and others, even women on sewing projects, were requested and ordered to change their registrations from Republican to Democratic with threats of the loss of their relief employments if they refused to comply with the demands; and it was further disclosed that numerous persons were separated from their employments with W. P. A. shortly after their refusal to accede to such and similar demands.

Now I wish to read the final reference to the disgraceful conditions which were a matter of common knowledge and which have been set down so concisely and so clearly by this most intelligent, earnest, and sincere investigating committee of which the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] is the chairman. On page 26 it is stated by the committee:

The investigators further reported to the committee with respect to the Senator Davis charges that they had 23 affidavits from persons who testified a demand was made on them to change their registrations from Republican to Democratic, and these persons asserted that in various ways they were threatened with the loss of their jobs if they did not change. "For the most part," the investigators stated, "they were either timekeepers, foremen, or are employed in some supervisory capacity; but, in a few instances, demands were made to change the registration of relief workers and laborers who were receiving $60.50 a month." The affidavits were uniform in stating that insistent efforts were made to bring about a change of registration and that if they did not change, they would not be able to continue their work on W. P. A.

On page 27 the committee said:

The evidence disclosed, however, that Democratic county officials and Democratic local party workers did bring pressure to bear upon W. P. A. officials in Allegheny and other Pennsylvania counties regarding appointments and dismissais of W. P. A. personnel.

I now read from page 28:

The investigation disclosed that the evidence obtained by the committee's investigators shows conclusively that Hershey picnic tickets were sold to W. P. A. workers and employees, that they were sold in some instances on Government property and W. P. A. projects, and that the transactions in some cases were handled in such a manner as to amount to coercion of the workers into buying the tickets. Evidence was obtained to show in some instances that the full transaction of the sale and the purchase of the tickets was among W. P. A. employees and that there were other forms of political activity on the part of W. P. A. personnel.

And, finally, from the concluding statement of the committee, so far as my quotation goes with regard to Pennsylvania, I wish to quote this most significant paragraph:

Evidence before the committee was to the effect that the average salaries of W. P. A. employees who were solicited was $60.50 per month. The committee's investigators also reported on the basis of their investigation and observations in Northampton County, Pa., that it was very apparent to them that an atmosphere of fear appeared to exist among all W. P. A. employees in that county, and that if they were to express themselves they would lose their employment.

I have just finished quoting from the report of the committee, with one exception, to which I shall briefly refer

Mr. President, I have been in public life a long time; I have seen political parties, my own and the party of the gentlemen upon the other side, do many unlovely things. I have seen them use unsavory methods in the collection and distribution of money in campaigns. They proceeded upon the theory that they were out to win and that "the end justified the means." But, in all my experience and in all my reading of the history of this country, never have I found an instance or instances where political practices were so sordid, where all considerations of fairness and decency were so disregarded as in the cases reported by this committee.

I think we have reached the depth of political depravity when those clothed with authority and power take for political campaign expenses pennies, dimes, and dollars from those nearly destitute, which must be paid out of the meager funds given them through an appropriation by the Congress out of the Treasury of the United States, and that money appropriated not for political purposes but for the relief of misery and suffering.

I do not charge Mr. Hopkins with ordering these things; I do not even charge that he was cognizant of all these things. I do charge, however, that these things could not have taken place except with his general knowledge, and, therefore, with his general consent. Through the administration of Mr. Hopkins there had been built up among W. P. A. workers an atmosphere that emboldened Democratic local workers in the precincts and the counties and in the States to run riot with threats of discharging men and women from the W. P. A. if they failed to comply with the orders of the Democratic politicians. That happened, if you please, Mr. President, in my own town and in my State, though the committee of the Senate never got to them. I charge these things have produced a condition that represents the lowest level of political management this Nation has ever known.

I do not know whether Mr. Hopkins made the statement which well-known newspaper writers printed as having been made by him, that familiar statement that "we will spend and spend, tax and tax, and elect and elect." I do not think it is important whether or not Mr. Hopkins ever made that statement. The fact remains that that phrase is a cogent statement of the philosophy under which Harry L. Hopkins administered the W. P. A., and was especially apparent in the last 2 years and throughout the last campaign.

In that campaign, as I said, we reached a low level of political morals, in which all considerations of fairness and decency, all sympathy for the poor and distressed, were forgotten.

When Mr. Hopkins was selected for this place, and the announcement was made, it occurred to me as a citizen of the country that the President was taking Mr. Hopkins out of the line of fire which was certain to foliow the results of last year's election. In nearly every State where there was a free expression of opinion the so-called New Deal was repudiated. Progressive Republicans, conservative Republicans, Republicans neither conservative nor progressive, but just Republicans, were able to beat New Deal Democrats. I had a part in that campaign. I speak out of first-hand knowledge that one of the important factors in the last campaign was the political mismanagement of the Works Progress Administration.

I desire to read the final and further statement of the committee. You know, in order to get Mr. Hopkins out of the line of fire, he was kicked upstairs. Unfortunately, his principal associate in W. P. A. did not fare so well. I read now from the committee's report on page 32:

Another example of undue political activity was seen in an address by Aubrey Williams, Deputy Works Progress Administrator, before the Save the Professional Works Progress Administration Projects Conference in Washington on June 27, 1938, composed mainly of Works Progress Administration workers. In his address Mr. Williams said in part: "We've got to stick together. We've got to keep our friends in power." The committee felt that this was an unfortunate statement, and made a public announcement to that effect. It believes that where a supervisory official addresses an audience of the employees under him or composed mainly of such employees and urges a certain political line of action he uses a form of coercion contrary to public policy and the spirit of our Government.

Alas, poor Aubrey. While his distinguished superior was being kicked upstairs, he was sent to the cellar.

I have no illusions as to the effect of the remarks I have made, or the emphasis I have placed upon the very able and impartial investigating committee of this body. I have no doubt that when the vote is taken Mr. Hopkins will be confirmed. A majority of the majority upon the other side of the aisle will furnish the votes necessary to do that. I desire, however, to leave with the Senate the thought that when it shall have confirmed the appointment of Harry L. Hopkins it will have condoned the acts, the policies of his administration, and the atmosphere which he created; and we on this side will meet Senators on the other side and their party with that as an issue in the election of 1940.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, my remarks will be very brief, and I ask not to be interrupted while I am speaking.

During my years in the Senate I have never opposed a Cabinet appointment by the President. I dislike to take a contrary position at this time. I know the close relationship which has existed between the President and Mr. Hopkins for many years, reaching back to their work together in New York State. The identity of their interests and the mutual bond of their viewpoints have been thoroughly well established since they have been in Washington together during the past 6 years. I believe that nothing I shall say will prevent the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins. However, I should be recreant in my duty, unrepresentative of my constituents, and false to my own beliefs if I voted to confirm him.

Throughout my entire political experience of over 40 years I have opposed the coercion of the voter. I have fought these pernicious influences within both industry and Government. I shall never yield to this destructive attempt to undermine the American principle of a free electorate.

My experience has taught me that these difficulties are encountered among both Republicans and Democrats, frequently in industry as well as in Government. During the recent campaign in Pennsylvania fear in the hearts of hungry men, open reward by way of a better job, relief fraud, and political coercion caused many to barter away their political liberties and yield to unscrupulous demands of partisanship made upon them,

The private coercion of the voter is intolerable. The public coercion of the voter through public funds is even worse. Words fail to describe the resentment of the American public against these abuses.

I hold in my hand a volume of the Investigation of Senatorial Campaign Expenditures in Pennsylvania, representing undisputed findings of this distinguished Senate committee. It is an honest document. It is a confidential report. This is not the time to review all the instances of public abuses shown in it. I have, however, examined it carefully, and I have entire confidence in the integrity of the Senatorial Campaign Expenditures Committee and its findings in Pennsylvania.

Never before in the history of Pennsylvania has such a brand of infamy been set upon partisan political activity. Never before has there been such open exposure of the naked and unabashed shamelessness of unscrupulous spoilsmen. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to congratulate the Senate Committee on Campaign Expenditures on the perseverance and courage of its labors. I regret that the committee found conditions so unspeakably bad as to make this extended report necessary.

I regret that in the past Pennsylvania has suffered from the tyranny of the political spoilsman. I have been active in my opposition to these practices within my own party. I know full well the nature and the extent of these abuses. But, irrespective of the charges made against Pennsylvania Republicans, history does not record anything which would begin to equal the findings of fraud and voter coercion contained in the volume now before me, the record of the spoilsmen of recent years. Cameron, Quay, Penrose, and Vare were charged with extremes of political partisanship; but their activities pale to insignificance compared to the streamlined plunder of the present day.

I say this as my own party now returns to responsibility in Pennsylvania. I shall expect the same fidelity to public trust in my own party which I ask of any responsible administration. If that trust is violated, I shall openly and promptly condemn it. Under no circumstances will I condone the partisan use of public funds.

Mr. President, for many years I tried to secure from the office of Mr. Hopkins some slight cooperation in my earnest attempt to take politics out of the administration of W. P. A. in Pennsylvania. Mr. Hopkins gave me no help. All he would do was to make slighting references to me, saying, "You cannot expect me to turn handsprings every time Senator Davis makes a political charge." Seeking to cover up his own administration, he accused me of political partisanship.

I should be unfair to Mr. Hopkins and to my own constituents if I lost this opportunity to say that my interest in the unemployed then, as now, was not that of a political partisan. I have voted for all work-relief and public-works appropriations. I voted for W. P. A. appropriations, although I knew they were being used to build up a political machine in Pennsylvania for the purpose of defeating me. I frequently stated this on the floor of the Senate and throughout the State of Pennsylvania. However, that political machine became so arrogant and so thoroughly degraded that the citizens of Pennsylvania, including thousands of men and women on W. P. A. rolls who had been insulted by the treatment they had received, rose up in rebellion against the machine and registered a stern verdict against it on November 8.

I have been increasingly confirmed in a profound conviction that partisan politics should not be tolerated in the administration of relief, work relief, or any form of social-security legislation. Despite a manifest public opinion on this subject, the representative of Mr. Hopkins at Harrisburg, Pa., has not uttered a single protest against the partisan conditions under his administration; nor has Aubrey Williams, his chief deputy, recanted a single word he spoke during the recent campaign, although Mr. Hopkins has apologized for him.

Mr. President, I do not wish to indict the intelligence of Mr. Hopkins by saying that he did not know what was going on in W. P. A. in the great State of Pennsylvania. He had every opportunity of knowing. He could have known if he had wanted to know, and I do not think he has been in Washington for 6 years without knowing the work-relief problems of our State. At no time, however, until he was called before the committee considering his nomination have I heard of him indicating his clear recognition and sure condemnation of these abuses.

I do not wish to judge the motives of Mr. Hopkins in obscuring the partisan developments in W. P. A. I can only take him at his own word when he now says that he regrets the intrusion of partisan politics into the great public trust committed to him. I am glad that he has admitted the truth of these findings, and that he does not seek to deny the evidences of fraud, voter coercion, and dissipated public funds shown in the report of the Senatorial Campaign Expenditures Committee. At last he has adopted an attitude becoming in a public servant. Mr. Hopkins is now like the repentant sinner who, through his tears, can find courage to sing:

Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin.

The apparent ease with which he makes these admissions has not increased my confidence in him. However, it is my sincere hope that should he now be confirmed he will take to his new official responsibility a more certain respect for the public opinion of the American people.

Mr. President, the document I now hold in my hand is ample proof of wicked practices of voter coercion in W. P. A. in Pennsylvania. The temporary activities of the conscientious Senate committee investigating campaign expenditures has given insight as to what may be expected when a complete investigation is made. I shall not cease my insistence on this point. W. P. A. must be fully investigated. The public is entitled to know how much has been spent for administrative overhead, to whom it was paid, what work they did, and why some were discharged while others were retained at princely salaries at a time when tens of thousands of heads of families were driven from the rolls immediately after election day, or in the pitiless cold of winter.

Mr. President, I am not for further cuts in W. P. A. at this time. This is not the time, in the dead of winter, to drive workers from the rolls. Snow has fallen in Pennsylvania. In thousands of homes there are no shoes for the children, no suitable clothing, but little food in the kitchen, and little fuel for warmth. If such were the case in my home, I would seek the work opportunities necessary to protect it, and I believe my fellow citizens have the same right.

I repeat, however, that W. P. A. must be fully and completely investigated. I should not like to believe the current rumor that the removal of Mr. Hopkins from W. P. A. was designed primarily to stop such an investigation. I carry an order from the voters of Pennsylvania as of last November 8 demanding that W. P. A. be cleaned up. The voters do not want a whitewash. They do not want the self-investigation of W. P. A. such as Mr. Hopkins has conducted. They want W. P. A. purged from top to bottom. Nothing less than a complete investigation of W. P. A. will satisfy the taxpayers of this Nation.

I was among the first, if not the first Member of the Senate, some 4 years ago to ask for a full investigation of W. P. A. I did so for a number of reasons. I desired a rethinking of the principles on which public work is administered. I desired to remove partisanship from the administration of relief and work relief. I desired a thorough examination of the administration.

istrative costs of public work. We shall not come to a satisfactory solution of these questions until W. P. A. is fully investigated. Such an investigation has an importance far higher than any partisan claim, and deserves the support of every patriotic American citizen.

The report in my hand is only the beginning. Mr. President, let me repeat, this is only the beginning. At a later date I expect to present additional evidence which will, I believe, make a complete investigation of W. P. A. imperative at the source of expenditures in every State in the Union.

Mr. President, I conclude. In view of the facts which I have reviewed, I shall not vote for the confirmation of Mr. Hopkins. If I should do so I should be kept busy from now until my dying day in unsatisfactory explanations.

I ask to have printed in the Record at this point, as a part of my remarks, the affidavit of Mary E. Lucot, of Pittsburgh. She was formerly chief clerk in the office of the W. P. A. of Allegheny County, which had charge of all projects operated in the boroughs, townships, and third-class cities. Seven weeks before the day when she made this affidavit she was discharged because she refused to purchase W. P. A. tickets for the Hershey picnic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson of Colorado in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CONNALLY. Before consent is given, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether this affidavit attacking W. P. A. was made while this lady was still working for the W. P. A. or after she had been discharged.

Mr. DAVIS. It is filed in the confidential report of the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is offering it. I merely desired to know whether she made the affidavit while she was still working for the W. P. A.

Mr. DAVIS. No; after she had been discharged from the W. P. A.

Mr. CONNALLY. After she lost her job she made the affidavit?

Mr. DAVIS. That is correct—after she was discharged for political reasons.

Mr. BARKLEY. In this affidavit did she state she was discharged for political reasons?

Mr. DAVIS. No; I do not think she did say that.

Mr. BARKLEY. If she was discharged for political reasons, she must have been discharged by the W. P. A., and if they discharged her for political reasons, or because of her political activity, does the Senator complain of that?

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator think anyone down in Kentucky is going to make the statement that he knows he is going to be discharged for political reasons? They will not do that in Pennsylvania. They wait until the action is taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know a great many of them who were discharged for reasons entirely legitimate who afterward made affidavits that they were dismissed for political reasons.

Mr. DAVIS. I know some who were discharged just for political reasons, when the W. P. A. had no legitimate right to discharge them on that ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis]?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the affidavit directly connects Mr. Hopkins with the matter that is set forth in it.

Mr. DAVIS. It does not mention Mr. Hopkins' name. It mentions W. P. A. and the officers in Allegheny County, Pa. For the benefit of the Senate, I ask that the clerk read the affidavit, if that course is agreeable to Senators, so that they may have the full information as to what is contained in the affidavit. Mr. President, I ask that the affidavit be read by the clerk.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the affidavit need not be read into the Record in order to satisfy the purpose of my taking the floor. I wish to inform the Senator that I did not intend to object to its being read into the Record. I was simply seeking a little information, because the returns from Pennsylvania led me to conclude that everyone, including the W. P. A., had voted the Republican ticket in that State, and I was wondering whether the Senator from Pennsylvania was dissatisfied with the result.

Mr. DAVIS. For the information of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and my very good friend, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Pennsylvania include me among his very good friends also? Why does the Senator discriminate between the Senator from

West Virginia and me? [Laughter.]

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I call attention to a rule of the Senate, a rule which is important, that before a Senator may speak he must be recognized by the Chair. That rule is constantly being violated by Senators on the floor who ought to know the rules. So far as the Senator from Pennsylvania is concerned, he does not need to make a request for unanimous consent to have the affidavit read. He can read it in his own right, under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] originally asked that an affidavit be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection to that request?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The affidavit is as follows:

THE REPUBLICAN ATTITUDE TOWARD W. P. A. (By Mary E. Lucot)

(By Mary E. Lucot)

(Mary E. Lucot was formerly chief clerk of the office of the W. P. A. of Allegheny County, which had charge of all projects operated in the boroughs, townships, and third-class cities. Seven weeks ago she was fired because she refused to purchase W. P. A. tickets for the Hershey picnic.)

As chief clerk of the office which had charge of all projects operating in the boroughs, townships, and third-class cities in Allegheny County, I am qualified to write of conditions which have existed during my 2½ years in that office. As chief clerk, I kept a record of approximately 200 projects. From 110 to 125 of these were in actual operation at all times. I wrote every requisition for the assignment of labor orders, skilled and supervisory men. the assignment of labor orders, skilled and supervisory men, for these projects.

If the W. P. A. office in Allegheny County is investigated, the stench of favoritism and politics in its administration will far surpass the scandal at Harrisburg.

surpass the scandal at Harrisburg.

Federal funds are used injudiciously to promote the financial chests of the Democratic Party in Allegheny County.

In July of this year I personally made a trip to Harrisburg and advised Mr. J. Banks Hudson, State administrator of W. P. A., of the conditions which exist in the Allegheny County office. Mr. Hudson knows these facts to be true.

I saw honest, competent, and efficient men refused work, due solely to their political standing or to the fact that the ward chairman preferred to place his own workers in these positions. Political bosses were not concerned about whether a man was able to perform the work which was set up to be done by appropriated Federal funds, but only what they could get out of the men for the pert election. for the next election.

During the election.

During the election of the mayor in the city of Pittsburgh in 1937, we purged the W. P. A. rolls of all men who had been sponsored by John Kane, county commissioner, who was supporting P. J. McArdle against C. D. Scully. We substituted and assigned in their places organization men by the scores and the organization supported Mr. Scully who was the victor, for it was not possible to beat the organization pay roll within its own rights. However, Mr. Waddell, the Republican candidate for mayor, had stiffer opposition, for after the primaries, all the Democrats were once more "sweethearts."

"sweethearts."

During October and November of 1937, the two heavy campaign months, W. P. A. aided considerably but this time we were opposing the Republican Party and heavier fuel was added to the mixture. We took hundreds of cases from the relief rolls and assigned them to W. P. A. pay rolls. The manning on city streets alone jumped over 1,000 men. All this was done to help the Democratic Party keep control of the city of Pittsburgh. If the manning of W. P. A. had been checked 30 days previous to this election day with the pay rolls as they were reduced 30 days later, you could verify that the W. P. A. rolls had been padded for election day. Allegheny County has a quota of men that has been set up by the State office to take care of W. P. A. work within the county. An accurate check will show that we kept within that figure during most of the year and that the discrepancy occurs only during the election period.

The Guffey-Earle machine also may resort to other means for winning an election if increasing the load and assigning choice supervisory positions fail. Harrisburg is contacted and we get an official notice, signed by Mr. J. Banks Hudson, to suspend all work official notice, signed by Mr. J. Banks Hudson, to suspend all work on election day, said work to be made up at a later date, and thus all the ward bosses are given a chance to use their W. P. A. appointees at the polls and they see that those on the relief rolls in their particular balliwick get taken to the polls in cars.

If W. P. A. workers were given an opportunity to work 40-44 hours per week, 52 weeks of the year, 95 percent of them would be honest and efficient. They would give as much to their work as any man in private industry. I have talked with and questioned more than 2,000 men on the W. P. A. Ninety-five percent of them are dissatisfied with their present wage and working conditions.

(5) W. P. A. employees are supposed to receive a notice, coming from Washington, before every election. This notice is expected previous to the election. However, during the recent primary campaign, we received this notice 2 days after the election and it stated that at no time were we to coerce or intimidate any Federal employee and that the knowledge of such would result in our imstated that at no time were we to coerce or intimidate any Federal employee and that the knowledge of such would result in our immediate dismissal. They failed to send notices to the political bosses and ward heelers who were coercing and intimidating the W. P. A. workers. We were given permission to vote independently but 99 percent of those employed on the administrative and supervisory pay rolls are well aware of this fact. They know this is the usual form letter and is to be treated as such.

If the administrators of W. P. A. took this election notice seriously would they tolerate the distribution of the Hershey State.

If the administrators of W. P. A. took this election notice seriously, would they tolerate the distribution of the Hershey State picnic tickets in the old Federal post-office building to W. P. A. workers? You answer "no." But those tickets were distributed in this building and were handed to the officials themselves during W. P. A. work hours.

If W. P. A. administrators took their election notice seriously would they lend to outside agencies, men charged to the Federal pay roll, to distribute tickets to the supervisory personnel? Would they personally O. K. the travel expense accounts of these men, working on Government time, for this purpose? You answer "They should not." But I know they did. Would they condone the collecting of moneys for these same tickets by Federal employees during office hours and knowingly permit them to tell you that they thought it would be much better if you paid for them rather than to turn them back? They actually did this after the State picnic in Hershey Park.

Would officials in the building permit certain individuals to take

Would officials in the building permit certain individuals to take their tickets out to the various work locations and sell them to the laborers and skilled men in order that they would not have to dig into their own pockets for their share of the graft, which is and has been carried by the W. P. A. employees?

In the face of these questions do you think that Governor Earle and Senator Guffer, who connive with others to mace W. P. A. workers, are fit men to control the destiny of our State? Should they, by the control which they exercise over the public pay roll, be permitted to tell us who will be our candidates for Governor and Hutted States Constant. and United States Senator?

During the May primaries Senator Guffer appealed to W. P. A. workers to nominate an honest man for Governor and not a hand-workers to nominate an honest man for Governor and not a handpicked candidate of David Lawrence. Now Mr. Guffer is telling the W. P. A. workers to support the same candidate he then opposed. Was Mr. Guffer right in May or is he right now?

During these same May primaries, through the influence of Senator Guffer, the assignment division in Allegheny County worked strenuously for 2 or 3 weeks to assign some 5,000 to 6,000 on W. P. A. rolls. This necessitated additional supervision which was passed to the Kennedy-Guffey supporters. Some of the supervision on W. P. A. projects went from laborers at $60.50 or C. L. F., at $85 to general foreman at $1,800-$2,160. It was not a question of qualifications or ability but one of political strategy. Some of the Kennedy-Guffey workers who thought to make a good showat $50 to general noteman at $1,000-$2,100. It was not a question of qualifications or ability but one of political strategy. Some of the Kennedy-Guffey workers who thought to make a good showing on their application stated that they had experience with the Casey Construction Co., extending from 1 to 20 years. These statements were checked and fraud was uncovered on 14 out of statements were checked and fraud was uncovered on 14 out of 15 applications.

When Mr. Kennedy was defeated in the primaries, we purged our rolls of 6,000 men within 3 weeks, in order to get down once more to quota. This should have automatically reduced our supervision, but everyone was in doubt as to who should be discharged. Should it be the recently appointed Kennedy workers or should it be the old organization men who did not go along with the Guffey purge? The consequence was that for many weeks we carried a supervisory roll far in excess of that needed.

Judge Arthur James and Senator James J. Davis have signed a public statement, together with other Republican candidates, promising a full continuation of W. P. A. until jobs can be provided through private employment. This is the outstanding issue of this campaign and the Republican position on it is clear and satisfactory to W. P. A. workers. The Republican Party promises that workers will not be stuck on W. P. A. rolls and then dropped as the Earle gang has done. The constructive attitude toward as the Earle gang has done. The constructive attitude toward W. P. A. should be endorsed at the polls by every fair-minded voter.

Senator Davis states that "A bill should be introduced into the Senate of the United States to brand political macing as a crime punishable with a $5,000 fine for any man who seeks to extort even as much as one thin dime from a W. P. A. worker or forces the purchase of $100 a plate dinners from Government employees." When this bill becomes the law of the land, the disgraceful condition of political macing, which now prevails in Pennsylvania, will be removed

I expect to vote Republican November 8 and ask my many oldtime associates and friends on W. P. A. to vote for Arthur James for Governor and Senator James J. Davis for United States Senator. MARY E. LUCOT.

2901 Middletown Road, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sworn and subscribed before me this 1st day of November 1938 by Mary E. Lucot.

(Signed) N. M. GAERTNER, Notary Public. [SEAL]

(My commission expires March 30, 1941.)

Mr. HOLT obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOLT. Yes. I am enjoying the debate.

Mr. BARKLEY. A while ago, when I asked the Senator to yield, and he declined, he was stating in his address that he was satisfied and actually charging Mr. Hopkins with knowing the condition which he described in Pennsylvania. If the Senator insists on that attitude, then he disagrees with the Senate committee, which in its official report exonerated Mr. Hopkins from any knowledge or responsibility in connection with any of these matters that were critized by the committee in the States referred to.

Mr. DAVIS. I am expressing my opinion that that is the opinion of the Senate committee. The district representative of Mr. Hopkins in Pennsylvania certainly knew about it. Mr. Aubrey Williams certainly knew about it in Pennsylvania. And I said I did not want to indict him in a way to show that he did not know what was going on in his

Mr. BARKLEY. Then by not being willing to indict Mr. Hopkins, the Senator is willing to indict the Senate committee for making the report.

Mr. DAVIS. No; I am not willing to indict the Senate committee. I say the Senate committee did an excellent job.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well. They said that Mr. Hopkins knew nothing about this and was in no way responsible for it. The Senator disagrees with the committee?

Mr. DAVIS. I disagree with the committee on that point because of the fact that on many occasions I have called incidents to the attention of Mr. Hopkins, and Mr. Hopkins said that he could not turn a handspring every time I brought in the political question of W. P. A. and

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, we are here to discuss the question of a Christmas present. It was said in the newspapers, and reliably said, that the President of the United States had given a Christmas present to Mr. Hopkins, whom he affectionately calls "Harry the Hop," as he calls Mr. Morgenthau "Henry the Morgue," and Mr. Corcoran "Tommy the Cork"-

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator spoke the name "Henry"did he refer to me?

Mr. HOLT. No; I do not refer to my distinguished and good friend from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator said "Henry the Morgue." Mr. HOLT. I do not refer to the Senator from Arizona, because I am sure he is not "Henry the Morgue"-he is very much alive. [Laughter.]

However, it is a known fact that the President gave the Secretaryship of Commerce to Mr. Hopkins as a Christmas present. I believe a large number of the American people would not accept Mr. Hopkins even on a Christmas tree. [Laughter in the galleries.] However, I do not doubt that he will be confirmed, because Mr. Hopkins has played ball with too many Democrats not to be confirmed. I should like to express and will express my opinion about the man in my address this afternoon.

Jefferson some time ago-known as the father of the Democratic Party, but lately known as the forgotten man of the Democratic Party, and particularly he was the forgotten man that was spoken of in the 1932 campaign-Jefferson made the statement that the question concerning a candidate shall be, "Is he honest, is he capable, is he faithful to the Constitution?" In my opinion I can answer all three of those questions with a definite negative, "No." I do not believe that he is honest. I do not believe that he is capable. Nor do I believe he is faithful to the Constitution. I am in a little better position to make such an assertion than a number of Senators on this side of the aisle. I do not have any job to lose, and I may make that assertion. I was looking through the Congressional Directory as to the official duties of the Department of Commerce. Oh, there are quite a number of duties in the Department of Commerce. I shall not read them all, but on page 573 I found out why the President has appointed Mr. Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce. One of those duties is listed as follows:

The Secretary of Commerce is charged with the work of-

the supervision and control of Alaskan fur seal, salmon, and other

I do not know of any man in America who should be more qualified to regulate the Alaskan fur seals than Mr. Hopkins, because he has done a great deal of boondoggling, and no doubt in his boondoggling ventures he has studied the Alaskan fur seal. Some of the Works Progress Administration workers even went back to Pharaoh's time, and before, in Egypt to trace the history of the safetypin. So I am sure that Mr. Hopkins has traced down something of the history of the Alaskan fur seal and is perfectly at ease in determining what shall be done about it.

I do not want to be facetious, particularly now. I want to read a very excellent summary about Mr. Hopkins appearing in the Baltimore Sun this morning written by Frank R. Kent. I shall amplify it, but I think it summarizes the matter very well. It is entitled "The Hopkins Ballyhoo."

I want to read it, because I am sure that a number of Senators would like to hear it:

If the interesting effort to build Mr. Harry Hopkins, newly apof the interesting enort to build Mr. Harry Hopkins, newly appointed Secretary of Commerce, up into a solid and reassuring figure in whom businessmen will confide and in whose behalf his influence will be benevolently exerted—if that effort has begun to bog down, it is not the fault of the administration propagandists.

Certainly they have done their best. The basic cause of the failure can be traced back to that trenchant, ancient, but still appoint required to with that trenchant.

appallingly accurate saying, to wit, that "you cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear."

How true, how true!

While it is true that an extraordinary concentration of the New While it is true that an extraordinary concentration of the New Deal political and publicity forces succeeded in pulling him through a hearing where the clarity of his memory about not having uttered his famous spend, spend, tax, tax, elect, elect remark was only equaled by the amazing fogginess which made him uncertain that he had ever said, among other things, that Upton Sinclair is "one of us," or that he had ever been enrolled as a Socialist—nevertheless, the Senate gauntlet rubbed off a good deal of the grease with which the heroic Harry had been anointed.

He will enter upon his new job with the White House journalistic reflectors almost tearfully insisting upon his noble personal character, his great executive ability, and many admirable qualities of mind and heart. The chorus, however, is a little too loud; its synthetic nature slightly too apparent; the butter much too thick.

synthetic nature slightly too apparent; the butter much too thick. Mr. Hopkins' W. P. A. record, Mr. Hopkins' testimony, and the points made about Mr. Hopkins in the Senate and outside stand him out far too clearly to permit the picture to be blurred by propaganda or the actual facts to be hidden from the people as a whole.

Outstanding among these is that Mr. Hopkins was not taken from the W. P. A. and put into the Cabinet as a deserved promotion, but to get him out of a job which he had badly botched and into a place where he would be out of the line of fire. That is the plain truth and there isn't an informed man in Washington who does

I intended to discuss that question a little later. At present I continue the reading of Mr. Kent's article:

As for the botching, the evidence—some of it provided by Mr. Hopkins himself—is overwhelming and convincing. As he leaves, Congress prepares to dismantle and revamp the whole relief set-up. It does this after the political saturation of the W. P. A. has been disclosed by a Seneta committee and partially admitted by Mr. disclosed by a Senate committee, and partially admitted by Mr. Hopkins; after it has been denounced by both Democrats and Republicans, and after public sentiment has reached the limit of tolerance.

The job of forming a new system of relief administration, about to be tackled by Congress, is not recommended either by the President or Mr. Hopkins. On the contrary, neither has as yet made the slightest constructive suggestion, and until Mr. Hopkins admitted certain things on the stand, including his own misiaken political participations that W. P. A. wes. political activities, the attitude of both had been that W. P. A. was without a flaw and that all charges were partisan and unfounded. The situation as it exists today, with Mr. Hopkins taken out as a precaution against attack, his aide, Mr. Aubrey Williams, side-tracked for similar reasons, and the whole structure itself about to be made over, is about as complete an indictment as could be framed.

Under the circumstances, to sing the praises of Mr. Hopkins is to be ridiculous. However, that does not deter the administration minstrels who are thoroughly aware that in saving Mr. Hopkins' face they also save the President's. The tune upon which they now harp is that Mr. Hopkins was really urged for Secretary of Commerce by big-business leaders who believe in him. This is simply not true. There were no detached business leaders who urged his selection or wanted it. The idea of making him Secretary of Commerce originated in no business mind, but was evolved by the slick palace politicians, of whom he is one, as a way out of the W. P. A. jam which made his retention there impossible.

The position he now occupies is the least important of all Cabinet

And am I glad of that!-

far less important, of course, than that of W. P. A. Administrator, which he relinquishes. But to justify the advance notices tentative plans have been formed to have Mr. Hopkins expand into a sort of superlabor peacemaker and otherwise avoid sinking into what might prove humiliating obscurity.

I am reminded of the President's desire for anonymity in certain of his officers. If he leaves Harry Hopkins alone, the appointee will sink into that anonymous position, and, as Mr. Kent says, he will sink into "humiliating obscurity."

They will not amount to much. Actually Mr. Hopkins is the complete "yes man," the most subservient whom the President has in Washington, which may account for the high favor in which he holds him.

It has taken an administration drive of major proportions to get him safely into the new job where his power is curtailed, his importance diminished, and his usefulness to the opposition as a target decreased. But neither the strained tributes of the business stooges of the so-called advisory council, the "great American" adjectives of his jobholding colleagues, nor the encomiums of his gifted chief can make of him a public official whom the harried businessman will trust or love. In the graphic words of an old-time politician, no businessman not wholly foolish "would ever go to sleep with his finger in Harry's mouth."

That is the end of Mr. Kent's article. Of course, I would not try to add to it, but I desire to amplify it to some extent. I might read all afternoon about Mr. Hopkins, and what the people of the country think of him. However, I wish only to read a few references from some of the newspapers of the country about this so-called great Secretary of Commerce, who, as Secretary of Commerce, is going to settle all our labor troubles.

I invite attention first to an editorial from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. I emphasize the word "Democrat":

President Roosevelt's selection of Harry L. Hopkins to assume the Cabinet post vacated by Commerce Secretary Daniel C. Roper is purely a political act and reflects a dismal disregard for national welfare. Scrutiny of Mr. Hopkins' record reveals no qualifications for the job. His business experience is nil, and his conduct as head of the Works Progress Administration has been the New Deal's most arrogant example of shameful political exploitation.

I shall not read more from that editorial. Let me go to the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, a Democratic newspaper, which says:

As Secretary of Commerce the W. P. A. Administrator will be taken out of his life work and made responsible for work of a totally different kind, in which he has had no training or experience.

The Reno (Nev.) Gazette labels its editorial about Mr. Hopkins' appointment "Silencing an Inquiry."

Not a man in the Senate who knows the facts will deny that one of the reasons why President Roosevelt named Harry Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce was to stop an investigation of the Works Progress Administration, and in order that the administration cohorts on the floor, when we start to discuss the W. P. A. and Mr. Hopkins, may say, "Well, you are discussing something in the past. Mr. Hopkins is gone. What are you talking about?" We all know that that was one of the chief reasons why he was kicked upstairs. He was kicked upstairs by the President in order to avoid an exposé of the most shameful conduct that has ever been known by any official who has had his power.

I could go ahead and read many articles. The Lansing (Mich.) Journal labels its editorial "Hopkins Offends Common Sense."

Turning to the Los Angeles (Calif.) Times, its editorial starts with this language:

The appointment of Harry Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce is remarkable from several aspects. Next to the naming of Hugo Black—

I think some Senators will remember him.

Next to the naming of Hugo Black to the Supreme Court, it is probably the most unfit appointment the President has yet made. By neither training nor experience is Hopkins acquainted with the problems which arise in the Commerce Department; nor is it likely he has much sympathy for them.

Another Democratic newspaper is the Galveston Tribune. The label of its editorial is "Mr. Hopkins Gets a Christmas Present." The editorial goes on to say:

In the eyes of some it would be difficult to find a man less qualified for the post of Secretary of Commerce than Harry Hopkins.

The Colorado Springs (Colo.) Gazette labels its editorial about Mr. Hopkins "Unfit But Safe." The editorial begins thus:

Harry Hopkins is probably the most unpopular man the President could name to the Department of Commerce.

The editorial from the Long Beach (Calif.) Press-Telegram is labeled "Christmas Gift for Senators." It states:

It was 2 days before Christmas, and all through the land not a politician was thinking of anything more serious than turkey and fixings, when President Roosevelt yesterday shoved Santa Claus from the center of the stage by appointing Harry L. Hopkins to the Cabinet as Secretary of Commerce. What chance has an old fellow like Santa against a man who has won the title of "Biggest Spender on Earth"?

I shall not read more from that editorial. I should like to quote a sentence from the Christian Science Monitor, of Boston, Mass., which labels its editorial "An Uncommercial Secretary." The first sentence of that editorial is:

Never has there been an American Secretary of Commerce with less of a private business background than Harry L. Hopkins,

As I stated a moment ago, I could read at great length from newspaper comments, both Democratic and Republican, about Mr. Hopkins. We have in this country a poll known as the American Institute of Public Opinion, otherwise known as the Gallup poll. On December 16 the Gallup poll, named after Dr. George Gallup, its director, was taken to determine whether the people of the United States wanted Harry Hopkins to succeed Roper. The Gallup poll showed that 66 percent of the people of the United States felt that Hopkins should not be named as Secretary of Commerce.

Different individuals throughout the country were asked, Do you think Harry Hopkins has done a good job in the W. P. A.? The majority, or 53 percent, felt that he had not done a good job.

A number of businessmen were asked whether they thought Harry Hopkins would be a good Secretary of Commerce. Only 22 percent of the businessmen of America felt that Harry Hopkins would be a good Secretary of Commerce and 78 percent thought that he would not be a good Secretary. Of course, the office of Secretary of Commerce was created to help business and evaluate business conditions. Mr. Hopkins is utterly unfit for that; and, although I desire to discuss this a little later on in my very, very short speech, I should like, since I have mentioned the Gallup polls, to refer to the Gallup poll which was published on June 19, 1938. The headline is "New Deal injecting politics into relief. poll voters believe." It shows that 54 percent of the people actually believed that politics had been injected into the W. P. A. It also shows that of that entire group 91 percent objected to the use of politics in relief. Of course, we have heard that Mr. Hopkins has repented. Oh, yes. His appearance and conduct before the committee reminded me of the instance of a man who was caught and found guilty of stealing something, who goes before the judge and says, "Judge, I did not mean to do it at all; I will not do it again if you will just let me off." So that is practically what Mr. Hopkins says: "I did not mean to do this; I think it was wrong; but if you will just give me another lease on life and $15,000 a year"-that is thrown in-"If you will just give me that, I will be a good boy and will make political speeches only when they have the approval of most of the Senators, whether they be purged or not."

Referring to the hearing, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG asked him what he thought about a statement Mr. Williams made on June 27 in which Mr. Williams said, "We have got to stick together; we have got to keep our friends in power." Mr. Hopkins said that that was an indiscretion on the part of Mr. Williams.

Now let me compare what Mr. Williams said with what Mr. Hopkins said in September. Mr. Williams said-and I repeat it, and then I want to inquire which was worse, and I ask Senators to listen-Mr. Williams said in June, "We have got to stick together; we have got to keep our friends in power." Here, however, is what Mr. Hopkins said, according to the Associated Press in September 1938 at New Ulm, Minn.—and I quote from the press dispatch:

NEW ULM, MINN., September 13.-Harry Hopkins, Federal Works Progress Administration chieftain, toured local W. P. A. projects today after declaring "It is—

This is Mr. Hopkins speaking.

"It is perfectly proper in a democracy for relief to become a political issue."

The article goes on:

Addressing 100 civic officials and businessmen last night, Mr. Hopkins said: "There is nothing wrong in supporting the political group that will give you the most."

There is nothing wrong in supporting the political group that will give you the most.

Mr. Williams said-

We have got to stick together; we have got to keep our friends in power.

Let the Senate determine which statement is worse. One was made by Mr. Williams in June and the other was made by Mr. Hopkins in September. Mr. Hopkins is the man who wanted to keep politics out of relief, and yet he made that statement in his speech. Perhaps he thought it was just one of those times when he was "playing around" about which he spoke. It will be recalled he said he might have made it while he was "playing around," but he never defined what he meant by that. I do not know what he meant, but, nevertheless, the Associated Press got this particular statement and I am going to quote a little further from it. This is Mr. Hopkins still speaking:

Relief is a good issue-and should be debated. The public is demanding more and more service from its Government and should elect candidates that will

Oh, it was wrong for Mr. Williams to say it; Mr. Hopkins said it was indiscreet for Mr. Williams to say it. I ask which statement was worse?

Then he proceeds:

I am no more worried about relief clients becoming a pressure group than I am about school teachers organizing for higher wages or Andrew Mellon lobbying for an aluminum tariff or the cement manufacturers for paved roads-

So, Mr. Hopkins feels that there should be no politics in relief: at least, that is what he has now said, and he criticizes Mr. Williams for making the statement to which I have

Here is something else he said—and I quote from his testimony in the nomination hearing. He said:

Senator, I am the last man to try to avoid either responsibility or to seem to quibble about politics in relief. I do not think it is funny. I do not think the American people like it. I know you do not like it, Senator, because ever since I have been here never once have you ever by any implication attempted to even, directly or indirectly, have anything to do with W. P. A. or with anything I have ever done about politics.

In other words, he said in his statement when he appeared before the men who are to pass on his nomination that he does not think it funny to quibble about politics and relief. He did not tell them that he delivered a speech in Minnesota about which the committee did not know and which was not given to any members of the committee and which happened to be found by me as I plowed through the record of Mr. Hopkins. It is all right to play politics in Minnesota, but when his side gets licked in the election and when he cannot "purge" those he desired to purge, and when he wants to be Secretary of Commerce then he puts on his saintly air, his hypocritical cloak, and says, "Gentlemen, I have done wrong, but I shall be a good boy from now on if you will just excuse me once again."

I could proceed and show a number of things from the hearing, but I do not think it is necessary to read all of them. I should like, however, to read some of the questions regarding Mr. Hopkins' activity in the 1938 campaign. I quote from the hearings, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. I will remind you of what you said and where you said it.

It would be necessary to do that, and then, when it was done, his memory would become very bad and he would not remember saying it at all, even though he would be told where he said it.

You said it at Hyde Park, after having seen His Excellency the President, that the New Deal would make a clean sweep and "you can take my word for it that Governor Murphy will be elected by 500,000 majority."

That was not the first time Mr. Hopkins has been wrong; but Mr. Hopkins had to quibble about that. Here is what

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not recall the 500,000, but I was awfully sure that Murphy was going to win.

The Charman. It is not a matter of being sure; it is a matter of making a political declaration as the head of an organization that permeated the whole country and that was dispensing public money and getting out projects.

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not consider that I was making a political speech at all. Everybody in the United States was discussing the Including, I may say, Mr. Hopkins.

Some newspaperman asked me how I thought Michigan was coming out, and I probably said I thought it was "in the bag."

"In the bag"! Another instance will be remembered, the newspapermen asked Mr. Hopkins a question as to what he thought about the Iowa election, and he said that if he were in Iowa he would vote for Mr. Wearin; and then when he was questioned about it he said, "I just said that off the record to the newspapermen." So he said "off the record" that Michigan was "in the bag."

I should have consulted Senator Vandenberg, first, because I should have known better than to make such a statement.

The Chairman. If you had consulted your better thoughts as you have expressed them this morning, you would not have made that statement?

Mr. Hopkins. I am not sure about that. I think that is a little different. I was not urging that Murphy be elected. I was simply doing something that all of us do—guessing about politics.

I wonder if he guessed about South Carolina and Georgia, and I may add Maryland, also.

The Chairman. We will let you have your view about it. We fellows who are probably more political than you are—I don't think that predictions are meant in some degree as expressions of wishes. You did not think of that at all?

Even the Chairman expressed a doubt

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I did not. That certainly did not cross my mind.

He did not think that anybody would be interested. The newspapermen just asked him that question, and it did not even cross his mind that the newspapers asked him that for any political reason. Is not that peculiar?

The CHAIRMAN. You did not think that that would rally the boys? Mr. Hopkins, No. I would have been very sure it would not; certainly not.

The Chairman. You did make a statement about the New Deal sweeping the whole western country through which you traveled. What was the basis of that?

Mr. Hopkins. I saw a great many people when I was out West, public officials, and had many, many discussions out there.

Then he tells about that. I read further:

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you stop? Mr. HOPKINS. I stopped in Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a contest on there?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes. I guessed that one badly-wrong.

Yes; I would say he guessed it wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. You were supporting-Mr. Hopkins. Now, wait a minute, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the Senator's name who got beat out Benson?

Mr. Hopkins. The party has not had a Senator there for quite a while.

The CHARMAN. Benson was Senator and then got to be Governor and then got beat this past year?
Mr. Hopkins. He was not a Democrat.

The CHAIRMAN. No; he was a Farmer-Labor. But the Democratic Party has been supporting the Farmer-Labor candidates out

Mr. Hopkins. I don't know about that.

That is the reason-because members of the Democratic Party in Minnesota in some instances are anti-New Deal, but he did not tell the committee about that; those are the ones he did not consult.

The CHAIRMAN. You went to Minnesota where there was a contest on, and you got some political information there. You evidently talked with the politicians.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Democratic State chairman came to see me.

The CHARMAN. And you told him, "We are going to sweep the country

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir.

He did not say he spoke in New Ulm, Minn., where he told the people that they should elect those who gave them the most. Oh, no, no, no; that was not politics at all!

Now, he left Minnesota, and he went on out farther West.

Mr. Hopkins. No; quite the contrary. He was very sure they ere going to get whipped in Minnesota. I then went on to South Dakota.

Is not that peculiar? There was an election for Senator in South Dakota. Check the places where he stopped and see where the senatorial elections were. I just ask you to do it. I would not imply that he stopped for any political reason. He stopped to see how they were getting along on the project out there. Of course, he could do that on the train.

I then went on to South Dakota.

There was an election there.

I went from there to North Dakota.

And there was an election there. Mr. Hopkins is not saying this. I am putting in the words "and there was an election there." Do not get wrong about that. He did not admit it.

I went from there to Montana and stayed only a few minutes

Of course, there was not a contest for Congress there in which he was interested-oh, no!

I went to Washington.

Then the chairman said:

There was a contest on in Montana, was there not? Mr. HOPKINS. I had no part in that of any kind or description. The CHAIRMAN. Did you see any of the candidates? Mr. Hopkins. Oh, yes; they came to see me.

What is the difference between his going to see them and the other way? You can determine that.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us the names. Mr. Hopkins. I recall Jerry O'Connell—

So do a number of us here recall him; but he has also gone to the Great Beyond. He probably will get an appointment of some kind; but, nevertheless, Mr. Hopkins says:

I recall Jerry O'Connell coming down to the train to meet me.

Did Senator WHEELER come down?

I saw Senator MURRAY.

Why? Who controls the patronage there? Check who controls the patronage, who controls the politics in the W. P. A., and then see who consulted Mr. Hopkins on his "nonpolitical" trip throughout the country. You can be the judge. I do not have to tell you.

I saw Frank Walker's brother, who was running for supreme court judge out there, and I think I met the candidate for sheriff.

No, no; he just stopped there, you know. There was not any politics at all in Montana, but for some particular reason he did not take the time to call on Senator Wheeler. You can judge why he did not call on Senator Wheeler; but he did have a discussion with Jerry O'Connell. He did not have a discussion with the Montana Representative who defeated Mr. O'Connell.

The chairman said:

I am surprised that all the candidates did not come to see you.

Mr. Hopkins. I was probably there 10 minutes.

The Chairman. You were a man in authority. You could say to one, "Go," and he goes, and to another one, "Come," and he comes. I am not surprised that they came to see you. But you were not leaking for them? were not looking for them? Mr. HOPKINS. No.

This is what he was doing: He stopped in South Dakota, where there was a contest for Senator. He stopped in North Dakota, where there was a contest for Senator. He stopped in Minnesota, where they were interested. He stopped in Montana and Washington, where they had very important elections; but this is what he was doing: Do you know what he was doing out there?-

The CHAIRMAN. You were just looking after the W. P. A. in those States?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes. I had no interest in the political situation and took no part whatever.

Oh, Mr. Hopkins took no part in those particular elections. Anybody may believe that who wants to, but Rush Holt does not. [Laughter.] RUSH HOLT knows that Mr. Hopkins was clear up to his neck and probably in his mouth, because some of his clerks made political gestures around it, anyway; and he was out in the West playing politics to defeat anybody who would not take orders from the White House.

Why was it, when the distinguished and a most outstanding Member of the Senate from Georgia was a candidate for renomination, that Mr. Hopkins had particular business in the State of Georgia? You can guess why. Why was it, when the Florida election was on, that he had business in Florida? He was just "looking after projects." Oh, yes; I admit he was "looking after projects"—the projects that W. P. A. wanted to complete—namely, political control. That was the project he was looking after.

Why was it that he became very much interested in many of these trips where the "purgees" were to be purged? Oh, he was looking after projects down there. Why was it that he was interested in any place where the New Deal was having a particularly hard battle? Of course you can decide that just as well as I. You know, and, in my opinion, there is not a man here who honestly and sincerely does not believe, that Harry Hopkins was talking politics on those trips to the West and the South, and any point that would help Harry Hopkins stay in power. He was in politics, as I said a moment ago, up to his neck. Where he went the people just put it on over his head and buried it; but I must go ahead with this particular hearing. You know, he was quoted as saying that "We will spend and spend, and tax and tax, and elect and elect." Oh, yes; he denied it. Oh, yes; I admit Mr. Hopkins denied it, but he also denied that there was any politics in relief, too.

Mr. Hopkins is the greatest denier this country has ever known. The first action that he took in the Department of Commerce was to deny a story. He started in all right; there is no question about that. Mr. Hopkins has denied, and denied with gusto, and I may say with particular finesse, every single thing where he was in a hole. He is the great denier; there is no question about that. Does anyone doubt that the statement "We will spend and spend, tax and tax, elect and elect," was made by Mr. Hopkins, after knowing his political philosophy? In other words, if he did not actually say it, the man who attributed it to him was a mind-reader, because that is his political philosophy—spend and spend, and tax and tax. They got that far, but the people said "No" when it came to "elect and elect." Maybe that is what he was worried about. The spending and taxing went through, but the electing fell considerably short.

Here is what Mr. Kent says about it; and I believe Mr. Kent more than I do Mr. Hopkins. You may believe Mr. Hopkins if you want to. That is your privilege, but I believe Mr. Kent; and here is what he said:

I was first told of the remark in New York by a friend of Mr. Hopkins who is also friend of mine. It was repeated with a good deal of emphasis as part of a conversation that occurred between Mr. Hopkins and this mutual friend in August at one of the New York race tracks.

When he was playing around.

This friend is a man of reputation and standing. It is impossible to conceive of him imagining the remark and he had no conceivable reason for misquoting Mr. Hopkins. It seemed to me to fit perfectly into previous expressions of Mr. Hopkins' political philosophy.

Oh, I know that some of you say, "Why did not this man come to confront Mr. Hopkins with the statement?" That is all right; you may say that, but there is no Member of the Senate who does not know why a man would not come. If he is in business, the best way for him to get out of business would have been to come and prove this statement on Mr. Hopkins, because the administration would check his incometax immediately-immediately-and I challenge contradiction of my statement on that subject. They would check his income tax, and then they would check and see if he had violated the Wagner Labor Act, and then they would see if he had any stock under the S. E. C., and then, after they had curried him this way and combed him that way, they would say, "All right; it is all right for you to say that Mr. Hopkins made that statement."

If he was in business, he had enough sense not to come forward, because he knew that the very day he came forward to confront Mr. Hopkins with that statement he would be the victim of all kinds of attack from every administration lackey and smear artist that this country knows. If you do not think the administration would do that, I want some of you to try it. I want some of you to try it. I want you to step out in front and watch them take after you.

I do not think there is a person here who does not know why that man did not answer that question and why he did not come forward. You know and I know, and I think it is a terrible condition, that in the United States of America a man cannot make a public statement about the administration without being investigated in a week's time by some of the New Deal agencies. Yes; I think that is terrible. You know it, and I know it is true. No wonder he did not come forward, but I believe what Mr. Kent said is truthful. I believe it is truthful. Maybe Mr. Hopkins said that after he had lost $2 across the board at the race track. [Laughter.] I do not know, but nevertheless I believe he said it, because he believed in spending, taxing, and electing.

But let me go on to some more of Mr. Hopkins' testimony before the committee. I want to read parts of it:

Senator Johnson of California. You said that you assume responsibility for the mistakes they have made.

Mr. Hopkins. I assume that goes into the question of responsibility. I have never attempted to divest myself from responsibility for the subordinates under me.

Senator Johnson of California. Yes. Do you know whether Mr.
Williams did make mistakes in the investigations in Pennsylvania? Mr. Hopkins. So far as I know, he did not.

In other words, he accepts the statements of his subordinates as being the truth. This repentance is rather belated. Oh, the mourners' bench was there that day! The mourners' bench was there, and Mr. Hopkins went up and became good that particular day before the committee. Oh, he repented for all of the terrible things he had done. Yes; he repented as no man ever repented before. The greatest critic Mr. Hopkins had was Mr. Hopkins himself. But on page 91 they asked him about the Hatch amendment, and he said he thought it should have been adopted. This is what he said: I want to quote him exactly:

As a matter of fact, I thought it was a great mistake that it did not pass the Senate. I was not consulted at all, at the time that happened. It happened all of a sudden, one afternoon. I think the Hatch amendment should have been passed, and that something like it should be passed.

"It happened all of a sudden, one afternoon," and poor Mr. Hopkins knew nothing about it. I wanted to see if "it happened all of a sudden, one afternoon." I did not know whether my memory was good, and I went back to look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I found that the amendment was debated on June 2. On the next day the News, of this city, printed the names of those who voted for it and those who voted against it, and suggested that it was going to be reconsidered. It was not reconsidered until June 3, the following night, and Mr. Hopkins was silent. Oh, yes, Mr. Hopkins was silent. He was as silent as an oyster on the beach in July. Oh, yes; he was silent, because he did not know about the Hatch amendment. It was not on the "must" list. He knew only those bills on the "must" list. In other words, you must vote for it if you get a project. That is the "must" part of it.

I do not think of any better way to speak of that particular recanting than to quote from the News, of Washington. It closes its editorial with this language:

Harry Hopkins now says that he thinks the Senate made a bad mistake when it voted down the Hatch amendment forbidding politics in relief.

"Well do we remember that hot summer night of sweat and oratory when the Senate got down to the final vote on the Hatch amendment, and when the 'purge committee' "-does that word sound familiar to any of the "purgees"?-when the "purge committee" was cracking the whip, and the majority of Senators said, "Me, too," on the proposition that W. P. A. should be left free to play politics. It must have been the heat, because Mr. Hopkins did not know anything about it; but in the cool reflection of January Mr. Hopkins said he was "in favor of the Hatch amendment." Then the editorial closes:

Where, where was Roderick then? One blast upon his bugle horn Were worth a thousand men.

[Laughter.]

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Did Mr. Hopkins again refer to the vote on the Hatch amendment in the hearing before the Commerce Committee?

Mr. HOLT. He referred to it. They asked him the specific question. It is found on page 91 of the hearing.

Mr. GEORGE. Was his attention called to the fact that there were more than two votes taken on the Hatch amendment, or at least more than one vote?

Mr. HOLT. Not to my knowledge. The report of the hearing does not show that they asked him about that further, because he said it happened all of a sudden one afternoon, and he did not know about it.

Mr. GEORGE. Did he rest his answer on that point, upon that bald statement that it happened all of a sudden one afternoon?

Mr. HOLT. I think it is best to read that again. Let me read what he said.

Mr. GEORGE. I am just curious to know whether or not he was willing to deceive the committee.

Mr. HOLT. I wish to read it again, because I think it is important to read it. He said, "Not at all, Senator."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator read the question the chairman asked him?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to read it. This is the record: The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any hand at all in preventing the enactment of that legislation?

Mr. Hopkins. Not at all, Senator. As a matter of fact, I thought it was a great mistake that it did not pass the Senate. I was not consulted at all, at the time that happened. It happened all of a sudden, one afternoon. I think the Hatch amendment should have been passed, and something like it should be passed.

There is no other statement in the record by Mr. Hopkins about that.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to interrupt—

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Every Member of the Senate knows that we voted not only upon the Hatch amendment, but voted at least once to reconsider the vote, and I think twice; and the votes did not come on the same date.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, may I correct the Senator?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I merely desire to correct the Senator. The Hatch amendment came to a vote one day. Mr. HOLT. Let me interject and say it was on June 2.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Subsequently the Hatch amendment came to another vote, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burke] made a motion to reconsider. That was 1 day subsequent. In the interim an amendment of similar import, but much stronger, was offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Austin].

Mr. GEORGE. I very well recall that.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And that was defeated, as I recall, by one vote. There was considerable time intervening between the first action, upon the Hatch amendment, and the action on the Austin amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if I do not unduly interrupt the Senator from West Virginia—

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Georgia at any time.

Mr. GEORGE. To me it is perfectly remarkable that Mr. Hopkins, a man appointed to a Cabinet position, should have rested his position on the Hatch amendment upon that statement, that it came suddenly one day, when for days the matter was thoroughly agitated in the Senate. I felt at the time, and I feel now, that the defeat of the Hatch amendment and the defeat of the Austin amendment were most regrettable pages in the history of the Democratic Party in this country.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I agree heartily with the Senator from Georgia. There is not a Senator here who was a Member of the Senate in June last who does not know that every administration "yes" man—and we have them, those who control the W. P. A. patronage in their States—every single individual who could be controlled, voted against the Hatch amendment and voted against the Austin amendment, and every one knows that the whole thing was decided, and that there was a flurry and an actual panic in some places for fear the motion to reconsider would be agreed to.

Did they get busy! Every one here knows they got busy. One could hardly use the telephone that night. I do not know what they were discussing on the telephone—Senators can decide that for themselves—but I know that whenever the administration is cracking the whip, if a Senator goes into the cloakroom to use the telephone, he will soon see how easy it is for him to get one.

Everyone knows that the whip was used. Everyone knows that the projects which Mr. Hopkins himself could stop or could start were to be determined, in a great number of instances, by the vote that one would support or not support the administration.

Yes, it happened "all of a sudden, one afternoon." Oh, would that not make a good title for a song? "It happened all of a sudden, one afternoon." [Laughter.] It has no rhyme or reason, really, but nevertheless it would be a good song to go along with "Flat Foot Floogie" and some of the rest of that particular type. [Laughter.] The country knew about it, the Senate knew about it, everyone knew about it except Mr. Hopkins, but it came on him "all of a sudden, one afternoon," that the Senate was trying to take politics out of relief.

Mr. President, I hope when Mr. Hopkins becomes Secretary of Commerce—and he is going to become Secretary of Commerce, there is no question about it—he will have an administrative assistant, one of the 10,000 they have around Washington, to tell him what is happening up here on Capitol Hill, so that it will not come on him "all of a sudden" one afternoon. I do hope he will become acquainted with what is going on, and that the Hatch amendment, if it is presented again, will not surprise him, that we will not sneak up on him and say, "Here is an amendment."

Of course, Senators can form their own opinions about that, but my decision is already made. I do not believe Mr. Hopkins. I would not say more. I could, but I must confine myself to that particular statement.

Mr. Hopkins helped put politics in relief. Senators may believe otherwise if they care to, but I know, and others here know, that Mr. Hopkins consulted with the patronage bosses of the various States as to whom they wanted as administrators. Of course, if one were on the "purgee" list, he was not consulted. Oh, no, he would not consult such a Senator at all, if the Senator were a "purgee." Of course, all the "purgees" are back in the Senate, thanks to the good judgment of the people. If one was a member of the "purgee" band, he was not consulted, so I excuse any in that particular group, but if one voted for all the other "court jester" plans that were sent to Congress he had a right to determine who should run the W. P. A. in his State.

You can imagine that if you wanted a certain project approved and there was an important vote on Capitol Hill, if there was a very important vote in which the administration was interested, and you should call down to Mr. Hopkins' office and say, "Mr. Hopkins, I wish you would see that they approve a certain project," do you think it would be approved? You know it would be approved. There is not a man in the Senate who does not know it would be approved if you wanted to get John Jones or Bill Smith on the pay roll and there was a vote here and you had a good record. If you were not one of these terrible conservatives, or "Tories," or whatever they might be called, that was a good time to call-oh, it was an extremely good time to call-because you would be rewarded, not only by the appointment of that man but, depending on the necessity, by the appointment of as many others as might be necessary.

I shall not discuss the reversal of Mr. Hopkins. I think the greatest indictment of Mr. Hopkins' conduct of the W. P. A. was Mr. Hopkins' own testimony. There cannot be a greater indictment against Mr. Hopkins than Mr. Hopkins himself. It is a confession in itself, but the confession was made just the same as a man throwing himself on the mercy of the judge, saying, "Judge, I did it, but I did not mean it. It just happened to be in my pocket when they caught me."

Oh, it is easy to make those statements, but we all know that the politics put in by Mr. Hopkins was put in by the Democratic Senate. W. P. A. was a good political project until the last election. It is surprising now, it is indeed surprising, to see the attitude toward relief in politics, for back in 1936, when I started to speak of that matter, most of the Democratic Senators could be found in their offices, because they thought that if they should walk out and not say anything about the W. P. A., they would hush the talk and stop it. But the American people have found out the tragedy of the W. P. A., not the tragedy of feeding people, but the tragedy of not feeding people and putting in their places political officeholders.

Oh, these crocodile tears which are being shed about the hungry people we will cut off if we cut the appropriation. Those crocodile tears are not for the poor relief worker; most of them are for some fellow sitting behind a desk.

Mr. President, I want to make this statement public; if the money that was appropriated to feed the hungry had been spent to feed the hungry instead of in trying to purge the Senate, we would have enough money in the Treasury to carry us through. If the money that was spent to purge the Senate of men who, in my opinion, reflect the great intelligence of the Senate, had been spent to feed hungry people in this country, we would have enough money in the Treasury.

Yes, crocodile tears! You may shed them as you like, but in my State, where they are cutting thousands off the relief roll, how many bosses do you suppose they put out of office? Before the election they had 549 on the administrative staff. On December 15 some poor fellow, who must not have voted right, got cut off, because, I understand, there are now 548. Yes, one was cut off. One poor, unfortunate fellow—and he probably was in the $780 class; do not be fooled about that—was cut off. I have not checked the class he was in, but I should not be surprised if he was in that class.

Mr. TYDINGS. Perhaps he lost his precinct.

Mr. HOLT. Yes, he probably lost his precinct. I think the Senator's suggestion is right. I expect it will be found that he did not deliver the goods. But we had 549 bosses before the election, and now with the terror of money running short-oh, the money is running awfully short-one boss got the ax, and yet the poor relief fellow for whom the tears are being shed all over the country about him it is being said, "You cannot cut him off because if you do we will have hunger throughout the land." It is indeed a tragedy. And how they love the poor unfortunate relief worker. If they had loved him more when they put bosses on the pay roll their present argument would be more dependable, in my opinion. I say, yes, feed the people, but take out by the seat of their trousers those men who sit behind the desks and do nothing except work at election time. If you do that you will have money for relief. You know and I know that thousands are on the relief rolls of America because they are political workers. I intend to discuss that, and I hope that my distinguished friend, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] will be here when I do, because I want to discuss his State most thoroughly. [Laughter.]

I will not proceed to go into the question of "spend and spend, and tax and tax, and elect and elect," because at last the Senate has asserted itself. Senators know it is a little more popular to tell the truth in 1939 than it was in 1936. Oh, it is now a whole lot more popular to tell the truth. If Senators do not think so, let us try it. It will be a good way to determine it. But I should like to discuss at some time, when the W. P. A. appropriation bill is up for consideration in the Senate, the great projects of the W. P. A., the greatest projects that Mr. Hopkins has.

The first project I wish to discuss then is, "If I were in Iowa I should vote for Mr. Wearin." That is the Iowa political project.

Then I would discuss the Georgia project, when Mr. Hopkins became very busy and ran down to Georgia to look about the projects in Georgia, in an effort to defeat, in my opinion, as I say again, one of the most intellectual men who ever sat in the United States Senate, and we need that type at all times.

Then the third one. He went to the State of Maryland. Of course, we all know about the proposal with respect to bridges in Maryland. I do not know whether they built those bridges over in Maryland or not. They were going to build two bridges.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to my friend from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to tell my good friend about those bridges. They had determined to give them up, but I prevailed, using my great influence with the administration, and they are now under construction. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Maryland, whom we all like, and whom we all admire, probably was a little more welcome after the election than he was before.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator again vield?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator will agree that there is probably no man in the Congress who has as much influence with the administration as the Senator from Maryland now has. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. On personal grounds, I must object to that statement, because I believe I have particular power with the administration.

This political project in Maryland, the building of the bridges, I shall discuss when the appropriation measure comes up.

Then, I wish to discuss the particular project in the State of California, a project in connection with which Mr. Hopkins just had to dash out there. Senators know he simply could not wait. He had to dash out there before the election to find out if they were building a road up some gulley in California. He found out. I shall discuss that a little later on.

I think the best illustration of Mr. Hopkins' power is shown in November 1936. Of course, 1936 was different from 1938. I think Senators all know that—1936 was quite a little different from 1938. Mr. Hopkins was sitting on the top of the world, because he delivered in 1936, and somebody delivered him in 1938—that was the difference. [Laughter.]

In 1936, here is what was said by an administration propagandist. Here is the exact language:

gandist. Here is the exact language:

And Mr. Hopkins is, politically speaking, sitting on top of the world—

I knew he was sitting some place, and I wager he was on the Government pay roll, because he has been on it most of the time.

And Mr. Hopkins is, politically speaking, sitting on top of the world and able to write his own ticket—

That must be straight across the board. [Laughter.]

If the relief workers hold the political balance of power in American elections, and Hopkins is paymaster of relief.

Now, that is just as true a statement as ever was made—
If the relief workers hold the political balance of power in American elections, and Hopkins is paymaster of relief.

That was in 1936. I am quoting from the Des Moines Register of November 1936, the State concerning which Hopkins said, "If I were in Iowa I would vote for Wearin."

I shall not discuss that any more, except to say that there is not a Democrat on this side of the aisle who does not know the part that Mr. Hopkins played in the purges. I do not know what title they gave him. But you know and I know that Mr. Hopkins was a member of the purge committee, with Tommy Corcoran, who loves to play the accordian. I do not know whether Mr. Hopkins sings or not, but they have a nice time together, all at the expense of the people. Nevertheless, this purge committee, not one of whose members was ever elected to office to my knowledge; no, not one of them, but they are all on the "take-in" end, being paid by someone—that purge committee met in the palace, with the court jesters, and all the kingly characters that went along with it, and started out and said "The Senator from Iowa should bite the dust first." He was selected.

Of course, some of the rest of us got it a little earlier, but we were not up for election at that time. Nevertheless, the Senator from Iowa was to bite the dust. He was to be taken out. Then they would go down to South Carolina and defeat that terrible man from South Carolina—they said he was terrible—the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith], but the people of South Carolina felt just as I felt, that they were ably and well represented by a great and distinguished Senator in Senator Smith. So the purge committee took a shot at him.

Then he went down to Warm Springs, Ga., to defeat the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George]. Of course, he wanted to look at a project down there. Do not get me wrong. He just went down to look over a project of some particular nature. I just do not know what it was. I would like for Mr. Hopkins to tell me what projects he was inspecting down there. I know he was not trying to trace the history of the safetypin, or count the doors in the Minneapolis city hall, or count the number of trees in Cleveland, but nevertheless he had a project down there of some nature at just the particular time that the purge was being made, and you know and I know that the Senators were to be driven from office because they would not take orders, and that W. P. A. was the instrument by which they were to be defeated. I say that openly, I say it frankly, that W. P. A. was to be used, with Mr. Hopkins' consent, to try to beat the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Gillette], and all other Senators that would not agree with the administration and vote "yes" when they were told to vote "yes."

Senators remember when they put the heat on the Senate. They put it on quite often here. Senators remember when they put the heat on in the Supreme Court battle. One of the instances of putting the heat on during the Supreme Court battle was a radio speech by Mr. Harry L. Hopkins on the Supreme Court. He told the unfortunate, needy, relief workers that they were going to starve to death unless they backed the court change. There is no doubt about that. He spoke of those "old men" standing in the way of food for the needy. I need not give Senators that information. It is in the hearings. I wish Senators to read Mr. Hopkins' speech on the Supreme Court plan. There Senators will find Mr. Hopkins taking a part in the Supreme Court battle, and putting on the heat, so that the various Senators were supposedly to get in line behind the Supreme Court change.

I know some will say, "Oh, Mr. Hopkins has said time and time again that no man shall be fired if he votes as he pleases"; that "W. P. A. had no part in politics." They would take that ground because he sent out a letter to that effect. He would send a letter, and then the boss would tell the workers, "All right; but you and I know what it means. It is nice to put it out before the public, but you know and I know that it means vote as we tell you." Think of the hypocrisy behind the idea, the political hypocrisy of Mr. Hopkins saying he was taking no part.

Senators will recall very distinctly a speech made by President Roosevelt in Madison Square Garden in 1936, when he criticized those who would put slips in pay envelopes threatening people with loss of their jobs if they did not vote a certain way. I, too, condemned that. I think it was wrong. I think it was a form of economic coercion. But what are we doing? We are exercising a governmental economic coercion on poor, unfortunate men who are hungry, and whose families are hungry, in America, in order that the bright day may come to America, that the happier life, the "more abundant life," may come.

Mr. Hopkins has said, "I am against politics in relief." Some time in the near future, when Mr. Hopkins is sitting down there in the Department of Commerce building—which was called Hoover's folly, and which is now overrun with Government employees—I wish Mr. Hopkins would send to the Senate the list of persons whom he has fired from the W. P. A. for playing politics. It would not take long to read that list. It could be read very, very quickly. We have heard much about such persons being fired. Down in Kentucky they did not fire them. They just slapped them on the wrist after they had done their work, and said, "You have been a good man, but don't do it again."

So it is that the denial of relief in politics has developed. Of course, Mr. Hopkins controlled his own investigation. This is what happened: Some Senator made a complaint about W. P. A., as I did. I have made plenty of such complaints, and I intend to make plenty more.

When a Senator made a complaint about politics in the W. P. A. Mr. Hopkins named an investigator to go to the Senator's State and find out about it. As I once said, he sent out those investigators to investigate themselves. I once said on the floor of the Senate—and I wish to repeat it—that sending a W. P. A. investigator to investigate the W. P. A. was like sending Baby Face Nelson to investigate Dillinger. I said that in 1936, and I say it again. Those investigators never found anything. Where and when has a W. P. A. investigator ever found that there was politics in relief? I know from my own knowledge that in one instance investigators were told not to look into the facts presented but to obtain facts on the man who made the complaint. That is the type of investigation which Mr. Hopkins has conducted. Thousands of dollars have been spent by the W. P. A. to obtain evidence on Members of Congress who would not go along. He has spent much on that activity.

I should like to refer for just a moment to Kentucky. I shall not spend much time on that question; but, according to Mr. Hopkins, there was not any politics in relief in Kentucky. After enumerating every one of the 22 charges made by Tom Stokes, which charges the committee discussed at length, Mr. Hopkins was satisfied. He said:

There you have the record on every specific charge made in this series of articles. Against the unsupported statements of the reporter and the affidavits of disgruntled workers and party workers stands the documented evidence and the sworn testimony disproving every important accusation.

This is Mr. Hopkins talking about Kentucky:

General charges of political favoritism by W. P. A. officials have been based upon these specific cases. They have no more validity than the specific cases upon which they depend for support, and a thorough investigation, as fully set forth above, has swept away their foundation in fact.

A thorough investigation would prove that there was not any politics in the W. P. A. in Kentucky. This is Mr. Hopkins speaking, and I want to be sure to quote him correctly:

I recognize that in a far-flung organization covering the 3,300 counties in America, with 64,000 projects and 2,700,000 workers, there will occur indiscretions by overzealous partisans in the midst of heated campaigns, but that is a vastly different thing from a planned and organized political campaign on the part of the responsible heads of any Government agency.

I wish to digress long enough to ask, What does Mr. Hopkins think of the purge? I shall discuss that subject a little later, and I shall read his speech in Boston on the purge. He was in favor of the purge, and yet here he flipped again. He is the daring young man on the flying trapeze, who flies through the air with the greatest of ease. He flies to one trapeze, and when it becomes too hot he flies to another.

Proceeding with Mr. Hopkins' denial of politics in relief in Kentucky, he said:

I am mindful of the fact that in political campaigns newspapers and others have a tendency to make loose and unsupported charges involving the integrity of the political party they oppose. In the heat of a campaign partisans on occasion give out misleading and inaccurate information. This seems to be inherent in our political system. While I know that this series of articles was based on inaccurate information, I am quite aware of the fact, nevertheless, that other similar misleading and inaccurate statements may be made before the coming elections are over. I do not intend to permit charges against W. P. A. officials and employees, in whose integrity I have confidence, to go unanswered, and I intend to use every instrument at my command to acquaint the American people with the truth or falsity of such charges.

When, oh when, has Mr. Hopkins ever acquainted the people with the truth about politics in relief? Never to my knowledge. I invite any Senator present to show instances in which Mr. Hopkins has taken the ax, except to pat his workers on the back. He might have said, "Do not do it again, boys. At least, do not do it openly. Be careful, and do not get caught the next time." Nevertheless, such things were done.

Back in 1938, when the relief appropriation bill was before us, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend] asked Mr. Hopkins whether there was any politics in relief. The Senator said:

That is especially true in Pennsylvania right now, where a lot of charges are being made.

I shall read Mr. Hopkins' answer about politics in Pennsylvania. When I talk about politics in Pennsylvania I have to hold my nose. However, this is what Mr. Hopkins said:

Well, I think the best answer to that is that it is simply not true.

That was Mr. Hopkins in 1938 saying that there was no politics in relief in Pennsylvania. The charge was "simply not true."

Of course, I realize that Mr. Hopkins is a little obstinate, a little bull-headed. This morning, for the first time, I found that he has a good namesake. According to a story appearing in the New York Post of January 7, 1939, one of the mules in Warm Springs, Ga., is known as "Hop." Nevertheless, I shall not discuss that point.

I wish to go a little further into the question whether or not Mr. Hopkins played politics in relief and the speeches which he made to play politics in relief. The New York Times of October 20, 1936, quotes the language of Mr. Hopkins. Of course, the New York Times also quoted him to the effect that "We will spend and spend, tax and tax, and elect and elect," but he has denied that. The New York Times quoted Mr. Hopkins' speech at a campaign gathering. He merely wanted to have the W. P. A. get along nicely. This is what he said:

It is always thus. The politics is always in some other city than your own. The bad projects are always in some other city, too.

Then he asked the people in New York City in 1936 to vote for the Democratic ticket. No; that did not mean politics at all. He knew that they would do it anyway. He said 90 percent of them would do so.

I should like to talk again about the purge. I should not talk about that, because it brings sad memories to many Members of this body, not that it was successful, because it was not successful. The purge died the death of many such things.

I have before me a photostatic copy of an article from the New York Times of Wednesday, August 31, 1938. The headline is:

Roosevelt purge upheld by Hopkins. He attacks those who ore "our insignia" at polls, then flouted ideals. Role of Tories

Can you not see Mr. Hopkins assailing the Tories?

Foes are active in primaries, W. P. A. chief tells Democratic women

He is not in politics. Do not accuse Mr. Hopkins of being in politics.

Boston, August 30-

Perhaps Mr. Hopkins forgot this. I do not know. He forgets very easily. He has a most remarkable memory.

Boston, August 30 .- Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the BOSTON, August 30.—Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the W. P. A., went to the defense of the governmental agency he directs and still more vehemently to the justification of President Roosevelt's "purge" program in an address before Democratic women assembled tonight from 10 northeastern States. He was the main speaker at the main event of the 2-day conference held under the auspices of the women's division of the Democratic National Committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. What is the date of that article?

Mr. HOLT. August 30.

Mr. TYDINGS. 1938?

Mr. HOLT. 1938.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just before the primary?

Of course. Mr. HOLT. That was before the primary. Mr. Hopkins did not take any part in politics. He was going to slap the fellows who took part in politics.

I do not think there is any humor in what Mr. Hopkins told the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. Let me read what he said. He believed the purge was all right. Because those who were to be purged voted their convictions, and did not take orders from Harry Hopkins. That is why they were to be purged. They would not take orders from him. They would not sell their votes for a few projects.

Let me continue with the reading:

To the enthusiastic applause of men and women of the party, he attacked the opponents of the administration before both a local and radio audience as "witch burners" who have forfeited political integrity to wreak destruction upon the Democrats.

I am sorry the Senator from Maryland is a witch burner, but he must have been, because I am sure Harry Hopkins would tell the truth.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have been called so many things in the past 6 or 8 months that I am inclined to look upon the name "witch burner," coming from that source, as a compliment.

Mr. HOLT. I do not know whether he is a witch burner, but he has burned them up in Maryland, I will say.

Mr. Hopkins said:

As "witch burners" who have forfeited political integrity to wreak destruction upon the Democrats.

"The object of political campaigns is to win elections," he asserted. "It was therefore inevitable that the conflict between the administration and the tories would shift at least partially to a few of the primaries within the Democratic Party.

"This is not just a piece of logic. It is an accomplished fact. The leadership of the opposition is right now putting its full strength in men and money behind candidates in half a dozen States who have been most hostile to the things for which this administration stands.

ASSAILS OWN PARTY MEMBERS

"The leadership of the opposition," Mr. Hopkins went on, "is today urging people who never had any desire to enter a Democratic before, and have no desire to do so now, to register and help defeat the aims of President Roosevelt, not in clear-cut general election where the divergent views of parties are clearly understood by the voters, but stealthily within the councils of our own party."

That is Mr. Hopkins speaking. Let the Senate understand that. In other words, he said that they were doing a terrible thing. How many times, Mr. President, have you and I heard the leader of our party on this side ask the Republicans to come over and vote with the Democrats? We are all the same people except that we are "tweedledee" Democrats and you are "tweedledum" Republicans.

I quote further from Mr. Hopkins:

The effect of this is that there is no general opposition party which stands on its own feet under its own banner and advocates its own principles. The opposition has given up its identity, and even its integrity, for a better chance to win.

In 1936 the course was crystal clear. Everybody knew which way we were going.

I am glad somebody knew, because we have not got there yet. Nevertheless, he said everybody knew where we were going. The country went some place in 1937 and 1938 but they are having a hard time finding where it went. Nevertheless, he said everybody knew which way we were going.

Everybody had had 4 years to make up his mind.

It did not happen all of a sudden one afternoon, but they had 4 years to make up their minds-

Everybody had had 4 years to make up his mind, yet there were men who did not believe in these things and who tricked the voters by wearing our insignia, only to turn against us as soon as they got into office.

They fought wages and hours. They fought relief for the unemployed. They fought social security. They fought agricultural legislation.

legislation.

They fought the very heart of the program which the Demo-cratic Party has pledged to the American people that it will carry

There was another pledge we made, I remember, in 1932, and I also remember the headline in the New York Times of Thursday after the election, "President Roosevelt dashes back to Washington to balance the Budget." That was in 1936. In 1932 there was another pledge made to reduce expenditures 25 percent. However, I need not bring these matters up now, for I wish to discuss them a little later on.

I quote further from Mr. Hopkins:

SAYS PRESIDENT CLEARS CONFUSION

"Even while they hacked away at the foundation of our program with one hand they were patting the President on the back with the other, protesting to the voters that they were really good Democrats," the speaker continued; "that they were really with us in the broader sense, pleading that they were merely exercising independent judgment.
"Under those circumstances, what would you expect the President of the president in the pre "Under those circumstances, what would you expect the President, as the leader and spokesman of his party, to do?

"He is calling the attention of the voters to the records of these men. He is merely saying: These men who came into office with the administration no longer support the administration. If you believe in the administration and want to help it, do not send these men back. If you oppose the administration, these are your men.'

"After that the voters will vote exactly as they want to.

"To say that this is not democracy is an insult to the voters, not

"The course he has taken is really a step in the direction of responsible government. He is clearing away the cobwebs and the confusion and making the issue plain before the voters who must pass upon it.
"I know the President," Mr. Hopkins resumed.

Yes, Mr. Hopkins knows the President well.

Neither abuse nor flattery, neither pressure nor ridicule, will sway him from the path he and his party have made with the Amer-ican people. Adulation has not made him arrogant; defeat has not made him timid.

DEFENDS W. P. A.'S ATTITUDE

What we have to decide is whether to go back or go ahead; whether to wink at social and economic injustice or to correct it; whether we want prosperity and profits for a few or prosperity for us all-

"Prosperity for us all." I may say that he will have prosperity; he will have at least 2 more years of prosperity at $15,000 a year; there is no question about that; that will be the greatest prosperity that Mr. Hopkins ever had or ever will have, for that matter; but there is no question that he used the correct pronoun when he said "prosperity for whether we want weasel words or leadership.

Whether, in short, we want to abdicate the stronghold of democracy or to fight for it. And I think we, too, have "only just begun to fight."

And I think we, too, have only just begun to fight.

Then he says, right after making that speech-and this is very interesting-

In defense of the political purity-

"Political purity"! I want the Senate to appreciate that. That is his exact language:

In defense of the "political purity" of the W. P. A., Mr. Hopkins declared he was only reiterating his former assertions of the real situation in his declaration that no pressure was being brought to bear on its beneficiaries.

"No one is fired from the W. P. A. for the way he votes," he proclaimed. "I have stated our position so many times that you must know it by heart. No one need be a Democrat to get work from the W. P. A. The W. P. A. will not tolerate political activity within its ranks.

Think of that! After making a speech saying, "You know who was putting you in here; you know who was responsible for it; I think our opponents ought to be defeated," he says, "but I do not mean to tell you how to vote; I am just telling you that; do not pay any attention to it, just listen to it and then forget about it." Then he says:

"W. P. A. workers are free men and women, however, who are just as much entitled to their own opinions as any other American citizens, and they do not dwell in a vacuum; they are just as subject to influences and solicitation outside the W. P. A. as anyone

"But within, this organization is as clean as honest, earnest effort can have it, and I have not the slightest apology for it."

Every administration in this country's history, Mr. Hopkins said, has "seen fit to take its case to the people."

In other words, in one breath, he says-

Elect the men who vote with us; they are the great men of the country; they are the men who will feed you, the men who will insure good prices for the agricultural regions; they are the men who will put you on the W. P. A. The other fellows are merely "witch burners"; they want to destroy all these reforms; but do not think I mean anything by way of politics at all. I am just saying these

The Senate can determine whether or not Mr. Hopkins meant that message to go to every relief boss in the State of Massachusetts and every other boss in the New England States where it was made. In one breath, he was talking politics and in the next breath prating of "political purity"-"political purity!" Mr. President, have you ever heard a more ridiculous statement than that when he talks about the W. P. A. he has in mind "political purity?" Of course, Mr. Hopkins' attitude is one of political piety. That is the only difference, and he knows it. Mr. Hopkins helped put politics in the W. P. A., as I said a moment ago, and there is not a Democrat on this side of the aisle who does not know it and know it well. Every Democrat knows that the W. P. A. was behind the organization, that is if the organization was not supporting Democrats to be purged. Of course if they were to be purged they would not be consulted. I understand that is to be the case; that "the powers that be" are going to consult only those who do not put any politics in W. P. A. Let the boss determine it. But let me go ahead with these statements. I wish to recur to a statement to which I referred a moment ago. I want again to read it and put it in the RECORD. It is a speech made at New Ulm, Minn., where Mr. Hopkins went just to look after W. P. A. projects in Minnesota. However, he had time to make a speech at New Ulm on the 13th day of September, and I want to quote from the Associated Press again as to what Mr. Hopkins said.

Harry Hopkins, Federal Works Progress Administration chieftain, toured local W. P. A. projects today after declaring—

it is "perfectly proper in a democracy for relief to become a political issue."  $% \left( 1\right) =\left( 1\right) \left( 1\right) \left$

Think of that! In one breath he says there is no politics in relief; then he goes to Minnesota, and when he did not know there was a reporter present and when he was touring W. P. A. projects-and he has never denied the statement, although I expect him to do so tomorrow; I presume it just happened that his memory does not serve him right in this connection-and at New Ulm, Minn., according to the Associated Press, he said:

It is perfectly proper in a democracy for relief to become a political issue.

Furthermore-

Addressing 100 civic officials and businessmen last night-

He must have been thinking about the office of Secretary of Commerce, for there were businessmen there. So I am sure Mr. Hopkins must have been thinking about that-

Addressing 100 civic officials and businessmen last night, Mr. Hopkins said, "There is nothing wrong in supporting the political group that will give you the most."

I will read that again. This is what the committee raised such a howl about Aubrey Williams saying, but here is Mr. Hopkins directly quoted in Minnesota saying:

There is nothing wrong in supporting the political group that will give you the most.

Oh, no; there is no politics in relief at all: "just support the fellows who give you the most; and we give you the most." In other words, "Put seats in the United States Senate, put seats in the House of Representatives of the United States. put governerships on the auction block, and sell them to the man who will give you the most." No wonder the country is in a bad condition; no wonder business is stagnating. How can we have recovery when we have a system of government that says that offices shall be given to those who give you the most? That is the quotation from the Associated Press.

Then, Mr. Hopkins goes further and says:

Relief is a good issue and should be debated.

That is what I am trying to do here.

The public is demanding more and more service from this Government and should elect candidates who will give it to them.

I will repeat that: "No politics in relief," yet this is Mr. Hopkins speaking. He probably spoke "off the cuff"; but, nevertheless, here is what he said:

Relief is a good issue, and should be debated. The public is de-manding more and more service from its Government, and should elect candidates who will give it to them.

Oh, no-no politics in relief at all; none whatsoever!

Then he says: "Boys, don't pay any attention to that. I was just talking to businessmen. I want to become Secretary of Commerce."

Then Mr. Hopkins went out to South Dakota, North Dakota, and Montana, where he talked to Jerry O'Connell. Some of you were not in the Chamber when I told you about that trip out to Montana, where he did not talk to Senator BURTON WHEELER. I thought he knew Senator WHEELER pretty well. Senator Wheeler has been up here on the hill a long while, but it is a funny thing that Mr. Hopkins went through Montana, and Jerry O'Connell was there. Well, Jerry has been in a number of places that I know of.

Nevertheless, you know, Jerry was being groomed as the boy to take Senator Wheeler's place in the Senate because Senator Wheeler would not take orders. So Mr. Hopkins just stopped, you know. There was a project up Jerry O'Connell's back alley that Jerry wanted to talk about, and it may have been that the sidewalk in front of Jerry's house needed to be paved as a W. P. A. project, so Mr. Hopkins decided to talk to Jerry on the train as he went through Montana; and he talked to Frank Walker's brother, who was a candidate for judge; and this other poor fellow he did not know so well. He was just a candidate for sheriff. Mr. Hopkins did not know who he was, but he knew he got on the train, and Mr. Hopkins talked to him, but he did not say what they talked about; but I would not want any of you to infer that I thought Mr. Hopkins talked about politics. You know he would not do that, because he is against politics in relief. He says so. But, anyway, he went on through Montana. Did I tell you the result of the election out there? You know it. Just look in your Congressional Directory and see what happened to Jerry.

Nevertheless, Mr. Hopkins went on through Montana and went on out to Washington, and took nearly as extensive a trip as that taken recently by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Reynolds], whom I see in the Chamber, though Mr. Hopkins did not go up to Alaska. Nevertheless, after he went up to Washington he went down to California; and, according to the Los Angeles Times of November 3, 1938, he did not go out there for politics. He told the committee he just went out there to see about some projects. He had to go out there just the week before election. This is what the article in the Los Angeles Times says:

W. P. A. chief extols party. Hopkins recommends vote for Democrats in radio address.

No; he did not mean anything about politics. This is dated November 3. Do not get me wrong. Mr. Hopkins does not believe in politics in relief—not at all—but on November 3, 1938, he made this radio address, and I do not know of any election since that time. Maybe some of the rest of you do, but I do not. But the Los Angeles Times of November 3, 1938, said what I am about to read. Of course, Mr. Hopkins did not go out there in connection with politics, but here is what the article says:

Hopkins, who slipped quietly into Los Angeles and attended a Hollywood ice carnival Tuesday with Mrs. John Hay Whitney, defended President Roosevelt and enumerated many of his policies in his radio address. He was a guest at the Beverly Hills Hotel.

But let me read you the article about his political speech out there. I am not saying anything about the candidates in California. I am just showing you what Mr. Hopkins did, and you can determine whether or not there is any politics about it.

Urging the election of Democratic candidates in next Tuesday's voting, Harry L. Hopkins, National Works Progress Administrator, last night delivered a radio address here under the auspices of the California Volunteers, an Olson-for-Governor campaign group.

Here is a quotation from Mr. Hopkins:

"For my part," said Hopkins, "I am convinced that Olson, Patterson, Downey and the Congressmen running on the Democratic ticket will give to the people of this State a more effective representation in assuring the continuance and expansion of our Democratic processes.

Then the next heading of this article is:

Sees opportunity.

There is no question about that. The article says, "Sees opportunity," and here is what it goes on to say, quoting Mr. Hopkins again:

In the last analysis this means that every man, woman and child in America shall have the opportunity for a way of life that is typically American.

You find in this State two sets of men pleading for your vote. On one hand, those who believe government has no power and no place in the economic scheme to influence favorably a way of life, who believe that interest rates to home owners and farmers and prices of farm products should find their own economic level.

That is the sort of thing that he said there. I wonder if that is "no politics in relief" that he is thinking about.

Masked under a cloak of fine phrases, these candidates are men whose record and history can put them down only as men who have not only falled to take one affirmative step in the interest of labor, but, indeed, might well be classified as persons who would destroy the very dignity of labor itself.

Now, get this clear: This is Mr. Hopkins speaking in Los Angeles on the subject No Politics in Relief. I am sure he spoke on that subject, because here he is going ahead:

On the other hand you have candidates on the Democratic ticket whose backgrounds in political life have been schooled and developed in an environment leading to convictions that a better way of living could be found for all people.

I say that is "the more abundant life" that we have heard so much about; but he does not use that term. But going back to Mr. Hopkins again, the next heading in this story is:

CHOICE OUTLINED

I have found these men vitally concerned with the way businessmen shall make adequate profits who believe that the basis of our economic system is found in giving every reasonable assurance and opportunity for persons who employ labor or buy and sell goods to make a decent profit.

sell goods to make a decent profit.

Real personal liberty, not controlled by vigilantes and self-constituted police forces, but by a government determined to represent all the people fairly, is the choice of the voters of this State.

That is the end of Mr. Hopkins' speech on the subject "No politics in relief, but vote for the Democratic ticket on the side"; and so it is. Now, as I said, you may believe, if you want to, that Mr. Hopkins knew nothing about politics in relief. I do not believe it. I know he knows about it.

Then there is another thing: It is funny that this pamphlet just happened to arrive on the third day of November 1938, through the mails. It is postmarked November 3. It was sent to me for some reason; I do not know why, but it was sent. I do not get very much literature any more. I used to. I used to get plenty of literature on "the American way of living" and "the more abundant life," and how to cut 25 percent off the cost of running the Government, and many subjects; but I do not get those things any more. I did get this pamphlet, however. It is from the Works Progress Administration, and it is entitled: "What is the American Way?" by Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the Works Progress Administration. It was just a coincidencea most peculiar coincidence. The pamphlet was printed by W. P. A. funds and paid for by the Government; but Mr. Hopkins wanted to tell the people what the American way is, and he wanted to see that they knew the American way before the election in November, because I got this pamphlet on the third day of November 1938, as did a number of other persons in the United States. So it was important that the American way should be impressed upon all the voters just a week before election.

It was just a coincidence that that happened. Mr. Hopkins does not believe in politics in relief at all. You all know that he does not. He just sent that pamphlet to me a week before the election so that I could think about it some time later next year. [Laughter.] You can believe that, I say again, if you want to, but I know what he did it for, and you know what he did it for.

In my opinion, what I am about to read is one of the greatest indictments against a public official that I know of. It is from the newspaper of November 27. This is important, because it shows what is done to Members of the Senate and House. I am not worried. They do not have any of my conversations down there—not at all—but this is what the article says:

W. P. A. investigation: There is an excellent though secret reason why the chances are strong Harry Hopkins, W. P. A., will not be subjected to congressional investigation. Reason is that W. P. A. has a record of every telephone conversation with every Congressman—

So I am giving you notice now that you had better watch yourselves; you had better be careful, if you have not seen this article. [Laughter.]

Reason is that W. P. A. has a record of every telephone conversation with every Congressman, including every time they wanted W. P. A. to do a little "politicking"—

I thought there was not any politics down there. Why did they keep a record of the conversations? I am sure this column is not against the administration. Do not be fooled about that. It is for the administration. Nevertheless, the article continues—

Every time they wanted W. P. A. to do a little "politicking" or to cut a corner for the benefit of that particular solon.

In other words, if you call them up and ask them about a project, they have you on record down there. You had better not vote wrong, or they might bring it up on you for some reason. Is it not fine that that sort of thing can happen in an American democracy, and there is "no politics in relief"? Yet if you wanted a project, or wanted a little "politicking" done, they kept a record of the conversation. The best way to do now is to tell them to come on up here and talk to you; but the article goes ahead and says:

A W. P. A. stenographer listened in on every conversation, and the record of congressional requests certainly makes juicy reading.

[Laughter ]

I think that record ought to be published. You know, the W. P. A. publish guides, and they publish histories, and they publish everything that can be published. They have the history of the polar bear, I think, in one of their publications, if you go to the Zoo. Nevertheless, with all these publications, I should like to see published the record that they have down there of telephone conversations with Members of the Senate. That would be most interesting. I am sure it would.

Do not think that was done merely with telephone requests. They wanted the Congressman to understand this:

Note: Congressional mail requests which Hopkins carefully has preserved—

Now, listen:

Congressional mail requests which Hopkins carefully has preserved also would be enough to empty a lot of seats in Congress.

[Laughter.]

You may turn in your resignations if you want to; but, nevertheless, that is what has been going on. Why did Mr. Hopkins take a record of your conversation if you were one of those who called him? I did not call him. I have called him plenty of things, but not on the telephone [laughter]; and I am going to call him a good many more things before the session is over, too. Do not be fooled about that.

While we are talking of calling Mr. Hopkins up, why is it that they make a record of your conversations? If you write him a letter, they have a copy of that letter, and you cannot afford to say anything about it because, if you do, Mr. Hopkins will tell on you. Is not that a nice situation in government? I do not see any particular reason why you should not have a conversation. Perhaps Mr. Hopkins had a conversation recorded in which he said, "we can spend and spend, and tax and tax, and elect and elect."

Of course, it might be suggested that one put in an anonymous telephone call. But many people when they are complaining about relief are afraid to say anything about it because they are afraid they will be punished. There is not a Senator on the floor here today who does not have at least one or more letters from someone complaining about relief, someone who was afraid to sign his name because of the fear of punishment. Many American people are afraid to say anything because they know that every time they do say anything they will be punished.

I have brought along a few such letters, and I want to show Senators the feeling of fear the American people have in regard to complaining about W. P. A. Here is one letter:

I am not signing my name to this letter. If you regard this as anything, and for my protection, you may type this and destroy my handwriting. Otherwise I would not care, but I am a W. P. A. worker, and I realize what it would mean to me and my family if I signed my name and one of the gang mentioned herein saw it.

Is not that a nice condition, that citizens of the United States are afraid to sign their names because they are afraid the Federal Government will punish them? What is worse today in Germany than that?

Let us look at a few more of these letters. Here is another one:

I am afraid to sign my name as I have been dealt heavy enough blows.

Here is another afraid to sign his name because he knows "they will boycott me if my name is known."

These things are happening in America. Here is another one. The writer asked me to investigate this. He says:

We can't come out openly as we work on the W. P. A. and don't want to lose our job, as we have been told that there are no other jobs to get.

Here is another one:

This is the first anonymous letter I have ever written, but if my name gets out, out I go.

He knew so well what would happen. He knew, just as you and I know, that if they got his name as complaining, out he would go.

Here is another one:

As I do not relish the idea of being drawn into this political mess, I will not sign this letter.

Here is another one. He speaks about the administrator calling him in, and says:

He called a private meeting of all employees, having a general discussion; all employees were told if they discussed anything that was said to anybody they would be fired at once. Everything was to be strictly confidential among the employees. We were under strict orders to make no discussions whatever about anything that was talked in this private meeting of the office force of the W. P. A. Keep mum or get fired. I am very poor and need to work and will not sign my name.

Such letters as that in America! Here is another one:

The political intrigue is so great here that I do not desire my name be made public under penalty of losing my job with them, and it is a desire to see justice done that I write you.

Now I quote another letter. I could quote hundreds of them.

For fear of losing my job maybe I had better not sign my name. But if you investigate you will find every statement is true.

He has taken ink and run it through his name so that I cannot find who it is. In other words, after he had written these things he was afraid to sign his name—in America!

Here is another one:

I am not signing my name for I know my business would be destroyed by their low-down methods, but I can say this much to you, my reputation has never been challenged.

Here is another one. I have four or five more to read. I want to put these into the Record to show what is happening in America, people afraid to sign their names because they know that they would lose their W. P. A. jobs, their families go hungry, their business be destroyed, if they dared to sign their names. Then think of people coming here and defending it!

The next letter starts:

It is not my custom to write letters without a proper signature to them but in this instance it is worth my existence to do so, therefore am not doing so, as I need to earn a living and have to hold to what I have to do so.

So he did not sign his name.

Here is another one I should like to read to the Senate:

I will not sign my name, as I have a business and might get into trouble, but just put this on file.

Here is one from my State which I desire to read—all this in America, honest citizens, poor, unfortunate men without jobs, working on the W. P. A., afraid to write a letter to a Senator because they know that if the letters get into the hands of the W. P. A. boss, off the roll they go, on some sort of an excuse. This is the letter:

You may think that one who writes letters without signing them is a coward and that is true in this case, for I am afraid that if I would tell all I know and then you should fall in your attempt to sterilize the W. P. A. set-up in our State, I would be immediately dropped from the rolls and my dependents would suffer.

That in a democracy, people afraid to sign their names for fear of punishment.

Here is the last one. I could go ahead all afternoon, but I wanted the Senate to hear these letters. This is the statement in the last one:

I am not giving my name, for I have a relative or so on the W. P. A. pay rolls, and I know that they would be summarily cut off, and they, needing the job, had rather pay the demanded percentage.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HOLT. I vield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I regret that I entered the Chamber a little late, but I heard the Senator mentioning Germany. Is the Senator reading from German records or American records?

Mr. HOLT. I am reading from letters which have been received by me through the United States mail giving me information about W. P. A., in which W. P. A. employees indicated they were afraid to sign their names for fear of punishment—in America, under the guidance of Harry L. Hopkins, whom they are now trying to make the greatest Secretary of Commerce since I do not know when. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, that is happening in America, and Senator after Senator could follow me on the floor and tell of anonymous letters he has received. But you know and I know that the very fear not only of punishment to themselves but of their children's starving through their being put off the rolls is indeed a great influence.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator does not mean to leave the impression that the writers of these anonymous letters to him were afraid that he would turn their names over to Mr. Hopkins if they signed the letters, thereby resulting in their punishment? He does not mean to leave that impression?

Mr. HOLT. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator would not have done that, would he?

Mr. HOLT. I would not have turned over anything to Mr. Hopkins, because I would not trust him with anything. [Laughter.] But I know, and the Senator from Kentucky well knows, that men who did not go along in Kentucky lost their jobs.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I know no such thing.

Mr. HOLT. I intend to discuss the Kentucky situation in full, not this afternoon, but later on.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well; I welcome that sort of discussion. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I think I know more about the Kentucky campaign, in which I participated, than he does.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress adjourned on the 16th of June. I immediately began my active campaign in Kentucky, and from that until the 6th day of August I made an average of over 6 speeches a day, covering 117 out of the 120 counties. In every speech I made, to audiences which assembled to do me honor with their presence, I not only insisted but urged that every W. P. A. employee, every Federal employee, every State employee, and every other public employee, not only had the right to vote as he pleased, but ought to exercise that right. I announced publicly that if anyone would come to me and convince me that any Federal employee or officer or agent had exercised or attempted to exercise coercion or intimidation or force in any way to bring about a vote in my behalf or a contribution in my behalf, I would do my level best to have such person discharged from any such public employment; and from that day until now no one has ever responded to that invitation, which I extended in the utmost sincerity for a period of 6 weeks. So I do not know of any such instances as those referred to by the Senator.

Mr. HOLT. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky a question in my time. Does he mean to tell the Senate that there was no politics in relief in Kentucky?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not mean to tell the Senate that. I have never insisted that there was no politics in Kentucky.

Mr. HOLT. Who put the politics in relief in Kentucky? Mr. BARKLEY. I did not put it in, and I do not think Mr. Harry Hopkins put it in. There was politics, but it was very largely down in the counties where there were contests carried on among certain officers who had the control of the appointment of the certifying agents in those counties, and which was not controlled by the W. P. A. As the Senator knows, the W. P. A. does not employ or compensate or appoint the local certifying agents in any county. Those agents are appointed by the county officers. In my State it happens to be by the county judges, and fiscal courts, and they are responsible to the county judges for their appointments and for their compensation.

There were instances perhaps in some counties where county officers and county agents, certifying agents, went beyond the bounds of propriety, locally, in the matter of politics. I did not instigate that. I not only did not instigate it, I condemned it then, as I condemn it now. And Mr. Hopkins knew nothing about that and had nothing to do with it, and it is not fair either to Mr. Hopkins or to me for the Senator, in his own time or anybody else's time, to assert that I knew that there was politics in relief in Kentucky, or that I had anything to do with it.

Mr. HOLT. Let me ask the Senator another question. I am glad that he has joined Mr. Hopkins in politics in relief.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not joined Mr. Hopkins or anybody else. I am merely stating the facts. I have been in public life for more than 30 years. I have never in any way sought to buy a vote, or authorized anyone to buy a vote, or consented to anyone's buying a vote in my behalf. I have never in any political race I have made undertaken to intimidate or to coerce or to force anyone to vote for me. It has never been my policy to do anything like that, and I do not want anyone in the Senate of the United States to intimate that I have. I do not want the reputation which I have built up during 30 years to be shattered by such an imputation on the part of the Senator or anybody else.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator spoke about politics in relief. Can the Senator give the Senate the name of any individual or individuals who were dismissed for playing politics in relief?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot. I am not personally acquainted with them. I do not know anything about them. I knew nothing about what the Senate committee under the chairmanship of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] reported until 3 months after the primary election was held in Kentucky.

Mr. HOLT. It is most interesting. The Senator ought to read it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have read it, and I read it more dispassionately and with greater disinterestedness than the Senator from West Virginia read it.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Kentucky admits there is politics in relief. He admits that he knows it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know it now, yes; because I have read the report, and I presume no man who has any sense will fail to realize that so long as there is human nature in the human heart and in the human head there will be some politics in anything. I am willing to join the Senator or any other Senator or group of Senators in any effort to take politics not only out of relief, but out of all Federal expenditures, provided it is done in the same way in which other Federal or State problems are dealt with by legislation

Mr. HOLT. I am glad that the Senator will join Mr. Hopkins in behalf of the Hatch amendment. We needed that help awfully bad in the last session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I voted against the Hatch amendment in the last session for the reasons that I then expressed, and if it were again offered under the same circumstances I would vote the same way. I sincerely hope that an amendment or a substantive law can be worked out here to take politics out of relief, but I do not believe we should pick out a particular group of the most unfortunate people in the country and deny to them the privilege that every other American enjoys.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad the Senator from Kentucky is going to join with us in cleaning up relief from all this political

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not joining with the Senator from West Virginia. I disclaim any intention of joining with the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. If the Senator will not join with me, will he join with those who do stand for cleaning up relief from politics?

Mr. BARKLEY. If that question rises again, I will stand where I always stood. If the Senator is with those who are doing so, well and good, but I am not joining him.

Mr. HOLT. I am against politics in relief. I am for civil service. I have voted for measures to take politics out of relief and to uphold the civil service, and I welcome the opportunity to have the Senator join in such measures. I am glad that he is repenting and coming to the mourner's bench and joining us to take politics out of relief.

Mr. BARKLEY. I voted to put the post-office employees under civil service, and I am ready to vote to incorporate in the appropriation measure which has been sent over here by the House a provision under which the President on the first day of February would cover the executive and supervisory officers of the W. P. A. into the civil service.

Mr. HOLT. I do not blame the Senator for being for that, because that blankets in all of his friends in Kentucky. I do not blame him one bit for being in favor of that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am no more anxious to blanket in my friends than is the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. None of my friends are on the pay roll.

Mr. BARKLEY. Some of these days I may take the time and trouble to enlighten the Senator on the situation in Kentucky.

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad if the Senator from Kentucky would enlighten me with regard to the situation in Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator wants to be fair, and is not actuated by prejudice whatsoever.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from West Virginia has been actuated by prejudice many times.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want the Senator to have the full information, but in all likelihood the covering of the W. P. A. employees into the civil service will put as many of my enemies in as my friends. If the Senator had an open mind I could convince him about that. I did not have the support of all W. P. A. workers in Kentucky.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad the Senator has an open heart and wants to blanket his enemies into the civil service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not say anything about an open heart. I spoke of an open mind.

Mr. HOLT. Whether those who are covered in are friends or enemies all amounts to the same thing, so long as they get on the civil-service list.

Mr. President, I am still waiting for somebody to tell me who if anyone got fired for playing politics in Kentucky. The Senator from Kentucky admits it was done. Everyone knows it. The W. P. A. knows it. Everyone knows it except Harry Hopkins. Those who played politics are still working for the W. P. A. in Kentucky, and waiting for the next election. Do not worry about that. They will be at work. It is most amusing and to me it is a most striking coincidence that the rolls of the W. P. A. in Kentucky mounted just before the primaries—

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. HOLT. I gladly yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator tell the Senate and the galleries and the country what the employment rolls in Kentucky were?

Mr. HOLT. I cannot.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then how does the Senator know the rolls mounted?

Mr. HOLT. I have read it, and I shall be glad, if the Senator wants me to do so, to put it into the Record. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have placed in the Record at this particular place the rolls of the W. P. A. before the primary, at the time of the primary, before the election, and at the time of the election, so as to verify my point. I ask that, Mr. President, because I do want to be fair

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the Senator from West Virginia seen those figures?

Mr. HOLT. I have not only seen them but I have studied them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know how many people were on the rolls in Kentucky?

Mr. HOLT. I do not, but I know there is plenty for the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know that the pay rolls in Kentucky from the 1st day of January until the 1st day of September 1938 were not increased in proportion to the increases that were made in practically every other State in the Union? Does the Senator know that?

Mr. HOLT. I know that the-

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know that?

Mr. HOLT. I cannot say that I actually know that to be a fact, but I know that the highest relief roll in America was on the Saturday before the general election, and it was cut immediately afterward. Mr. President, in order to be fair, I again ask the Senate for unanimous permission to put into the Record the rolls in Kentucky before the primary and at the time of the primary. I will get those figures and place them in the Record.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have here a tabulated statement.
Mr. HOLT. I ask the Senator if he objects to putting it in in my time.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I will put it in in my own time.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad that the Senator will do so.
Mr. BARKLEY. I have here a tabulated report of all the employees in all the States, for 1937 and 1938, down to and including the 31st day of December. I think the Senator will not find a single State in the Union in which the rolls were not increased during the summer months, not only of 1938 but of 1937, a year in which there was no election involved, either for the United States Senate or otherwise.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator mean to say that the rolls were increased in 1937?

Mr. BARKLEY. They were.

Mr. HOLT. I dispute that.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will find when he looks at the records that the rolls were increased in 1937, for the very reason that in the construction of highways and other outdoor projects, the open season for work is in the spring, summer, and autumn.

In all the 48 States, beginning with January 1, 1938, and ending with December 31, 1938, there was a gradual increase in the pay roll, depending somewhat upon the season and weather conditions favorable to constructing highways and public buildings of all sorts. The same is true in 1937, when there occurred no congressional election, and there was no senatorial investigation.

The Senator referred specifically to Kentucky. I will say to him that a majority of the States in this list for 1938 show a higher percentage of increase in the pay roll from along in March until along in November, which represents the better season for outdoor construction, than is true of Kentucky. The percentage of increase was not as large in Kentucky as it was in a number of States. I will say to the Senator that in the State of Maryland there was probably a smaller increase in the total number of men and women on the pay rolls of the W. P. A. from January until December than in Kentucky, and several other States, including West Virginia, Massachusetts, and Texas.

Mr. HOLT. There was a reason why there were fewer put

Mr. HOLT. There was a reason why there were fewer put on the rolls in Maryland. They wanted to beat the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BARKLEY. There were fewer W. P. A. workers in proportion there. There have always been fewer W. P. A. workers in the State of Maryland in proportion to the population than in a number of other States of equal population, and I think that is a subject on which Maryland might be congratulated, because I presume it has been based upon a lesser need in Maryland than in other States of similar population in the United States.

Mr. HOLT. I wanted to read the number of W. P. A. workers. I did not know that I had the information on my desk, but I have found it.

W. P. A. workers March 1, 1937, 2,114,800.

November 1937, that had declined to 1,519,740, or nearly 600,000 workers.

Let us turn to 1938, since the Senator asked about it. I intended merely to mention it, but I am glad to put it in the RECORD, because the Senator made the point for me. In March 1938, we find on the W. P. A. pay rolls 2,394,843.

In November 1938, in the same comparable period, 3,216,400; or an increase of between 800,000 and 900,000 in election year 1938 as compared to a decrease of 600,000 in the off year of 1937.

Mr. BARKLEY. The same proportion would apply to West Virginia, and inasmuch as the Senator has not read it I will give it to him. March 1937 and 1938 in the State of West Virginia-

Mr. HOLT. Oh, I have been very much interested in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was no senatorial election in West Virginia in 1937.

Mr. HOLT. No; but they were interested in a bunch of fellows on the other side of the Capitol. Do not worry about that

Mr. BARKLEY. In March 1937 on the rolls of the W. P. A. in West Virginia there were 2,148,000-

Mr. HOLT. Two million? We have only 1,800,000 people. Somebody is getting something.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was the amount of money spent. I was reading the wrong figure.

Mr. HOLT. It would not surprise me if there were 2,000,000 on the rolls.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was reading the amount of money spent, and not the number employed. I think the Senator read from the same list.

In March 1937 there were 47,482 people on the rolls in Kentucky. I think the Senator will recall that he was reading the amount of money, because he referred to two

Mr. HOLT. No; I was talking about the whole United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Senator was referring to Kentucky.

Mr. HOLT. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. In March 1937 there were 47,482 on the rolls in Kentucky.

Mr. HOLT. How many were there in November?

Mr. BARKLEY. In November there were 39,652.

Mr. HOLT. Very well. Let us see about— Mr. BARKLEY. In West Virginia there were 37,381 on the rolls in March 1937, and in December of the same year there were 28,806.

Mr. HOLT. While the Senator has the record before him, let us look at 1938.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that in March 1938 there were 48,285 in Kentucky. In December of that

Mr. HOLT. How many were there in November?

Mr. BARKLEY. In November there were 69,431.

Mr. HOLT. I do not think I need say any more.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not through with the Senator's records. The Senator wants the whole record, does he not? Mr. HOLT. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. In West Virginia, in March 1938, there were 40.557. In November there were 43,117. Taking these figures at random, in the State of North Carolina in March 1938, there were 31,145; and in November there were 55,143.

In the State of Massachusetts, in which my good friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] is interested, in March 1938 there were 97,708 persons on the W. P. A. rolls. In November of that same year there were 129,305 on the rolls.

In the State of Maryland, in March 1938, there were 12,021 persons on the rolls of the W. P. A., and in November there were 15.619.

I will say to the Senator that there have been increases in all these States, some of them a larger percentage than others. The percentage varies from March to November, because, in the first place, Congress appropriated a new sum of $1,450,-000,000 at the end of the last session, which was not available for projects until after July 1, as the Senator knows, and, of course, there was an acceleration of the work all over the country during the summer months, as a result of the expenditure of the extra one and a half billion.

If the Senator will go through the list, which extends through the entire year 1937, and up to the end of 1938, he will find that in all the States, without regard to any election, whether there was an election for United States Senator, for Governor, or for any other office, there was a perfectly natural increase in the number of employees on the W. P. A., due to the appropriation of additional sums by Congress, and due to the fact that in the summer months, covering the period from March until November, a larger amount of outside work can be done, not only by the W. P. A., but by any other agency of Government which has outdoor work.

The Senator knows that a large proportion of the money was spent in the construction of highways, and that highways must be built when the weather is fair.

Much of the work was done in the construction of schoolhouses and other sorts of public buildings. The season for that sort of construction runs largely from March until November. In most parts of the country the weather is excellent until the latter part of November.

So, coming back to Kentucky, which the Senator has specifically mentioned, if the Senator will take the average increase between March and November, or between January 1 and December 31, 1938, and 1937, he will find that the proportion of men put on the pay roll of the W. P. A. in that State fell materially under the proportion put on in a number of other States, in which there was no contest for United States Senator.

Mr. HOLT. As I stated a moment ago, I do not believe I can add anything to what the Senator from Kentucky has said. He has given the figures. However, in order that the matter may be clear in our minds, the Senator spoke about the right season. I admit that 1938 was the proper season. There is no question about that. It was the political season. It was different in 1937. A moment ago I mentioned the fact that in the United States-

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the figures he has given represent the number of relief workers, or the number of so-called administrative employees, or both?

Mr. BARKLEY. They represent both. I have before me the list for the entire country for the 2 years, and it speaks for itself. As I interpret it, it does not show that the number of W. P. A. employees was artificially boosted in any State. The number of employees will depend on the number of projects, and the number of projects will depend very largely on the ability of local communities to sponsor their part of the necessary cost, the average in my State being about 25 percent.

Let me also say to the Senator from West Virginia that on account of the inability of communities to vote bonds at any election except the 8th of November of last year, many desirable projects were denied, because October 1 was set as the dead line before which elections had to be held in order to authorize bonds. Because of the inability of towns, counties, and cities to vote bonds to enable them to expend their part of the necessary amount to construct any public building or enterprise, Kentucky, both in respect to the W. P. A. and the P. W. A., is under the quota of the amount of money to which she would have been entitled if the communities had qualified, or could have qualified by holding elections at which bond issues could have been authorized in order that the local community could pay its part of the expense. The Senator can verify that statement by inquiry at the W. P. A. and P. W. A. offices.

Mr. HOLT. I desire again to offer the record to show, as I said a moment ago, that the relief rolls were boosted in an election year and cut down in an off year. According to the W. P. A. there were 2,114,800 employees in March 1937. In November that number was reduced to 1,519,740, or a reduction of approximately 600,000, while in 1938, an election year, in March there were 2,394,843 employees in the W. P. A. in the United States, and in November there were 3,216,400, or an increase of 822,000, figuring it roughly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator does not contend that in 1937 the W. P. A. spent less money than Congress had authorized it to spend, does he?

Mr. HOLT. I have never known the time when the W. P. A. did not spend more than Congress gave it.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the number of men put on the rolls in any year must depend upon the amount of money available, and that amount is determined by Con-

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator would not contend, would he, that in 1937 the W. P. A. spent less than the amount Congress had allowed it? And I take it he would not contend that in 1938 the W. P. A. spent more than the amount Congress allowed it. So the amount of the appropriation for 1937, as well as the amount of the appropriation for 1938, would determine the number of men and women who could be put on the W. P. A. rolls. Therefore, the question of how many men or women shall be put on the W. P. A. rolls is not a matter of caprice on the part of Mr. Hopkins, or anybody else. It depends on the amount of money Congress appropriates to put men and women on the rolls. I am assuming that in 1937 and in 1938 the W. P. A. put on all the men and woman that the appropriation made by Congress would justify.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator is absolutely correct in saying that the appropriation was lower in 1937 than in 1938.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then, why is it-

Mr. HOLT. Let me finish my answer. However, the Senator from Kentucky can probably tell us why the amount was higher in 1938 than in 1937. The Senator had much to do with it.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I cannot, any more than the Senator can, because the appropriation was made-

Mr. HOLT. I am not on the inside. I do not know.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is on the inside of the Senate, and the Senate had something to say about it. The Senator knows that the appropriation-

Mr. HOLT. I am not in the inner circle of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was nothing secret about the appropriation.

Mr. HOLT. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. The appropriation was openly debated in both the Senate and the House.

Mr. HOLT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from West Virginia participated in those debates, as he always does.

Mr. HOLT. Does not the Senator think that the Senator from West Virginia contributed to the debates?

Mr. BARKLEY. I beg the Senator not to ask me to commit myself on that question. The Senator always contributes to every debate. Just what he contributes may be subject to debate. However, the Senator was present, and he knows that the amount of money is not a secret.

Mr. HOLT. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. The matter was debated openly day by day in both the House and the Senate; and if Congress appropriated less money for 1937 than it did for 1938, Congress is responsible for it. It was not due to any election. If it was due to an election, Congress must accept its responsibility for appropriating more in 1938 than it did in 1937. So, the Senator is not fair with the W. P. A. or with anybody else when he says that the rolls were increased in 1938 because there was an election coming.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad that the Senator has joined the mourner's bench, and taken the responsibility.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am always eligible to join any mourner's bench. However, I do not want the hand of fellowship extended to me by the Reverend Dr. Holt, of West Virginia. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a point of order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it. Mr. LEWIS. I have no desire to interfere with what may be appreciative applause for any speaker on the floor of the Senate. However, in my position I must invite the attention of the Chair to the fact that the occupants of the galleries have been permitted to express their feelings in a form so violent and rude to the Senate, and so contrary to the dignity of the body, and so thoroughly opposed to what should be the courtesy accorded to the Senator speaking, that I now ask the Chair to instruct the galleries that. under the rules of the Senate, forms of expression such as have been indulged are not allowed and are not in harmony with the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order of the Senator from Illinois is well taken. The Chair at this time must admonish the occupants of the galleries to refrain from any audible approval or disapproval of any remarks that are made by any Senator upon the floor. The occupants of the galleries are here as the guests of the Senate, and order in the galleries must be maintained.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate fully that the point of order made by the Senator from Illinois is well taken. It is against the rules of the Senate for our guests in the galleries to give expressions of approval or disapproval. But, without regard to approval or disapproval, it is frequently difficult for the occupants of the galleries to refrain from an expression of amusement, which does not necessarily indicate approval or disapproval when something happens on the floor that amuses even the Members of the Senate who hear it. It is not always possible for the occupants of the galleries to exert more self-restraint than it is for the Members of the Senate themselves.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky may use more interesting figures, and, although he says he will join with me-and I will be glad to have him join me or stay where he is-nevertheless we are in the same position; we both now believe that politics should not be in relief. He did not believe that in 1938 before the primary, but nevertheless-

Mr. BARKLEY. I deny the right of the Senator to interpret my belief or say what I believe.

Mr. HOLT. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator state what he believes.

Mr. BARKLEY. My record here speaks for itself; I am not ashamed of it, and I am not apologizing for it or recanting anything I said when the question was under consideration.

Mr. HOLT. Would the Senator support the Hatch amendment if it were presented to the Senate today?

Mr. BARKLEY. There will probably be a Hatch amendment presented, and I hope-

Mr. HOLT. That does not answer my question.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I hope to be able to support an amendment that will in reality eliminate politics from relief. But if the Senator wants a specific answer from me-

Mr. HOLT. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. As to whether I would support the original Hatch amendment as it was offered in the Senate during the last Congress under the same circumstances, my answer is "No"; I would not do so. My reason for that is that, in my own conscience, I have never been willing to be so unfair, without criticizing the attitude of anyone else, to the most unfortunate class of our people who, in order to support their wives and children, must go on these public rolls, as to deny to them the same right possessed by every other American or any other office holder, including United States Senators. That is my attitude.

Mr. HOLT. I agree with the Senator in that respect.

Mr. BARKLEY. And whenever any bill or amendment is brought before the Senate that will put W. P. A. workers on the same basis as every other worker or every other citizen, I will support it. But I said in that debate, and I repeat now, that I do not think a United States Senator has any more rights under the Constitution of the United States than has the humblest man or woman who works on the W. P. A. rolls in any county of the United States.

Mr. HOLT. I agree with the Senator in that respect; that is absolutely correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to welcome the Senator to the mourners bench.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I will yield in a moment. I have not just joined the bench, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky; I was in the first group that supported the proposal; and I wish to say further to the Senator from Kentucky that I agree with him that the humblest man in the country should have the same rights that we have. Therefore I protest with all the vigor that I have against "firing" W. P. A. workers who will not take orders from political bosses. We are not "fired" according to the whim of a boss; we may be purged but we are not fired. Nevertheless, going back to that, it is my contention that the W. P. A. workers should have the same opportunity as every other citizen, but they do not have it in America.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

Mr. HOLT. Let me finish the thought.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from West

Virginia yield to me?

Mr. HOLT. Let me first finish my statement. They do not have the same opportunity, because the very day, as the Senator from Kentucky very well knows, that they become outspoken in their political beliefs against any party in power, in Kentucky or any other State, then they are "fired" and removed from the public rolls.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is not telling the accurate truth there.

Mr. HOLT. I ask the Senator to read the record as to Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know of counties of my State—I do not care to name them here—where the proportion of Republican workers is much larger than that of Democrats right now, and none of them have been "fired" because they did not vote for me in the November election; and no Democrat who voted against me in the primary election has been "fired." The Senator cannot name one.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad that the Senator admits he is trying to get Republicans over. That method has been used in a number of States to put them on.

Mr. BARKLEY. Now the Senator is not being serious.

Mr. HOLT. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. He is not being fair. I am not trying to get Republicans over, though I welcome them when they decide to become Democrats. In the counties of Kentucky, I will say to the Senator, from the very beginning, due to the local situation to which I referred a while ago, where the local administration, instead of the W. P. A., determines who will go on the rolls, who can obtain work, we all get complaints about politics in the various counties. Other Senators get letters; I get them; all of us get them. The first adminstrator of W. P. A. in Kentucky was a Republican. He held office for 2 years until he was promoted to a regional office. I am not going into the question of the history of the W. P. A. in Kentucky, but many of the most serious complaints I received from many counties-and I think my colleague [Mr. Logan] will bear out my statement-most of the complaints which we have really received from Kentucky were due to the fact that in many of the counties the Republicans who were on the rolls, out of all proportion, outnumbered the Democrats.

Democrats protested, and, of course, I agree whether the protest was heeded or not by W. P. A. officers, that was not fair; there ought not to be an undue proportion of Republicans in any county or an undue proportion of Democrats on the rolls. I believe I can say, with absolute candor, that not a State director of the W. P. A. in any State in the United States has done so consistent a job of trying to keep politics out of relief as has the administrator appointed for the State of Kentucky. There may have been other instances, but I do not approve them—

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. Just a moment. I knew nothing about them. I was not consulted about the cases. The report which has been presented shows that out of 120 counties in the State of Kentucky there were 2 counties in which foremen or area engineers took it upon themselves, without the knowledge of myself or without our consent or without the knowledge of anybody running my campaign or without the knowledge or approval of anybody above them in the W. P. A., to go out on the projects which they were supervising, and take action which might be criticized. I do not know the men themselves; but there was a large amount of confusion, I will say, in Kentucky in regard to registration.

Mr. HOLT. Yes; I will admit that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish the Senator would be serious for a moment. The legislature was considering, I will say to the Senator, early last year the enactment of a law which would give to the chief executive of the State the right to appoint boards in each county to determine who might vote in a primary election. In one county 1,500 men had their right to vote challenged, and they were required to go to the county seat and defend their right to vote. Some of them had lived in their present homes for 30 years; yet they were challenged; and not only that, but heretofore anybody who was unregistered or who had changed his voting place could go within the last 2 weeks before the primary or general election and register if he had become of age or if he had become a voter or if he had moved from one precinct to another. In the very midst of the contest in 1938 in Kentucky the legislature passed a law moving that date up 60 days, so that many of the voters of the State were uninformed and were confused about their right as to when and where and how they could change or correct their registration.

In one of the offices, in one of the regions of the State, in order that information might be given to employees who had made many verbal requests for information about their right to vote and register, there were, as I understand from the committee report—and I never knew of it until the committee made its report—mimeograph forms of instructions sent out to workers on the projects, not with a view to determining how any of them was going to vote but with a view of determining whether they were registered and to give them the information that would enable them to register in order that they might take part either in the Democratic or Republican primary, for under the laws of Kentucky a registered Republican may not vote in a Democratic primary and a registered Democrat may not vote in a Republican primary.

I am informed—and the committee's report so shows—that in these mimeograph forms which were sent out giving this information there were was no effort made to find to what political party an individual belonged or for whom he intended to vote for United States Senator. It may be that that was improper. It may be that these lists of employees in the particular counties are not public property; but the testimony of the man who supervised them says that he regarded them as public property; that anybody who wanted them and would come for them could have gotten them, and that he thought he was doing a public duty as an American citizen in informing these unfortunate people what their rights were in qualifying themselves to vote, if they desired to vote.

When everybody is obtaining all sorts of lists from every possible source, I myself think it is quite technical to say that any drastic punishment should have been meted out to a man who simply tried to help his employees in qualifying to vote according to their own sentiments in an election which was pending at that time.

Mr. HOLT. I should like now to quote the Sheppard committee report on Kentucky. On page 36 it says what I shall now read. I did not investigate Kentucky, but I desire to read what the report said on August 2, 1938:

The evidence thus far presented to it convinces the committee that a deplorable situation exists in Kentucky. It is certain that organized efforts have been, and are being made to control the vote of those on relief work, and that contributions have been sought and obtained from Federal employees in behalf of one of the senatorial candidates. It is equally certain that State officials charged in part with the distribution of Federal funds for oldage assistance and for unemployment compensation have been required to contribute from their salaries and of their services in the interest of another candidate for the United States Senate.

Then the committee—a Democratic committee entirely—make this statement. Here is what the said about Kentucky:

These facts should arouse the conscience of the country. They imperil the right of the people to a free and unpolluted ballot.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator say what the date of that was?

Mr. HOLT. It says on page 36 that it was for release after the committee meeting on August 2, 1938.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was a press release?

Mr. HOLT. Yes; from the committee. It was the committee speaking.

Mr. BARKLEY. Within 4 days of the primary, that press release was issued, as I understand.

Mr. HOLT. I do not know as to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was on the 2d of August.

Mr. HOLT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The investigator from the committee was not sent to Kentucky until about the 20th or 25th of July, and remained there until the 28th day of October, and the committee did not make its official report on Kentucky until within the past 2 weeks.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct. I wish I had time to go into the State of Kentucky. It may be advisable for me to speak tomorrow on Kentucky, because this is what the report, on page 11, says about Kentucky. It speaks about the Stokes charges, and in the second paragraph it says:

The committee's representative, and the force assisting him after investigation, made a report sustaining the staff writer in a majority of the charges and concurring with Mr. Hopkins in four instances

There were 22 charges.

The findings of the committee's investigator in reference to these charges indicated solicitation of W. P. A. employees and officials for contributions to the campaign funds of Candidate ——.

The rules of the Senate do not let me say who it is.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will suppy the name. I suppose the rules do not prohibit me from saying.

Mr. HOLT. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was the candidate referred to there.

Mr. HOLT. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. HOLT. Let me finish this, and then I will be glad to yield. The report says:

The findings of the committee's investigator in reference to these charges indicated solicitation of W. P. A. employees and officials for contributions to the campaign funds of Candidate—

The Senator furnished the name-and a systematic canvassing of W. P. A. employees as to preference in the race for the Democratic senatorial nomination. These activities, so far as solicitations were concerned, were carried on mainly by private parties not connected with W. P. A., but in some instances by W. P. A. officials. Canvassing activities were carried on by W. P. A. officials entirely.

Then the report goes ahead and discusses Kentucky; but I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has referred to some newspaper articles written by Mr. Thomas L. Stokes—

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Who represented the Scripps-Howard newspapers—who was sent into Kentucky early in the spring to investigate the situation in Kentucky with respect to the use of W. P. A. funds and employees in the senatorial contest?

At that time there were about 60,000 employees on the W. P. A. rolls in Kentucky. Mr. Stokes found 22 cases out of 60,000 in which he thought the conduct of the person referred to was reprehensible; and I admit, for the sake of argument, that if what he said about the conduct was true it was reprehensible. The committee investigating the matter found that in 18 of the cases that was the situation; that is, they considered the testimony of the person who made the charge, and considered the denial of the person against whom the charge was made, and then held that 18 out of the 22 charges were sustained.

Of course, these charges were called to the attention of Mr. Hopkins by the committee, and he sent his investigators down there to investigate, and they took affidavits and took what they thought would be credible evidence on the subject; and all of the charges were denied by Mr. Hopkins except two, in which instances he admitted that the charges were sustained.

So that really presents a difference of only 16 cases between the finding of the committee and the charges of Mr. Stokes, who was the newspaperman who went down there and with a fine-tooth comb combed the State of Kentucky for evidence against the W. P. A. and found 22 cases out of 60,000, 18 of which were sustained by the committee out of 60,000 workers.

Now, should Mr. Hopkins be blamed for that sort of thing if he was not responsible for it, if he knew nothing about it, but after it was called to his attention he sent his own investigating force there to look into it?

The Senator says he does not credit the report of that kind of investigators; but I do not know of any other department that does not do the same thing. If you make a charge against a postmaster or a rural mail carrier, the Post Office Department sends its own inspector to investigate the charge. If you make a charge against somebody in the Department of Justice, the Department sends out its own investigating force. The same thing is true of the Treasury Department. The same thing is true of the Federal Trade Commission. All the departments send their own investigating forces to investigate charges made with respect to their employees.

Mr. HOLT. I want to add right there that the investigating forces in those departments are under civil service, while investigators on W. P. A. are under the political coercion of a boss. There is a great difference there. The investigators know, in the case of the other departments, that they can report frankly and not lose their jobs.

Mr. BARKLEY. That means that in the opinion of the Senator the moral fiber of men not under civil service who are appointed to investigate charges is less than that which obtains in the case of those who are under civil service.

Mr. HOLT. No; but the Senator-

Mr. BARKLEY. I stand ready-

Mr. HOLT. I should like to answer in my own time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I stand ready to put those men under civil service; but they were not under civil service because Congress never put them there.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Kentucky knows just as

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Kentucky knows just as well as I know that if the political ax of a man's job is over his head, if he brings in an unfavorable report, that is economic coercion. Congress has passed so many, many times on that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think that even in Kentucky, which he desires to paint in such black terms—Mr. HOLT. No; I am just taking what the Sheppard committee says.

Mr. BARKLEY. Out of 60,000 employees, they find that 18 have gone beyond the bounds of propriety and against the instructions of the head of the W. P. A., without the knowledge of any responsible manager of any candidate for public office in that State. Does the Senator think that because of those 18 cases Mr. Hopkins ought to be denied confirmation, when he never knew anything about them until they were called to his attention officially, and then made an investigation in the regular way to ascertain the correctness and the merits of the charges, and admitted 2 of them and denied 20, while the committee of investigation sustained the charges in 18 cases? Does the Senator seriously think that in those circumstances Mr. Hopkins ought to be denied confirmation on account of those transactions in the State of Kentucky?

Mr. HOLT. I will answer the Senator by saying that the Senator from West Virginia is going to vote against Mr. Hopkins' confirmation. There is no question about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am satisfied that the Senator from West Virginia would have voted against Mr. Hopkins' confirmation if there had never been a Senate committee appointed to investigate W. P. A.

Mr. HOLT. Yes; because I knew him better than they did a long while ago. I want to say, however, since the Senator from Kentucky talks about a man going down to Kentucky and finding only 22 instances, that here is a newspaper reporter from Washington, with no connection with Kentucky, going down there and in a few days finding this condition of affairs. The Sheppard committee only had twenty-odd investigators, and, of course, they could not send many investigators down there; but it is my honest opinion—

Mr. BARKLEY. There were five.

Mr. HOLT. They sent five investigators to cover the 60.000 people and find out whether there was any politics in relief. The Senator from Kentucky knows that the committee was not amply provided with investigators to get down to the bottom of the rotten political situation in Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Kentucky knows nothing of the sort. The Senate committee had $80,000 available. I do not know how much of it they used.

Mr. HOLT. For thirty-odd States.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether they used all of it or whether they had a surplus left. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, they had a surplus of about fifteen or twenty thousand dollars left.

Mr. BARKLEY. So the committee did its work on about $55,000.

Mr. HOLT. And did a good job.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they could have used fifteen or twenty thousand dollars more if they had wanted to use it. So the Senator's statement is not correct that the committee was handicapped for lack of funds.

Mr. HOLT. I did not say that. I said they were handicapped for lack of investigators.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, they used the only investigators they could have employed. I do not know how many they had. I do not know how many States they went into; but if they used $60,000, say, and had $20,000 left, they could have employed at least a third more investigators, if they needed them, than they actually employed with the $60,000.

Mr. HOLT. No; they wanted to stay, and properly so, within their budget.

Mr. BARKLEY. They would have stayed within their budget if they had spent $20,000 more.

Mr. HOLT. No; the Senator knows that when they got down in Kentucky, if they had employed enough investigators, it would have cost $75,000 to investigate Kentucky alone.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the Senator from Kentucky does not know that, and the Senator from West Virginia does not know it.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from West Virginia does know it.
Mr. BARKLEY. No; the Senator does not know it. He does not know that, and there are a good many things the Senator from West Virginia does not know that he asserts here as matters of fact.

Mr. HOLT. There are a number of things the Senator from West Virginia does not know, but he knows there is politics in the W. P. A. in Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am astonished that the Senator from West Virginia should admit that there is anything he does not know.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator will admit many things, but that is one thing he will not admit. He knows there is plenty of politics in Kentucky, and he would also like to know why the peculiar conference with the W. P. A. director was held in Kentucky just before the campaign. Of course, he came up just to pass greetings with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is that the Senator is talking about?

Mr. HOLT. I said the W. P. A. administrator for Kentucky conferred with the Senator from Kentucky before the primary.

Mr. BARKLEY. The W. P. A. administrator in Kentucky has his headquarters at Louisville, where my headquarters were. He was never around my headquarters.

Mr. HOLT. That is very good, to have them in the same city.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. George H. Goodman, the director of the W. P. A. in Kentucky, is a friend of mine, and I saw him frequently, but I never conferred with Mr. Goodman before the primary about W. P. A. workers, or about the use of political funds, or W. P. A. funds or workers in the primary, and I did not confer with him about the primary immediately before the primary election, or otherwise. Is the Senator satisfied?

Mr. HOLT. No; the Senator still says there is politics in Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator talked about a conference I had, and there was no such conference.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad the Senator changed the name of it. [Laughter.] We were discussing the number of people on W. P. A. rolls in the United States bearing directly on the election, and the Senator from Kentucky rose in all his oratory, and oratorical style, and his good nature, which I enjoy, and which I like, and tried to criticise me by saying, "Do you mean to say that the rolls varied with elections," and then, when he started to read the figures, he read them more and more softly as he proceeded. Nevertheless, I want to read the figures again, I want to show what happened.

In the State of Kentucky, in March 1937, according to his own statement, there were 47,482 employees on the W. P. A. This was not an election year. In November of 1937, I think he said, the number had been reduced to 39,652, or a difference of 7,830, as I count quickly, who went off the

W. P. A. roll, in the State of Kentucky alone.

Let us look at the figures for 1938, and see what happened. According to the statement he gave, in March 1938 there were 48,285, and in November the small number of 69,431, or a difference of 21,146 people. In other words, in 1937 in Kentucky the rolls went down by nearly 8,000, in an off year, and in an election year went up by 21,000. There may not be any politics to it, each Senator may determine that for himself; but I think there was.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator read the figures for the same period for the State of Georgia, for the State of Louisiana, and for the State of Texas?

Mr. HOLT. I do not have them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Senator had them.

Mr. HOLT. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have them. Will the Senator read them?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to have them put in, too. Mr. HOLT. In the State of Louisiana in March there were 31,120 on the W. P. A. rolls. In November there were 54,649, as compared with 31,120. There was an increase in Louisiana, but it was an election year.

Mr. BARKLEY. What election was there in Louisiana in which the question was involved?

Mr. HOLT. I do not know; but it was an election year. Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is talking about it being an election year, and he is assuming that the increase was due to some election in Louisiana. What election was it?

Mr. HOLT. I could not say.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then the Senator does not know that it was due to it being an election year?

Mr. HOLT. I have my-

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has his suspicions? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. Oh, yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I insist on the rule requiring Senators to address the Chair be enforced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken, and Senators will comply with the rule.

Mr. HOLT. All I can say is-and the records prove itthat the W. P. A. roll went up in 1938 and went down in 1937. There is no question about that. That is the fact, whether the Congress is responsible, whether the people were responsible, whether Hopkins was responsible; the relief rolls went up in an election year and went down in an off year, except in the State of Maryland, as the Senator has said, where they were quite interested in the rolls not going up. It is most interesting to check the States where the purges were on. I did not know this was of so much interest to the Senator from Kentucky, so tomorrow, when the debate continues, I hope to put in the RECORD figures showing how the rolls went up before the purgee primaries. I think it would be quite interesting to show those bounds upward and down, as Elderman showed them in a cartoon in the Washington Post. He said, "There's gold in them thar hills." So there was "gold in them thar hills" up and down, depending on the elections.

In the State of Massachusetts, the figures just given, I repeat, in March 1938, 97,000 people were on the W. P. A. roll. In November 1938 there were 129,000, or a difference of 32,000 more in the State of Massachusetts; and there was an election there. No one will question that.

I should like to have Senators check-and I hope it will be in my time tomorrow—the business index of the country, which will show many, many times that as business was going up so were the W. P. A. rolls; but the W. P. A. rolls have never gone up in an off year but have always gone up in a direct election year.

You may say there is no politics in it if you care to, but, as Aubrey Williams says, "Vote for the boys that are with you." This is not a direct quotation but the thought. Harry Hopkins said in Minnesota, "You should keep those in power who give you the most," and certain people gave them the most. So we find a constant increase in W. P. A. rolls.

I want to quote Mr. Hopkins actually and directly so that he cannot squirm out of it. This is what he said in Minnesota:

There is nothing wrong in supporting the political group that will give you the most.

And that is what he meant. He meant they should support them.

We find a peculiar thing, that the depression passed on the 5th day of November. Is that not peculiar, that we reached the hump of business recession on the 5th day of November, and now we are sailing down the road, and the relief rolls are being cut daily?

I know what was behind it and you know what was behind it. Those men were put on the rolls for the purpose to help in the election in those years in the States named. I want to give those again and again as time goes on.

May I ask the Senator from Kentucky how long he intends to have the Senate sit today?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had hoped we might vote this afternoon, but if the Senator intends to talk very much longer, I think the Senate would be compelled in self defense to take a rest.

Mr. HOLT. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky-Mr. BARKLEY. I think we will remain in session until at least 5 o'clock, and then we can determine what we will do. I hope the Senator can conclude by that time.

Mr. HOLT. I will say that I cannot conclude by 5 o'clock. I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator tell me how much longer beyond that time he would wish to speak?

Mr. HOLT. At quite some length; but I should be glad to act according to the wishes of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator mean about stopping the speech? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. No; I will not go that far with the Senator from Kentucky, because I would be sitting down now if I were consulting his wishes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator told me when he started that he intended to speak about 2 hours, and he has spoken now about 4 hours.

Mr. HOLT. I expect it seems like that to the Senator, but it was not quite that long.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seemed longer, to be perfectly frank. I held out the hope at the last session of the Senate that if we could dispose of this nomination today we would adjourn over until Monday, but if we cannot do that, I do not desire to hold the Senate so very late, if we have to meet tomorrow. We can conclude the session about 5, if the Senator is not through by that time.

Mr. HOLT. We can go on until 5, or stop now, as the Senator desires.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

Mr. HOLT. Now, concerning Mr. Hopkins and his place in politics, which was discussed at some length, I think it would be quite interesting at this time to have the clerk read and to put into my speech an editorial from the Parkersburg News entitled "Greatest Indictment." I ask unanimous consent that the clerk may read the editorial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

GREATEST INDICTMENT

There follows here an editorial from the Washington Daily News, a Scripps-Howard newspaper. It is reprinted because it deals with a subject, the importance of which can scarcely be exaggerated. a subject, the importance of which can scarcely be exaggerated. It should be understood the Scripps-Howard newspapers originally supporters of President Roosevelt before his first nomination and until recently have given generous approval of the present administration. When it says the Sheppard committee report is "the greatest indictment of mass political prostitution the country has ever seen" the seriousness of this situation must be realized. It should be remembered too that one of the chief beneficiaries, Senator Barkley, has not only been reseated, but has again become the majority leader and that Hopkins and Williams, who were responsible for this situation, have been rewarded by new offices of even greater importance.

The editorial follows:

The editorial follows:
"Now comes the time to complete the record on a certain controversy.

"Last June, Thomas L. Stokes, reporter for The News and other Scripps-Howard newspapers, went into Kentucky to write about the primary campaign of Senator 'Dear Alben' Barkley and Gov. 'Happy' Chandler.

"He found, and reported, that the Chandler State machine was systematically shaking down State employees for contributions and compelling them to support Candidate Chandler. Those findings were never denied.

"Reporter Stokes also found, and reported, that the Barkley and compelling them to support Candidate Chandler. Those findings were never denied.

"Reporter Stokes also found, and reported, that the Barkley Federal machine was shaking down Federal jobholders and resorting to widespread coercive practices to compel W. P. A. relief workers to support Candidate Barkley. He listed 22 specific instances of W. P. A. in politics."

Those findings created a considerable stir. W. P. A. Administrator Harry Hopkins put on a great show of W. P. A. investigating itself, and then with an air of righteous indignation gave out a press release taking up those 22 "alleged" instances one by one and proclaiming that in only 2 of the 22 instances could W. P. A. investigators find evidence to support the accuracy of what Reporter Stokes had reported.

Then Senator Sheppard's campaign expenditures committee took up the trail. Over the months the committee has released preliminary reports of its findings. Now the Sheppard committee has turned in its final report. And here is the score:

Mr. Stokes reported 22 W. P. A. abuses. Mr. Hopkins denied 20. Senate investigators sustained Mr. Hopkins on only four counts.

Considering the time the W. P. A. chiselers had to cover their tracks before the Senate investigators got into Kentucky, we think the final reckoning looks pretty good for Tom Stokes—and pretty sad for Harry Hopkins.

Sad for Harry Hopkins.

Kentucky was only one of the many States where the Sheppard

Kentucky was only one of the many States where the Sheppara committee investigators found W. P. A. up to its ears in politics. Tennessee, Arkansas, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Maryland, New Jersey—wherever they went it was the same sordid story. Politicans on the public pay roll devoting their time and energies not to public service but to political campaigning. Wanton misuse for political ends of Government funds and labor and materials furnished by the Government. Unfortunate citizens, working on W. P. A. projects for a meager livelihood, herded and bossed and intimidated by political ward heelers. W. P. A. ditch diggers fired because they wouldn't promise to vote for certain candidates. Women on W. P. A. sewing projects shaken down for campaign contributions—ad infinitum, ad nauseum. Vote right or starve!

The Sheppard committee report is perhaps the greatest indictment of mass political prostitution the country has ever seen. And we're not forgetting the callous days of Boies Penrose and Mark Hanna when the bosses posted notices on factory doors. Admittedly it may be that what was done in W. P. A. only seems worse because it was done under the cloak of humanitarianism and because all the while the top W. P. A. administrators were so unctuously holier than thou.

Well, a lot of water has flowed under the bridge since the pri-mary and general elections. In a great many States the W. P. A. highbinders found their brute force and threat technique didn't work, once citizens got inside the voting booths—just as the old-time partisan Republican employers found they couldn't scare their workers by posting notices on factory doors.

their workers by posting notices on factory doors.

Tom Stokes is still at his old job, still a working reporter of facts. Harry Hopkins has gone on to a politician's reward—a place in the Cabinet. His right-hand man, former Deputy Administrator Aubrey Williams, has been shunted out of the line of fire, assigned exclusively to running the National Youth Administration. The difficult and important task of restoring the W. P. A. to what it was originally intended to be—an organization to provide jobs for unemployed men and women (not to provide votes for politicians)—has been turned over to an Army officer, Colonel Harrington.

And the Sheppard committee has recommended that Congress.

And the Sheppard committee has recommended that Congress enact a great number of new laws "to make impossible, so far as legislation can do so, further offenses of this character."

That gigantic task of reform lies ahead. All citizens who cherish our democratic form of government should insist that on this issue their lawmakers stand up and be counted.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire me to continue with my speech?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HOLT. I shall now leave the State of Kentucky, and discuss the State of Pennsylvania. Although I shall not be able to conclude my discussion before the Senate recesses, I do wish to discuss Pennsylvania quite at some length. I want to quote from page 23 of the report on senatorial campaign expenditures, as follows:

The committee took up the charges of Senator James J. Davis with respect to the activities of W. P. A. officials and employees in the Pennsylvania election. For the text of the Davis' charges, see part 2 of this report entitled "Summary of Cases by States." The committee heard evidence from its investigators that owners of trucks used on W. P. A. projects were solicited for $100 each in Carbon County, Pa.; that owners of trucks were requested by W. P. A. officials to visit the representative of a certain political leader at his home; that on one occasion 10 or 12 were at the W. P. A. officials to visit the representative of a certain political leader at his home; that on one occasion 10 or 12 were at the home of this political leader at one time, and the committee has been furnished with affidavits that 7 were solicited there; that 4 promised contributions to the campaign and afterward made part or full payments on these contributions.

Here we find Mr. Hopkins' own group soliciting money from truck operators under the W. P. A. Mr. Hopkins is a man who does not believe in politics in relief, a man who does not believe in politics in the W. P. A., and yet the report shows what I have read.

I should like to read the development of the truck situation in Pennsylvania, and read about the banquets which were held. Not only did they knock down, or rake down, or in some way take money from those who owned trucks and worked on W. P. A., for the Democratic campaign fund of Pennsylvania, but they held banquets. Here is a ticket to one which was held on the 11th day of October 1938. It says:

Banquet sponsored by W. P. A. truck owners and operators, Fort Stanwix Hotel, Johnstown, Pa., October 11, 1938, 8 p. m.

Under that:

Tickets, $1.50.

We find here a definite, determined, concerted effort in the State of Pennsylvania not only to club the W. P. A. officials into contributing money, but going to the truck owners and operators they had under contract. Why did they do that? Because the W. P. A. can either use their trucks or not use their trucks. If politically favored they can find their trucks perfectly satisfactory. If they are not politically favored they can find some little mechanical difficulty in the trucks that would keep them from being used. Therefore the truck owners of the State of Pennsylvania, under the threat of coercion, under the threat of losing their trucking, had to donate money to what, in my opinion, is one of the worst political machines this country has ever known. The machine may not actually be the worst in its effectiveness, but there has never been a machine in America which has hit the gutter type of politics as did the Pennsylvania machine which was then menacing W. P. A. workers. I shall discuss at quite some length tomorrow the question of truck owners and truck operators in the State of Pennsylvania

In the committee report we find this statement:

The committee heard from its investigators testimony with respect to the activities of officials and employees of the W. P. A. in Luzerne County, Pa. Investigators reported that 18 relief workers on a W. P. A. project near Wilkes-Barre were ordered transferred from this project, which was near their homes, to a project located come 25 cm. 40 wilks from their homes, to a project located some 35 or 40 miles from their homes.

No coercion? No politics in relief? Because certain poor unfortunate men on relief would not go along with the political machine in Pennsylvania they were transferred to a project 35 or 40 miles from their homes. Oh, no; Mr. Hopkins says there is no politics in relief. Mr. Hopkins says there could not be anything but political purity about the distribution of relief funds. Yet we find that same condition going on in Pennsylvania today, and it will continue to go on until the administration cleans up relief, and cleans up the Works Progress Administration.

Quoting from the Sheppard report again:

The investigators stated that the reason for this transfer action was that these workers were wearing Republican buttons at work and had registered Republican.

Is that not a crime? Here is a W. P. A. worker out digging a ditch, making enough to feed himself and his family, and he wears a Republican button during a campaign. Therefore he was to be transferred 35 or 40 miles from his home. knowing that he could not get to the project, in order that he might know who the political boss of the State of Pennsylvania was, and in order that the political control of Pennsylvania could be continued under the present group.

Oh, yes; we do not find any individuals transferred 30 or 40 miles who wear the buttons of those people in charge of the Pennsylvania political situation. No; we do not find any of that. The report goes on to say:

The State assistant district attorney for Luzerne County took up the complaints of these workers with the W. P. A. authorities, after they had been transferred, and was told by the W. P. A. director for Luzerne County that they had been retransferred to a project near their homes.

Here they were, transferred 35 or 40 miles from their homes, and only after public pressure, after the State district attorney had intervened, do we find that they were transferred back to where they could earn enough for a living for themselves, their wives, and their children. Yet the hypocrisy of some individuals saying there is no politics in relief. The hypocrisy of saying that Harry Hopkins knew nothing about that, whereas he knew that the set-up in Pennsylvania. this machine, not only tolerated but continued these things.

The W. P. A. director for Luzerne County advised the committee's investigators that in his opinion, after his investigation, the complaint was true, and for that reason he had ordered the retransfer of the men to a project near their homes.

Men trying to earn a living on a W. P. A. project were so indiscreet as to wear Republican campaign buttons. They were transferred 35 miles from their homes and would still be working there if at all if they could get to their jobs. There was no way to reach that situation until public opinion brought pressure to bear.

The W. P. A. is not being cleaned up today from within. The W. P. A. is being cleaned up because public opinion forced a clean-up, because the people of the United States were not willing further to tolerate corruption and politics in relief. Many of those who are now joining the parade to clean up relief were not sincere when relief needed cleaning up. They were quiet in 1936. They were quiet in 1937. They were quiet in 1938. However, they have now become vocal in some instances in cleaning up relief in 1939. Why? Because it is more popular to tell the truth in 1939 than it was in 1938.

Corruption in relief will continue as long as it is tolerated by the people. It would be tolerated and promoted by the politicians. We find this patronage mess of the W. P. A. particularly bad in the State of Pennsylvania. However, public opinion forced the W. P. A. itself to clean house.

The report of the committee states that the investigation further disclosed that more were transferred to that particular group.

We could go ahead with many, many charges against the W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania W. P. A. was owned, lock, stock, and barrel by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Guffey], and it was to be used for his political ends. It was his to do with as he desired. Men were to be fed or to be starved at his wish and the wish of those who were his subordinates. That was the condition in Pennsylvania—a condition which, in my opinion, smells to high heaven. That condition was repudiated by the people of the State of Pennsylvania in no uncertain terms.

If there is one thing that helped contribute to the defeat of the Democratic Party in the State of Pennsylvania, it was the rotten condition and corruption of the Works Progress Administration itself.

The condition was known by Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins had the facts with regard to the boss of the Pennsylvania situation. But did he give them out? No. He kept them just as closely as he could, and to this day we have never heard Mr. Hopkins say anything more about the Pennsylvania political situation than that it was "a rough campaign." A rough campaign! Oh, yes; it was rough for the hungry people of Pennsylvania, who had to depend for their food and shelter upon the boss of a political machine who was dispensing the Federal money as he desired to dispense it, and as he desired to control it. It is a shame and a disgrace that the American people did not know of the situation before.

Of course, Mr. Hopkins is being promoted to the Department of Commerce. Why? In order to move him from the line of fire of the W. P. A. investigation. In other words, the purpose is to transfer him to a more secure place, so that if we start going after the W. P. A. it can be said "Well, Mr. Hopkins is not there any more. The Administration has changed." It was considered good political strategy to move him over to the Department of Commerce and try to silence all opposition to him.

However, facts are facts; and sooner or later the American people will know the true facts about the scandalous handling of relief. When the people know the facts, it is my honest and sincere opinion that the trail will lead into the office of Harry Hopkins himself. I think Harry Hopkins definitely, openly, and purposely put politics in the W. P. A. Why? He has political ambitions himself. I shall not discuss his political ambitions tonight. Nevertheless, sooner or later, I shall discuss the true facts with respect to the W. P. A. in the State of Pennsylvania and other States.

Back in 1938, when I brought forward some of these charges in the State of Pennsylvania, they were denied by Mr. Hopkins. They were denied by the political bosses of the Democratic Party. However, the charges were true. They were just as true as the other statements I have been making with respect to the Works Progress Administration. They were true because they were supported by the facts which had been gathered. When the true facts are known, we shall know the whole case.

Mr. President, I shall not continue any longer tonight, but I shall speak tomorrow. I do not care whether or not I speak immediately after the convening of the Senate. However, at this time I shall conclude for the day.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that the remaining nominations on the Executive Calendar be read.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 19, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, with whom time and space are nothing and life in Thee is life indeed, to Thee we pray with humble hearts. For Thy name's sake consider and hear us. Awaken deeply in us the divinity that we may have uninterrupted communion with Thee. Take from us unrighteous thoughts, ignoble desires, and selfish ambitions that we may live each day with our associates in the spirit of brotherhood. Help us to so labor for our fellows that they may have life in its fullness of liberty, pursuit of happiness, in peace and dignity. He who lives right serves wisely, and he whose heart responds to the needs of man is our country's true benefactor. Heavenly Father, always enable us to preserve what is best. Persuade us, blessed Lord, that it lies in a broad charity, in wide tolerance, and in a sincere respect for the opinions of others. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of title 40, sections 175 and 176, United States Code, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hancock] members of the House Office Building Commission to serve with himself.

AMENDING THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, on last Monday I was pleased by the President's recommendations to amend the Social Security Act. However, I wish that he had included in his recommendations a provision for the payment of compensation to permanently and totally disabled workers beginning at the date of their disability.

Under the Social Security Act at the present time a disabled worker cannot receive any compensation until he reaches the age of 65. In other words, if a married man 40 or 50 years of age becomes totally disabled, he or his family does not receive any aid whatsoever under the provisions of the present act until he reaches the age of 65, as I stated before.

I have introduced a bill to amend the Social Security Act which provides that if any working person who comes under the Social Security Act becomes permanently and totally disabled, he will receive compensation beginning on the date of his disability, and that in no case shall any person coming under this amendment receive less than $60 per month.

I hope the committee, when taking under consideration the recommendations of the President, will include my bill so as to provide compensation for permanently and totally disabled workers who at the present time cannot receive any compensation until they are 65 years of age. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point my bill (H. R. 42) to amend the Social Security Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, the bill to which I have referred is as follows:

A bill to amend the Social Security Act so as to provide for the payment of benefits to permanently and totally disabled individuals

Be it enacted, etc., That the title heading of title II of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE II-FEDERAL OLD-AGE BENEFITS AND DISABILITY BENEFITS" SEC. 2. Such title II is amended by adding after section 202 the following new section:

"DISABILITY BENEFITS

"Sec. 202½, (a) Every individual who becomes permanently and totally disabled shall be entitled to receive, with respect to the period beginning on the date he becomes so disabled and ending on the date of his death, a disability benefit (payable as nearly as practicable in equal monthly installments) equal to the old-age benefit he would have been entitled to receive under section 202 if he had attained the age of 65 on the date he became so disabled, but in no such case shall the monthly rate of payment be less than $60.

"(b) Whenever the Board finds that any individual has received wages with respect to regular employment after becoming permanently and totally disabled the payments to such individual under this section shall be reduced for each calendar month in any part of which such regular employment occurred by an amount equal to 1 month's payment. Such reduction shall be made under regulations prescribed by the Board by deductions from one or more payments to such individual provided for by this section.

"(c) Benefits payable pursuant to this section shall be in lieu of

"(c) Benefits payable pursuant to this section shall be in lieu of any old-age benefit that would be payable to the same individual with respect to the same period."

SEC. 3. (a) Section 203 of such title II is amended to read as

"SEC. 203. (a) If any individual dies before attaining the age of 65 and before any benefit becomes payable to such individual under section 202½, there shall be paid to his estate an amount equal to 3½ percent of the total wages determined by the Board to have been paid to him with respect to employment after December 31, 1936.

m(b) If the Board finds that the correct amount of the benefits payable to an individual during his life under sections 202 and 202½ was less than 3½ percent of the total wages by which such benefits were measurable, then there shall be paid to his estate a sum equal to the amount, if any, by which such 3½ percent exceeds the amount (whether more or less than the correct amount) paid to him during his life under sections 202 and 2021. to him during his life under sections 202 and 2021/2.

"(c) If the Board finds that the total amount paid to an individual during his life under sections 202 and 202½ was less than the correct amount of the benefits to which he was entitled under such sections and that the correct amount of the benefits to which such sections and that the correct amount of the benefits to which he was so entitled was 3½ percent or more of the total wages by which such benefits were measurable, then there shall be paid to his estate a sum equal to the amount, if any, by which the correct amount of the benefits payable to him under such sections exceeds the amount which was so paid to him during his life."

(b) Section 206 of such title II is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 206. If the Board finds that the total amount paid to an individual during his life under sections 202 and 202½ was more than the correct amount of the benefits to which he was entitled under such sections, and was 3½ percent or more of the total wages by which the benefits under such sections were measurable, then upon his death there shall be repaid to the United States by his estate the amount, if any, by which such total amount paid to him during his life exceeds whichever of the following is the greater: (1) Such 3½ percent, or (2) the correct amount to which he was entitled under sections 202 and 202½."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I noticed that some of the newspapers in the New England States, especially in the State of Maine, had gone out of their way to attack me on my position on the flood-control proposition.

I do not care to take up the time of the House to answer these statements from the floor, so I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein tables showing the electric-power rates paid by the people of the State of Maine.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I may say we are interested in having these power rates put in the Record, but there is hardly a day goes by that the gentleman from Mississippi does not place in the Record similar figures for one State or another. The gentleman has put the figures in the Record a half dozen times. Why fill up the Record by again inserting these rates?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania while he is on his feet that he is the last man on earth who ought to object.

Mr. RICH. I am trying to save the Record. The gentleman can put in the Record all the tables he wishes to, but he should not place them in the Record time after time after time.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is not trying to save the RECORD. If he were, he would not have let the long speech of the Governor of Pennsylvania go in the RECORD yesterday, and he would not have let the long speech of the Governor of Vermont go in the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. It is the duty of the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle to keep the Record clean. The responsibility is not mine; it is the administration's.

Mr. RANKIN. The material I shall put in the Record will be clean, although it will show a very bad situation for the people of Maine who have to pay electric bills. Light and power rates in Maine are exorbitant; they are simply terrible; they are even worse than they were in Pennsylvania during the Republican administration, if such a thing is possible.

By exposing the Pennsylvania rates in the Congressional Record, we have been able to force reductions of light and power rates in Pennsylvania more than $40,000,000 a year, and it may help the situation in Maine for us to throw some light on it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I pointed out a day or two ago that the real motive behind the fight against the administration's flood-control program in New England was to prevent the installation of penstocks in those dams for the development of hydroelectric power. The Power Trust does not want that done; they would rather see those dams built of solid concrete and the birthright of the people of New England in their water power destroyed for a hundred years than to see those penstocks built and generators installed that would give the people of New England a yardstick for the proper measurement of electric lights and power.

To build these dams without installing these penstocks would be a crime against the people of New England. It would be a crime against the people living there now and the ones that are to follow them for generations to come.

Nowhere in New England would the people suffer more as the result of such a policy than in the State of Maine. Maine has no coal, she has no gas, she has no oil, and her timber supply is rapidly disappearing. She must depend for her electric current upon the waters in her navigable streams and their tributaries, or upon fuel transported over long distances

I am going to insert below the table showing the electric rates paid by the people in every city and town in Maine. In that State there are 152,000 domestic consumers of electricity. They use on an average of a little more than 40 kilowatthours a month, and every single one of them is overcharged more than 100 percent. Maine produces more white potatoes, or Irish potatoes, as we call them, than any other State in the Union. Yet her entire potato crop last year would not have paid the overcharges on the electric-light bills of the domestic consumers in that State. No wonder the Power Trust and all its influences are opposing the development of Quoddy project and the installation of penstocks in these flood-control dams.

In order that everyone who reads this Record may make his own comparisons, I am inserting below a table showing the residential rates for electricity in Ontario, Canada, just across the line from Maine, and in Tacoma, Wash., in the far West, and in the Tennessee Valley in the South.

Since the average consumption in the State of Maine is less than 50 kilowatt-hours a month, I will not run this table above 100 kilowatt-hours, in order to save space in the Record—which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] is so anxious to conserve.

Table of comparative monthly rates—Residential service

	9-1-4
Kilowatt-hours
25	40	100
$0.75 1.13 .75	$1.02 1.52 1.20	$1. 74 2. 12 2. 50
	Kil 25 80. 75	Kilowatt-hour 25 40 $0.75 $1.02

Now compare the above rates with the rates charged in the State of Maine, as shown by the following table, and remember that Maine borders on Ontario for hundreds of miles.

Who can read these high rates imposed upon the helpless consumers in the State of Maine and compare them with the rates paid just across the line in Ontario without being shocked at such a merciless exaction of exorbitant overcharges?

What we are trying to do is to secure justice for the people in that State, as well as in all other States, by bringing light and power rates down to their normal levels. The installation of these penstocks, against which selfish interests so vigorously protest, will be the greatest step yet taken in that direction.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—TAX IMMUNITIES (H. DOC. NO. 113)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my message of April 25, 1938, I urged that the time had come when the Congress should exercise its constitutional power to tax income from whatever source derived. I urged that the time had come when private income should not be exempt either from Federal or State income tax simply because such private income is derived as interest from Federal, State, or municipal obligations, or because it is received as compensation for services rendered to the Federal, State, or municipal Governments.

A fair and effective progressive income tax and a huge perpetual reserve of tax-exempt bonds could not exist side by side. Those who earn their livelihood from Government should bear the same tax burden as those who earn their livelihood in private employment.

The tax immunities heretofore accorded to private income derived from Government securities or Government employment are not inexorable requirements of the Constitution but are the result of judicial decision. I repeat that it is not unreasonable to hope that judicial decision would permit the elimination of these immunities.

Decisions of the Supreme Court rendered since my message, particularly the decision in the Port of New York Authority case, have made an important and constructive contribution to the elimination of these inequitable immunities.

It is obvious, however, that these inequities cannot be satisfactorily corrected by judicial decisions alone. Without legislation to supplement them, many individuals and corporations will be subjected to tax liabilities for income received in past years which they mistakenly but in good faith believed to be tax-exempt. It is evident, for example, that employees of many State agencies as well as the holders of securities of public corporations believed that the income they received from such sources was tax-exempt in view of the opinions of eminent counsel based upon earlier decisions of the Supreme Court. In the interest of equity and justice, therefore, immediate legislation is required to prevent recent judicial decisions from operating in such a retroactive fashion as to impose tax liability on those innocent employees and investors for salaries heretofore earned or on income derived from securities heretofore issued.

In the light of those decisions there are, among the taxpayers of the Nation, inevitable uncertainties respecting their tax liabilities. There is uncertainty whether the salaries which they receive are not taxable under the existing provisions of the revenue acts; there is uncertainty whether the interest which they receive upon the obligations of governmental instrumentalities is similarly not taxable; and there is an uncertainty whether the salaries and interest which they have received for past years will create an unanticipated source of tax liabilities and penalties.

In view of the fact that the Bureau of Internal Revenue will have no choice but to enforce our income-tax law as declared in the latest decisions of the Supreme Court, prompt legislation is necessary to safeguard against the inequities to which I have referred. The need, therefore, is for the prompt enactment of equitable rules, prospective in operation, which the Bureau can apply and taxpayers can observe without that mass of litigation which otherwise is to be anticipated. We are confronted with a situation which can be handled with fairness to all and with reasonable administrative convenience only through the cooperation of the Congress and the courts.

Unless the Congress passes some legislation dealing with this situation prior to March 15, I am informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that he will be obliged to collect back taxes for at least 3 years upon the employees of many State agencies and upon the security holders of many State corporate instrumentalities, who mistakenly but in good faith believed they were tax-exempt. The assessment and collection of these taxes will doubtlessly in many cases produce great hardship.

Accordingly, I recommend legislation to correct the existing inequitable situation, and at the same time to make private income from all Government salaries hereafter earned and from all Government securities hereafter issued subject to the general income-tax laws of the Nation and of the several States. It is difficult for almost all citizens to understand why a constitutional provision permitting taxes on "income from whatever source derived" does not mean "from whatever source derived."

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—TEMPORARY DETAIL OF UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES TO GOVERNMENTS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS AND THE PHILIPPINES (H. DOC. NO. 114)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the accompanying draft of proposed legislation designed to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the temporary detail of United States employees, possessing special qualifications, to Governments of American Republics and the Philippines, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1938, in order to obviate difficulties encountered in administering the fiscal provisions of the act.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1939.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. White of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Record.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2½ minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I may say we are going to begin general debate in just a few moments.

Mr. REED of New York. I shall not press the point if it is not convenient. I can wait until some other time.

Mr. RAYBURN. We should like to get along with the general debate. I may say to the gentleman from New York, he knows I would hate very much to object to any request he might make, but I tried during the last session of Congress to hold down to 1 minute remarks made before the consideration of the legislative program of the day was begun.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I want the time just now is that I have some information which I believe the Members of the House may wish to study with reference to the President's message. I was just going to call the attention of the Members to another message which has some application to what was stated in the message today. However, I shall defer to the wishes of the majority leader.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein an article by Westbrook Pegler appearing on last Friday, entitled "Deep Thinking."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

to be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2868, and pending that motion asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill continue throughout the day, the time to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from New York. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the debate to be confined to the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2868, the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, with Mr. Doxey in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

PROCUREMENT DIVISION, PUBLIC BUILDINGS BRANCH

Bureau of the Census Building, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.: For the acquisition of the necessary land and the construction of a building for the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce under the provisions of the Public Buildings Act approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended, including the extension of steam and water mains, removal or diversion of such sewers and utilities as may be necessary, and for administrative expenses in connection therewith, $3,500,000.

Sec. 2. This act may be cited as the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes

Mr. Chairman, the deficiency bill now pending before the Committee contains six items which the Bureau of the Budget felt were very urgent and, perhaps, should not be held over until we would ordinarily bring in a deficiency bill about the middle of February. I may say that the bill and report are available if Members wish to see them.

On page 2 of the bill there are items for the payment of the usual amounts to the widows of deceased Members.

The next two items in the bill are for the United States Forest Service in consequence of the hurricane and flood which visited New England in September 1938. It will be recalled that this hurricane was of unusual ferocity and with devastating effect it swept over the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, laying waste vast areas of their fine timberlands in addition to the terrific damage that was done by flood waters.

The first item on page 2 of this bill is for $500,000 for the National Forest Service, to augment the amount of about $11,500,000 which they have in the current appropriation bill for such purposes, and this amount of $500,000 is to be used in the White Mountain National Forest area for the purpose of cleaning up fallen timber, eliminating fire hazards, and reestablishing fire-prevention stations and facilities. Bureau of the Budget estimated $700,000 for this item. The committee cut the amount to $500,000, feeling that this amount of money, in addition to such portion of the usual amount of $11,500,000 which the Forest Service has for national forest protection and management, augmented further by the activities of 45 Civilian Conservation Corps camps which are operating in the storm-damaged area, and augmented further by the services of some 15,000 to 17,000 W. P. A. workers who, our New England brethren told us, in this particular instance, have performed very notable and valuable service, would be a sufficient sum to enable the Forest Service to do the fire-prevention work and other necessary tasks on the Government-owned lands, and we have brought in a report accordingly.

The next item of $3,000,000 is practically for the same purposes but is to be used upon the privately owned lands in those States where the hurricane wrought such havoc and damage.

It was represented to our committee that something like 4,000,000,000 feet of merchantable timber was laid upon the ground by the force of this terrible storm. This is as much timber as would normally be cut and marketed in 5 years, which, at one swoop of a magic wand, as it were, was laid upon the ground, and we were told that it constitutes a fire menace and danger of major proportions. The committee could well comprehend that such a situation would be a menace to that part of the country and that it probably was of such national character as to justify the Federal Government in taking cognizance of the necessity to assist in firepreventive measures. The Bureau of the Budget has sent in an estimate of $5,000,000 to be used by the Forest Service on these privately owned lands toward cleaning up the devastated timber areas and restoring fire protection and prevention facilities. The committee went into the matter, we feel, very carefully. Our colleagues from New England on both sides of the aisle were kind enough to come before the committee and give us the benefit of their information and judgment and, of course, were very much interested, naturally, in seeing that appropriate and adequate relief from this condition was afforded to the territories they represented.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would rather finish a chronological statement, and then I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

We found, however, that notwithstanding the fire hazard and the menace of this condition that had existed since September 1938, little or nothing had been done by the States involved toward meeting the cost of relieving the situation. It developed that the State of Massachusetts—and I shall be pleased to be corrected if I am in error—had by legislative enactment made available something like $19,000,000 for repairs in the flood- and hurricane-stricken

But a very small part, an infinitesimally small part, of that sum had been designated to be used in this method of cleaning up the fire hazards caused by this fallen timber.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am told that over a million dollars was appropriated to be used on the State forest reservations, and, as the gentleman knows, we suffered terribly from the flood. Roads were damaged, our bridges were down, and there was a very bad condition of sanitation. That money had to go for that use as a matter of health protection and transportation. Will the gentleman yield further about matching dollar for dollar at this point?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand that under our State constitution Massachusetts cannot match an appropriation dollar for dollar for work in private property and lands, and a great deal of this timber is a part of the farmhouses. The timber was cut in order to build the farmhouse and for the other accessory buildings. So I am not sure that we can avail ourselves of any of the money that must be matched dollar for dollar. I am sending for the ruling by the Attorney General on that point. The Supreme Court ruled on a rather similar occasion that the State could not contribute toward clearing or helping in respect to private lands. It is a very serious proposition for us.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think it is a serious proposition for all of us.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is, because it affects the whole country. If the purchasing power of all New England is greatly diminished by great fires, certainly the entire country will be the loser.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood the gentleman to say that the State contributions have been infinitesimal, and then he referred to what Massachusetts has bonded itself for at the special session of the legislature, and I shall talk about that more a little later, if I am permitted to do so. I have in my hand here a photostatic copy of the law passed at the extra session of the Massachusetts Legislature, and included in that $19,000,000 were the following: Title 201-A, Forestry, $350,000; 281-B, Forest fire service, $123,000; 281-C, Recreations, $90,000; 288-A, Parks, $67,000; Enforcement of laws, $2,678; aggregating considerably over $1,000,000. That was direct for fire protection under this special appropriation of $19,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am glad to have that information.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I would say that the New Hampshire Legislature has not been in session since this disaster, but the Governor has just made a recommendation to the legislature, that has just gone into session, that a substantial sum of money be appropriated to take care of its part of this disaster.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I felt confident that that would be done.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The only obstacle I see now is getting the consent of the Governor of Vermont. Before you can do anything in Vermont, you have to get unanimous consent nowadays.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It does appear, however, that the only financial aid rendered by any State involved in this tragedy is the $1,000,000 of the $19,000,000 appropriated by the State of Massachusetts. So far as the committee knows, no other State involved has made available any funds for this purpose.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I interrupt again at this point to state that, as the gentleman knows, the President sent on a great many people from the forestry and the W. P. A. and various Government agencies, and there was a general feeling that a great deal of money would be given to the States for rehabilitation work. That may be one reason why the other States did not contribute—through a misunderstanding.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Whatever the reason may be, the fact remains that they have not taken cognizance of the fact that what they recommend to the Congress is a serious menace—and I do not underestimate that it is a menace—they have taken no action themselves to ameliorate it. I do not see why the Federal Government should bear the major portion of the cost of cleaning the situation up.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There has never been such a hurricane, such disaster, and such danger to timberlands before.
